A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

Extracts From a Remarkable Lecture Delivered by Dr. R. E. Hammond, Before the National Scientist's Convention.

"We are startled constantly by the sudden death of some man who seemed the picture of health. He thought he was well. He had felt strange pains shooting through his body, but as they did not remain, he forgot them. His head pained him periodically, he was somewhat paler than common and unaccountably tired, but he felt comparatively well and vigorous. And yet, he suddenly died! This is shame to our boasted civilization."

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and why is it? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the mere hint of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful, sudden strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural laws. The solemn and terrible fact is, that men and women drag along, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the cause lay far back of all these things. The truth is that weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is: 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' I have seen numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where the preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been almost remarkable in its results. I can it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

THE FALL OF THE BASTILE.

What an Anarchist Says About the Anniversary of That Event, July 14.

An Anarchist of this city, who shaves his beard so as to leave only a mustache on his face, was interviewed by a Sun reporter in regard to the prediction of Capt. Bonfield, of Chicago, that there will be a widespread Anarchist uprising on the 14th of next July, and that in Paris, where their operations are to begin, the centenary of the fall of the Bastile is then to be celebrated. "It is true," the New York Anarchist said, "that there will be a big time in Paris on July 14 next at the Bastile celebration, and it is also true that they had a big time there on the same date in last July, and likewise on that date of every year since the establishment of the French republic. The 14th of July in France is like the 4th of July in the United States. It is the national annual holiday, when all France, including the French government and army, unites in celebrating the most memorable event in French history. The day is also celebrated in this country, mainly by Frenchmen, and it will be celebrated here next year, as Inspector Bonfield, of Chicago, says. But there is no need of being alarmed about the celebration of next year, any more than there was about that of last year, or of the year before. The celebration is not anarchistic, but republican, and signalizes the downfall of monarchy. As the Americans in France and other countries celebrate the Fourth of July, so the Frenchmen in America and other countries celebrate the 14th of July; and the sympathizers with French liberty who live in France join hands with the people there, just as the foreign sympathizers with American liberty who live here join hands with the natives on Independence day. That is all the ground there is for the apprehensions of Inspector Bonfield, of Chicago, who probably never was in France. There is not the slightest danger in this country, any more than there is in France, of the Anarchists raising any rumpus on the coming French centenary. They are a hundred times stronger in France than they are here, but the French government takes no heed of them. It is too bad that Capt. Bonfield should scare people about the 14th of next July."—New York Sun.

A Lifetime Crowded Into a Moment.

The question of the duration of dreams has recently been discussed in Germany among others by Dr. F. Scholz, who has given some striking examples from his own experience and observation. It is not possible to give a definite answer, and probably enough dreams vary much in point of duration, just as they vary in force and vividness. At one time the figures of a dream, whether they emerge from the horn or the ivory gate, are as real as in life; the sorrow is even more intense, the happiness more realistic. At another time they seem to live only in a pale moonlight, and we watch the scenes rather than participate in them. It is very certain, however, that the majority of dreams are only of momentary duration, though extended occasionally to the length of a minute.

In proof of this Dr. Scholz tells the following story from his experience: "After excessive bodily fatigue and a day of mental strain, of a not disagreeable kind, I betook myself to bed after I had wound my watch and placed it on the night table. Then I lay down beside a burning lamp. Soon I found myself on the high sea on board a well known ship. I was again young and stood on the lookout. I heard the roar of the water and golden clouds floated around me. How long I stood so I did not know, but it seemed a very long time. Then the scene changed. I was in the country and my long dead parents came to greet me; they took me to church, where the loud organ sounded. I was delighted, but at the same time wondered to see my wife and children there. The priest mounted the pulpit and preached, but I could not understand what he said for the sound of the organ, which continued to play. I took my son by the hand, and with him ascended the church tower, but again the scene was changed. Instead of being near my son I stood near an early known but long dead officer—I ought to explain that I was an army surgeon during the maneuvers. I was wondering why the major should look so young, when quite close in my ears a cannon sounded. Terrified, I was hurrying off, when I woke up and noticed that the supposed cannon shot had its cause in the opening of the bedroom door through some one entering. It was as if I had lived through an eternity in my dream, but when I looked at my watch I saw that since I had fallen asleep not more than one minute had elapsed—a much shorter time than it takes to relate the occurrence."

Dr. Scholz has collected many other examples of a similar kind.—London Globe.

The Death Watch Beetle.

As most people know, the death watch is a small beetle which frequents decayed rotton wood and is of lonely and retiring habits. It is one of the smallest of the vagipennia, of a dark brown, with irregular bright brown spots, the helmet turned up and the upper lip hard and shining. It produces the ticking sound by pecking at the wood with a small, hard proboscis, when in the act of securing food.

The writer once chased down a death watch through a pile of old papers in a cigar box and was fortunate enough at last to see it at work. The ticking was quite as loud as that of an old fashioned watch while the insect was not much larger than the head of a black pin.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Mark of Superiority.

The table of precedence is more interesting to the fashionable world of London than the multiplication table. A man values the privilege of going into a dining room before another, because it exhibits him as entitled to priority of consideration. — Youth's Companion.

A WOMAN'S LIFE OF CRIME.

The oldest professional sneak thief in the country has again been arrested. And she is a woman. Sixty-nine years ago she began the criminal career which she still pursues, and yet, strange to say, she bears upon her features but little traces of the life she led. Of the four score years that have passed over her head more than forty have been spent in prison, and yet she has scarcely ever known. Indeed, it almost must have seemed to her that she had no place whatever in the great free world outside. A curious and a sad sight she presented as she sat huddled up in a corner of the pen in the Tombs police court. Her clothes were comparatively neat, a hood was on her head, from beneath which the purest of locks of silver gray showed out. Her face was pallid, and, dressed differently and surrounded by brighter circumstances, she might have passed as an old lady of most respectable ancestry. She had no flaunting airs, exhibited no outward semblance of cowering, gave no furtive glances that indicated the soul of the criminal looking out through the eyes. The place seemed natural for her. Well, perhaps it might, for many and many a time she had been there before. Others who looked upon her might pity her. She did not seem to realize why they should do so. She was merely going back again to the only home she had ever remembered.

Mary Fitzgerald is her name. The war of 1812 took from her her father, and when she was 10 her mother died. She became a waif on the world, drifting hither and thither in search of her food and of a roof to shelter her. Many a time she could find neither, and want, possibly more than any evil inclination, made her a thief. She joined one of those gangs of little criminals who at the time made the wharves and the river fronts their homes as well as their headquarters. The fields and woods that then stood where fashionable up town now exists would have afforded those urchins better quarters, though ones not so safe. Mary was only 11 years of age when she first was brought before the courts, and had to be held up in the arms of the sergeant so that the judge could see her and hear the little story she had to tell. She had no excuse to offer then. Indeed through her whole career she has never had. Stealing has seemed to be as natural to her as living, the only variation in her conduct before the authorities being that she would occasionally claim identity with some other well known criminal. On one occasion some fifteen or sixteen years ago she insisted with the utmost gravity that she was Sarah Alexander, the notorious "French Sally," who had made so many little storekeepers mourn her visits to their establishments. One of the peculiarities of this trial was that the judge who presided had only a short time before sentenced the original Sarah Alexander and informed Mary of the fact. Her persistence in this matter was the only bit of character she had ever exhibited, and she was then deemed worthy of a place in the famous rogues' gallery at police headquarters. She prepared for the event as well as she could, and to this day the picture bears evidence of her anxiety to look as well as possible. A broad smile suffuses her face, and it had not the slightest trace of that almost involuntary if not willful unwillingness to be photographed, that marks the pictures of nearly all the other criminals.

Mary's last stay out of prison was one of the longest she had ever made—five months—and the police were beginning to hope that at least the sunset of her life might be in the honest air of the open world, but they were doomed to disappointment. She was arrested by Detective Sergeant Woolbridge for picking the pockets of Beatrice Mezzano in an auction room on Catharine street. The detective was present and saw the interesting performance. He arrested Mary, and was marching along with her, when Thomas Whalen, a resident of Cherry street, who is alleged to be the woman's accomplice, assaulted the detective. In the melee Mary escaped, but only to fall into the hands of an officer of the Fourth precinct. Both were eventually arrested, and Mary will, in all probability, end her life within prison walls.—New York Press.

Peruvian Whistling Jugs.

The silvadors or musical jugs found among the burial places of Peru are most ingenious specimens of handiwork. A silvio in the William S. Vaux collection at Philadelphia consists of two vases, whose bodies are joined one to the other, with a hole or opening between them. The neck of one of these vases is closed, with the exception of a small opening in which a clay pipe is inserted leading to the body of the whistle. When a liquid is poured into the open necked vase, the air is compressed into the other, and in escaping through the narrow opening is forced into the whistle, the vibrations producing sounds. Many of these sounds represent the notes of birds. One in the Clay collection of Philadelphia, Pa., imitates the robin or some other member of the thrush tribe peculiar to Peru. The closed neck of this double vase is modeled into a representation of a bird's head, which is thrush like in character. Another water vase in the same collection, representing a llama, imitates the disgusting habit which this animal possesses of ejecting its saliva when enraged. The hissing sound which accompanies this action is admirably imitated. A black tube of earthenware ornamented with a grotesque head in low relief, to which short arms are attached pressing a three tubed syrinx to its lips, deserves special mention, as it suggests the evolution of this instrument from a single tube to more complicated forms.—The Clay Worker.

How a Boy Began His Career.

Some five years ago many people who happened to pass a certain newspaper office might have noticed a bright faced lad of about 12 years of age, who kept his eye fixed on the entrance to the counting room. Whenever any one issued from the office, if a grown person, the boy would address him, with an eager glance: "Are you lookin' for a boy, sir?"

He came on duty every morning early, fresh, bright, cheerful, and apparently undismayed by the unbroken current of "noes" that flowed by him. In a week he disappeared. Last week, while the writer was chatting with the manager of one of the largest wholesale establishments in the west, a bright, active young fellow, with cheeks full of color and eyes shining with good nature and eagerness, came up and handed the manager a paper. It was the lad who had stood before the newspaper office in search of a man who wanted a boy.

"I picked him off the sidewalk in front of a newspaper office. He is one of the brightest, quickest and most Corporal Size No Advantage.

"Our diminutive size is not an infirmity. Abstractly considered I am just as large as you are; all dimensions are relative, and especially in intellectual beings is it impossible to fix any absolute standard of size. Physical health is, of course, a grand consideration, but muscular strength or corporal size is a matter of the least possible importance. Your Brooklyn bridge could have been built as well by men three, four or five feet tall as by men of six. Your greatest physical achievements are not the result of muscular power of individuals, but of brain power. Even your absurd and wicked battles, the only place where mere bodily strength is held to be of any consequence, are won, if won at all, by brains rather than by brawn. Oh, no; large bodies are of no benefit to a race. Of course the largest individuals in a community have a certain advantage over their smaller brothers, but an increase in the average physical stature of a race cannot be considered an improvement, rather the reverse. It takes less to clothe, feed and provide shelter for small people than for large ones, and as the size of the earth is limited, it is evident that the smaller the inhabitants, the greater will be the inheritance of each, and, as I have said, a race of giants would accomplish no greater material results than have been achieved by the smallest races of civilized men. When you look at us aright," he concluded, "you will see that we are no smaller than you are."—'The Man in the Moon" in Good Housekeeping.

Generous Gift for Industrial Education.

J. V. Williamson, the millionaire of Philadelphia, is about to found an institution similar in many respects to Girard college. He has determined to begin operations at once, and, though feeble in health, hopes to finish during his lifetime. The cost is estimated at over $5,000,000. It is to be an institution for the education of boys in all departments of mechanical labor. Mr. Williamson has appointed seven trustees to manage the business, whose names are carefully kept from the public for the present.—Scientific American.

My Poor Back!

That "poor back" is held responsible for more than its share of the sufferings of mankind. If your dog bites a man who kicks it, do you blame the dog? On the same principle the kidneys utter their protest against nervousness, impure blood, and resulting constipation. These force them to do extraordinary work in ridding the system of the poisons which are the result of effete matter retained in the blood. Then the sufferer says the back aches; the kidneys are diseased. "Not yet;" but they will be unless the nerves are strengthened, the blood purified, and the constipation removed. These are the causes of kidney troubles, and Paine's Celery Compound removes them quickly. With its tonic, purifying, and laxative effect, it also strengthens the weak kidneys, making it almost infallible in curing all diseases of the nerves and kidneys. If your hopes of cure have not been realized, try Paine's Celery Compound; it gives perfect health to all who complain of "their poor backs." Price $1.00.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS

The celebrated reed organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. The success followed in the manufacture of those instruments, and the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, they have competed with best makers of all countries, and have invariably been placed on the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

ORGANS

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGS," by the use of which they have secured the greatest possible development of tone, together with greatly increased capacity. THANKSGIVING.

Thanksgiving is here, and mothers and fathers, sisters and brothers, children and friends have come from abroad to gather beside the old hearthstone once more. We have come to greet new and young faces among those with whom they have gathered for years. Some come to feel the absence of dear ones who have passed away since the last happy reunion. While we greet and enjoy, let us not be unmindful of those who are not permitted, through various circumstances, to join the happy circle. While we miss and mourn, let us indulge in a retrospect, and all render thanks for those blessings which have made life happier and nobler.

The afternoon and evening trains brought large numbers of former Portsmouth residents to this city on Wednesday, who will partake of the Thanksgiving turkey, and recite numerous incidents of "when I was a boy."

Union Thanksgiving services at the Pearl street church at eleven o'clock this forenoon; sermon by Rev. J. S. Harrington, the pastor; all cordially invited.

If you have not already done so, go to your market man and order a turkey and all the fixings to some poor family. It is not too late.

PERSONAL.

—Henry C. Hewitt and family will pass Thanksgiving in Danvers, Mass.

—Miss J. D. Sturdevant will pass Thanksgiving in Boston.

—Miss Alice Ormesby of Mercer, Pa., is visiting Mrs. Fred Moses on Islington street.

—Mr. Frank W. Hatch, formerly of this city, but of late years of the Sandwich islands, is visiting his old home on Livermore street, accompanied by his wife.

—Hon. Frank Jones and wife, and Mr. Charles A. Sinclair and family, took their winter residence at the Rockingham house on Wednesday.

—Capt. John S. Pray and family, of Middle street, left on Wednesday morning, the 28th inst., for Providence, R. I., to attend the marriage of Mr. Frank W. Pray, son of Capt. Pray, and Miss Snider, a young lady of Providence, in that city that evening.

—Mr. True L. Norris, editor of the Times, went to Concord yesterday afternoon to pass Thanksgiving with his mother in that city.

—Col. Thomas E. O. Marvin and Mr. Harry Marvin went to Boston on the 6 to pass Thanksgiving with Col. Marvin's oldest son, Mr. Winthrop Marvin, editor of the Boston Journal.

Mrs. Davis will accompany him to his western home.

—Among those arriving in this city on Wednesday evening for the Thanksgiving season we noticed Mr. William C. Ham, Mr. Alberto Fernald, Mr. John Lyman, Mr. Frank Gerrish, Capt. Henry Marcy, Mr. Charles Kingsbury, Mr. W. H. Preston and Mr. J. E. Colcord, all from Boston.

MARITIME NOTES.

All the schooners of the Dover Navigation Co.'s fleet had been heard from on Wednesday, the 28th inst., excepting the Jonathan Sawyer and Zimri S. Wallingford; these two cleared at Philadelphia, the former for Dover and the latter for Saco, on the 20th, but owing to unfavorable winds it was supposed they could not have got further than Sandy Hook when the great storm commenced on the night of the 24th.

There is no doubt that the steamer Allentown was lost with all hands on Cohasset rocks during the great gale, although up to the evening of the 28th inst. the only trace of her discoverd was the mass of wreckage which had drifted ashore on North Scituate beach. Capt. Swasey, so well known at this port from his frequent visits here with the steamer, was not in her on her last and fatal trip, having remained ashore on account of illness, and the vessel was in charge of the chief officer, Mr. Paul. She is supposed to have struck on Southeast ledge or Davis' ledge, each of which lies about a mile off Minot's ledge; but this of course is merely conjecture, the wreck not having been discovered, and no communication having been had with the lighthouse on Minot's ledge, up to the afternoon of the 28th.

The schooner Sarah Jane, bound from Newport for Portsmouth, was driven ashore during the great storm near the Pequot house, New London harbor, Conn. She was reported as lying easy, and making very little water.

A dividend of two per cent was being paid to the owners of the brick schooner J. Chester Wood at the Dover national bank in Dover on Nov. 28th.

—Mr. Charles Kendall Wadham and wife, of this city, are visiting at Providence, R. I, in attendance at the marriage of Miss Calder of that city to Mrs. Wadham's brother, Mr. Frank Wendell Pray, formerly of Portsmouth, who will receive the congratulations of many friends at his old home. He is now engaged in the coal business at Fitchburg, Mass.

Thirteen cars, heavily loaded, every seat being occupied and people standing in the aisles, arrived here Wednesday evening, the 28th, on the Pullman train from Boston. A large proportion of the passengers disembarked at this station.

National Bank Examiner Wm. A. Heard made an examination as to the condition of the New Hampshire national bank in this city on Wednesday, Nov. 28th.

Mr. Leonard McIntire, of Beech Ridge, York, brought into this city some very fine "native" turkeys on Wednesday, the 28th inst., and disposed of them all in a short time, at good prices.

People in the city on the 28th inst. from the neighboring towns reported the country roads in a most execrable condition, as the result of the heavy rainfall of the previous three days.

The Portsmouth Shoe factory shut down on Wednesday evening of this week to Monday morning, Dec. 3d.

The Independent Democrats will keep up their organization. They wage a warfare against a spurious, fraudulent, effete and practically defunct democracy.

A large gathering of friends attended the funeral of Mrs. Frank P. Downing at the Pearl street church on Wednesday afternoon, the 28th inst. The floral tributes were profuse and beautiful. Rev. Mr. Harrington paid a touching tribute to the deceased, after which Union Rebekah Degree Lodge, No. 3, I. O. O. F., performed the funeral ceremony of that order.

ELIOT ITEMS.

ELIOT, ME., Nov. 27th.

As a special and particular item of news, it may be recorded that we have had a snow storm and a very heavy gale of wind, followed by a rain storm and still heavier gale of wind, in Eliot. Something of the kind may have been observed in parts of this country outside of our town boundary, but there was enough of it here to have been spread over a large part of the Union. No serious damage is reported.

Mr. John Langley recently killed a hog one year old, which weighed 528 lbs. dressed.

The death of Mr. Stephen Paul of Newington, formerly of this town, took place very suddenly last week. He leaves one brother, Mr. Wm. J. Paul of this place, who is the last survivor of a family of ten children. Stephen Paul was eighty-two years old on the 1st day of this month; Wm. J. Paul was seventy-two years old on the 6th, and is as smart as a cricket.

Henry Leach and wife, and their two sons, have been quite sick, with a variety of complaints, principally mumps.

A. W. Nowell, while driving his store team on Eliot Neck, Tuesday of last week, had his right leg badly bruised through the running away of his horse. The cause of the smash-up was the horse [illegible] wagon, which [illegible] wagon, and pitched Mr. Nowell out, after which he received a kick from the horse on the leg, from the effects of which he has since been confined to the house. He is recoving slowly.

A. B. Cole and Miss M. Abbie Mitchell are teaching the school in district seven. E. H. Adams is teaching in district six.

The republicans of this town met in the town hall on Wednesday evening of last week, to make arrangements for a celebration in honor of the election of Gen. Harrison. It was decided that owing to the weather being too cold for an out-of-doors demonstration, they would wait until the 4th of March, 1889, and then have a supper in the town hall, and after the supper a sociable or some entertainment for a short time; also, in connection with the celebration, a handsome display of fireworks.

Solomon Staples has a small barn, 25 x 35 feet on the ground, just erected in place of the one burned some time since, to accommodate his stock during the winter; in the spring he proposes to put up a larger one, in addition.

Albert W. Libbey of New York is making preparations for building a new house near his very handsome new stable opposite the Congregational church. He has moved the old house to the eastward of the stable, and it will be occupied by the hired help; the new house will be erected on the former site of the old one, but will not only be a much finer structure but very much larger, to accommodate his friends from New York during the summer season.

Melville Dixon moved into his new house, by his shop, on the first of this month; he has a very neat and pretty little home. HARRY.

THANKSGIVING EVE BALL.

Terpsichore reigned at Franklin hall on Thanksgiving eve, on the occasion of the sixteenth annual ball of St. Mary's Benevolent Association. About eighty couples started in the grand march, and dancing was kept up until about three o'clock Thursday morning. Mr. Sylvester Wright officiated as floor manager, assisted by Mr. Joseph Sullivan and the following aids, T. Leary, D. J. Lynch, T. Loughlin, J. McCafferty and C. Hurey. The orders were bound in plush, and were printed by Walden. Landlord Cotton, of "The Langdon," furnished the supper, and music was dispensed by Medcalf's orchestra; and all said it was the most enjoyable ball the association had ever given.

Two Hundred Dollars in Gold.

We are authorized by advice received from I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, to say that they have for three years offered poultry raisers, premiums payable in gold coin, for the best results obtained from using Sheridan's Powder to make hens lay. Their object has been to satisfy themselves beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the claim made by them that "Nothing on earth will make hens lay like Sheridan's Powder," was positively true. The hundreds of testimonials sent them from people who have used the powder, prove the statement; so that it seems folly to again offer premiums; but so many persons, especially women who kept a few hens, have made such good showing in former trials, and been beaten by some one else by a slight fraction in average, that in justice they ought to have another trial.

Johnson & Co. have devised a plan this year, to overcome that trouble in a measure, by offering twice as much cash and six times as many gold coin premiums as last year. The larger premium is $50.00 It is well worth trying for. If you miss that, there are twenty-three more chances for some other premium.

But supposing a competitor did not get any premium, they would still have the satisfaction of getting a lot of eggs to sell at a good round price. The retail price for eggs in Boston and New York last year reached as high as 50 to 60 cents per dozen. It pays to use Sheridan's Powder when eggs sell for even 10 cents. One of the competitors last year wrote as follows: "I am well paid in eggs without a premium. I will cheerfully recommend Sheridan's Condition Powder to poultry raisers generally for egg production, and all diseases of hens. I can now say confidently that it will beat anything I ever tried to make hens lay. I was surprised at the end of the eight weeks trial." He was evidently satisfied, and well he might have been; for during eight weeks he got from 30 hens, 1420 eggs, which at the average of prices above would amount to $65.08.

Any person can compete. Johnson & Co. will send full particulars free to anyone, whether they order powder or not.

For 50 cents in stamps, I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., will send to any P. O. address two 25-cent packs, five packs for $1.00; or, for $1 20, a 2 1-4 pound can of powder sent postpaid; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send for full particulars.

$100 Free for a Guess.

BOSTON, Nov. 29.—All the men, women and children in Portsmouth who want to guess for $100 should buy the Boston Daily Globe of Saturday, December 1st, and find out how to secure that sum.

Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos.

The improved method of fastening the strings of pianos, invented by the Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Company in the year 1882, is unquestionably one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in its tones, as well as more durable, and much less liable to get out of tune.

This. An instrument with unmusical tones cannot be a good musical instrument. Illustrated catalogues, containing descriptions of new and popular styles of organs and pianos, introduced this season, will be sent free to any one addressing the company, Boston, New York or Chicago.

At York on Tuesday of this week the roads were almost impassable, on account of the snow drifts in some places and mud everywhere else. The backwater on the marshes was so high that several stables had to be vacated, and the road between Hotel Bartlett and the Bay View house, at Long beach, was covered; a cut forty feet wide was made in the roadbed, and through this the water rushed six feet deep all day, without reducing the depth on the marshes more than six inches.

A "square meal, three times a day," is your privilege if you judiciously use Laxador, whenever your digestive organs need a toning up.

QUIET AFFAIRS.

Pawnshops Which Do Not Hang Out the Three Significant Balls.

In my rambles around this great metropolis I have been surprised at the many methods of making a living, writes a New York correspondent of The Detroit Tribune. Certainly if one-half the world do not know how the other half live, they just as little know how the other half make their living. There is on Fourteenth street a place which gets its patronage from the very swellest and most exclusive circles of society. The place has no sign, nothing to give it away as a pawnbroker's shop, but such it is, notwithstanding its handsome entrance and liveried door tender, who ushers the visitors or patrons into an elegantly furnished drawing room, decorated with rare bric-a-brac and choice paintings. The woman who keeps it, for the proprietor is a woman, is dressed in the latest style, and receives her customer as if a guest. It is not until after the usual exchange of morning salutations that she asks:

"What can I do for madame this morning?"

The madame displays a set of jewelry, diamonds, perhaps, or bric-a-brac, on which she wishes a loan. Sometimes a note is given at the rate of 15 or 20 per cent. These notes, however, seldom go to protest, for the givers do not care to have these transactions known to their husbands; but, apart from that, they care but little, as it is generally understood that a woman frequently exceeds her allowance and makes it up on the next, while the obliging broker makes a good profit from the necessities of fashionable women.

The "duplicate gift" woman who calls at the handsome "brown front" house just after a fashionable wedding is known to the neighbors, who see her descend from a carriage or barouche only as a caller, but she makes quite a living in buying up the duplicate gifts. Every one knows that the wedding gifts of a season run in grooves, and that most brides, on looking over their possessions, find a large proportion of their gifts duplicated. The bride who wept herself ill on finding that she had seven butter dishes, every one alike, with a cow on the cover, had not the advantage of the bride of today, who calls to her aid the buyer of such duplicates.

One of the popular brides of last season found among her 700 wedding presents 15 silver plated candlesticks, 3 bronze busts of Shakespeare, 4 etchings of Millet's "Angelus," 10 silver hand mirrors, 3 engravings of one picture, 8 fish knives, 23 pickle and olive forks, 16 fans, 14 jewel boxes, 8 bon bon boxes and 7 table crumb knives. What did she do with them? The exchange women came to her aid and took most of the duplicates off her hands. Of course they were disposed of at a sacrifice, and the young bride worried for weeks for fear the transaction would leak out, but what could she do? She could not litter up her rooms with duplicates. I think it would be a good idea, when one is sending out invitations for a fashionable wedding, to add to each what one is desired to present, or else to do away with gifts by saying, "Gifts not desired." I am sure either method would save any amount of annoyance to both giver and receiver.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

West Virginia; Gen. Goff Confident of His Election.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—"Webb" telegraphs the Journal the following interview with Gen. Goff of West Virginia, regarding the result of the election in that state. Gen. Goff said: "It stands just this way. I have been elected governor of West Virginia by a majority of 184 on the face of the returns. A recount is going on in two counties, or I may say, in one county, Kanawha. That recount will probrbly be completed tomorrow. I do not see how they are going to change the result already announced unless the ballots have been tampered with since they left the hands of the inspectors of election." "Who is it that is recounting the vote of Kanawha county?" "The County Court." "How many members are there of the court?" "Three; they are all republicans, and I have no fears they will not give me a fair count. The trouble is not there. What I fear is that the ballots have been changed." "Do you think the inspectors were honest in counting the ballots when the votes were cast?" "Yes; the inspectors are made up of members of both parties. The ballots are first taken out of the boxes by the inspectors and counted. It was in this count that I have a majority of 184. After the ballots are counted by the inspectors they are sealed up in envelopes and sent to the clerk of the county court." "Where do you think there could be any tampering with the ballots of Kanawha county?" "Somewhere, if at all, between the inspectors and the county court. I believe I have been fairly elected governor, and I shall insist on my rights to the last moment and the last extremity. If I thought I had been defeated by a single vote I would not have the office. If I believe I have been elected by one vote I will have it at all hazards. I was asked to be the standard-bearer of my state, and I went from one end of it to the other. We had to overcome adverse majorities of over 5000, and we have done so, and I do not propose now to be beaten out of the legitimate fruits of our victory."

An Important Inter-State Commerce Decision.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 30.—The Inter-state Commerce Commission today rendered a decision in the case of the New Orleans Cotton exchange against the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas railway Co., and others, that to be reasonable, the rate from Meridian to New Orleans should not exceed $1.50 per bale on compressed cotton.

Released and Indemnified.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The schooner William Jones of Boston, which was captured at Port-au-Prince on October 20th, has been released, and indemnity of $1000 paid to the principal owner, and all port charges and customs duties on cargo remitted.

Mrs. Langtry Did It.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Mrs. Thompson, dealer in ladies hair' goods, who has made an assignment, gives as one reason the fact that since Mrs. Langtry set the fashion of wearing the hair naturally, the business of supplying waves, bangs, etc., has fallen off, and the stock of those goods on hand became worthless.

Business Failures.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—There were 201 business failures in the United States during the past week, and 31 in Canada, a total of 232, against 296 the previous week.

Protestant Churches Decreasing in New York; A Conference Called.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—A number of clergymen of various Protestant denominations, and other prominent citizens, have issued a circular stating that the number of Protestant churches in proportion to the population in this city has declined fifty per cent since 1846, and calling for a conference at Chickering hall December 3d, 4th and 5th, to discuss the religious needs of the people and devise means for meeting the same.

Thanksgiving in a State Prison.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—At the Massachusetts State prison yesterday, the 575 prisoners were given a Thanksgiving dinner of turkey, cran berries, potatoes, bread, coffee and plum pudding. The Weymiss Concert company furnished an entertainment which was greatly enjoyed by the prisoners. The warden read Gov. Ames Thanksgiving proclamation, and told the prisoners that the governor had remembered them to the extent of sending two pardons, one for Thomas Herty, who was sentenced in 1872 to prison for life, for murder in the second degree, and to Charles Witham, sentenced to life in 1877, for breaking and entering a house with arms. When the names were announced the 575 prisoners cheered and shouted "Good!" "Good!" Herty is sixty and Witham thirty-eight years of age. The prisoners gave three cheers for Gov. Ames.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ISHPEMING, MICH., Nov. 30.—Fire was discovered last night on the sixteenth level of No. 3 shaft of the Calumet & Hecla mine at Red Jacket. The flames spreading, it will be necessary to close down the mine and seal all the shafts to prevent fresh air from reaching the flames. Seven or eight miners are below the flames, and cannot be rescued unless by a miracle. This is the third fire in this mine in as many years, and there is no doubt it is incendiary. The company are making the most desperate efforts to control the flames, and try and rescue the miners, but it looks as if the case was hopeless. The men are all married but two, and all but one are Cornish men. The scene about the mine is heartrending. The families of the men are of course cognizant of the extreme likelihood that the men will never come out alive, and to their grief and lamentations are added the most frantic confusion on the part of all except the trained employees of the company.

DETROIT, Nov. 30.—A Journal special from Calumet & Hecla says the fire will not affect the product of the mine materially, and that it will be kept up to the limit imposed by the French syndicate.

LATER.—Nothing is known of the whereabouts of the eight men missing. They were working 1700 feet deeper in the main engine shaft and it is supposed that smelling smoke they tried to escape and were smothered. Over 100 men were in this portion of the mine at the time but escaped. Immense volumes of smoke are issuing from the burning shaft. The fire will not prevent work at south neck, and that part of the mine is now in shape to employ all of the miners and produce can be kept up to the syndicate's limit.

Smoke is issuing tonight from several shafts which are being covered with timbers and earth. The fire is every way much worse than it was last year and is liable to burn for months, and must burn itself out, and it may take weeks and even months, unless the mine can be flooded which is hardly probable.

What the Inter-State Commission Has Been Doing. A Rosy View.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The annual report of the Inter-State Commerce Commission is a long document, and not of very general interest. After dealing with various statistics it says that during the year fifty cases have been heard and decided, and six have been heard but not decided. In nine the hearing is incomplete; 23 have been withdrawn or settled, and 10 suspended by request, while nine have been assigned for a hearing. In speaking of the "long and short haul" the report says: In the section of the country north of the Potomac and east of the Missouri, in which greater charges are made for short transportation, circumstances are such that complaint is not often made that they operate oppressively. In the Southern states carriers move more slowly in bringing the tariffs into conformity with general statutory law. The commission has therefore ordered investigation of the whole subject on the 18th of December. The report takes up the subject of the effect of the inter-state commerce act upon common carriers, and says that although some railroad managers declare it had a damaging effect, the commission has no evidence showing that the general result has been otherwise than beneficial.

Special Despatch to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Chief Officer Smith of the captured American steamer Haytien Republic arrived here yesterday from Hayti with twenty-two of her crew. Capt. Smith says he and the crew were kept imprisoned for 29 days, and that when the U. S. S. Boston arrived they expected to be relieved, but instead of this Captain Ramsey treated them shamefully and steamed away from por. leaving them to die like rats, and not even answering a note from Capt. Compton of Haytien Republic asking him to secure their release.

"We attribute all our troubles," said Officer Smith, "to the interference of the Spanish and French Ministers. When the Haytien Republic's case was up before the Prize Court, the judges, after hearing the testimony, were convinced that they had no right to hold us and were going to release the vessel, when the French and Spanish Ministers told them to seize the vessel; that she was undoubtedly a privateer and that we ought all to be shot. Thereupon they condemned her."

OUR NAVY.

Secretary Whitney's Report.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 30—Secretary Whitney has presented his annual report to the president. After giving a brief review of the condition of the navy as it will exist on the 4th day of March, 1889, in comparison with the same as it existed on the 4th day of March, 1885, and furnishing a list of armored vessels heretofore authorized by Congress, the secretary says:

So far as armored ships are concerned, the subject is yet to be treated in a broad way by the department and Congress. At the present time the conditions are such that everything necessary to a first-class fighting ship can be produced and furnished to the department in this country as soon as in the course of construction any element or feature is required, but this has never heretofore until the present time been true, and therefore the consideration of the subject has been necessarily postponed by the department until the present time. The efforts of the department in ship construction have, since March, 1885, been devoted to unarmored vessels, and as to these the department is able to report that when the ships in course of construction and those authorized shall have been completed, the United States will be second among nations in the possession of unarmored cruisers, or commerce destroyers, having the highest characteristics, viz., of a size 3000 tons and upward, and possessing speed of 19 knots and upwards.

A chapter is devoted to naval progress at home and abroad, and in it a statement is made that the necessity for increased numbers of fast protected cruisers, whether for purposes of protecting or destroying commerce, or for service with a fleet as scouts, has been emphasized during the naval manœuvres of the year, and is fully recognized by all naval powers. But with the increase of the number of cruisers, it has been recognized, in view of the recent introduction of high explosive projectiles and the increase of power and rapidity of fire, and other guns, that renewed attention must be given to the armored fleet, and the prevailing opinion in England, France, Italy, Germany and Russia is strongly in favor of additional armored ships to be built at an early date. In these new vessels the armor will be much more widely distributed, and will certainly protect the battery and crew, as well as the water line and machinery. The destructiveness of high explosive shell fire against unprotected sides emphasizes the peculiar advantages of the monitor type for coast defence service.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Nov. 30.—The Donovan family now admit that young King was killed by George Donovan, son of the saloon keeper at whose place the murder occurred. When King fell he was carried into the saloon and just before he died he said George Donovan had shot him. When this story came out today the police quickly secured confession from the Donovan family. After the shooting Donovan ran home to hide in the barn, and was concealed there while the police were searching the neighborhood last night. Today his coat, hat and revolver were found on the edge of the New Haven reservoir, indicating that he committed suicide. The police consider this a ruse and are continuing the search with renewed vigor. Donovan is supposed to have been jealous of King's attentions to one of his lady friends.

The Maine Savings Banks. A Good Showing.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

AUGUSTA, ME., Nov. 30.—The thirty-second report of the savings banks of Maine, by F. E Richards bank examiner, will be presented to the governor and council tomorrow. Fifty-five savings banks, 15 building associations, and seven trust companies doing business in Maine are all in a healthy and solid condition. The total number of depositors Nov. 1, 188 was 124,562 of which 99,293 represent a deposit each of less than $500. Increase of depositors in the last year 5333. The total amount of deposits Nov. 1, 1888 was $40,969,663 05. Increase for the year $2,150,019.83. Every bank paid the regular semi-annual dividends, total amount $1,479,785 68. Assets of all banks over liabilities $5,031,479.44. The state tax paid by the banks is $268,868.-06. The report recommends carefulness in making investments in western farm mortgages, reviews and commends the work of loan and building associations and recommends the repeal of the law making an extra rateable dividend to depositors every three years.

Disasters at Sea.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SAVANNAH, GA., Nov, 30.—The British steamship Napier arrived at quarantine today from New York with captain and crew of British steamship Domingo, which was abandoned sinking in lat. 33 36 lon. 73 48. Domingo was from St. Jago, Cuba, for Philadelphia, with iron ore. She sailed on the 18th, and when abandoned had eight feet of water in her hold.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Nov. 30.—The British steamer Ethel Bald from St. Ann's Bay, reports: November 28th, in lat. 32 25, lon, 74 40, passed brig Golconda of Boston, abandoned, sails and spars hanging over side and rudder gone. The boats were gone, and general appearance gave the impression that crew had very recently left her.

The evidence accumulates every day that the democrats carried several of the southern states by throwing out thousands of republican votes, and by intimidating colored voters in localities where they outnumbered the white democrats more than three to one. We have hitherto directed attention to the illegal methods resorted to in Virginia and South Carolinia to give their electoral votes to Cleveland. Both of these states are unmistakably republican on a free vote and an honest count.

We have before us a letter from a former citizen of Portsmouth now residing in Florida, but whose name we withhold for obvious reasons. The writer says:

"I hope you feel as good over the result of the election as I do. The democrats got Florida, but it was by the most outrageous frauds that were ever practiced. This county should have given a republican majority of 300 or 400, but the democrats carried it by about 200. If you had our registration officers in the north, Cleveland would have carried every state."

The next Congress has a duty to perform in connection with the election in the south, which it cannot shirk without outraging all sense of justice and fair play. With both branches republican and an executive in sympathy with it, Congress must remedy the great evil that now prevails in almost every southern state, and afford to the republicans there an opportunity to cast their votes without fear or favor, and have them honestly counted as cast. If this can be done the solid south is a thing of the past.

During a visit to Gen. Harrison at Indianapolis, Major Ben Butterworth of Ohio was asked the question "Will the Sherman men dominate the party in Ohio during the next four years?" To this the Cincinnati representative replied:

"Nobody will dominate Ohio republicans. There won't be any dominating. There is no state in the Union where there is less boasism than among the Ohio republicans. But the next administration will give the offices to able, honest and capable men. That is all that is necessary in Ohio, and the men of the party or faction that does that is secure. The man who appoints bullies and bad men to office for the purpose of strengthening himself cannot last longer than the first, or at the most, the second election."

This is sound political talk, and applies with as equal force to New Hampshire as to Ohio. We believe that the next administration can be trusted to appoint only able, honest and capable men to office, and if that is done the country will be satisfied.

The New York Sun regards with disfavor the attempt to form a democratic Grand Army of the Republic organization. It says:

"That is a very radical step which some members of the Grand Army of the Republic are considering now, and, if there is any value whatever in that institution, it should not be taken. The democrats had better stay and fight it out with their friends in the inside."

We give place elsewhere to a letter from Geo. E. Herriot, chairman of the Republican State Committee of South Carolina, regarding the election laws in that state under which thousands of republicans are disfranchised. The letter tells the story, and calls for no extended comments. It has been suggested that these outrageous laws be tested in the federal courts, with the plea that they are unconstitutional in that they deny or abridge the rights of citizens of the United States to vote. By all means let this be done, and we fail to understand how honest democrats can interpose any objection.

Dr. Irving A. Watson, secretary of the New Hampshire state board of health, has just issued the annual report of that body. There has been a greater demand during the past year on the board, for advice and services, than ever before, with a result of better drainage and sewerage. The improved conditions in many towns have caused a decrease in sickness, particularly of typhoid fever. The death rate for the year was a trifle over eighteen per thousand throughout the entire state.

All work on the battle ship Texas has been abandoned for the present. The published stories about a board being ordered to enquire into the irregularities and inconsistancies of the original design are without foundation. That there are glaring errors, both in the design and measurement, there can be no doubt, and before the ship can be properly laid down they will have to be corrected or else new designs furnished. The navy department officials have nothing to say on the subject pending the "hanging up" of the work. It is not known when the matter will be taken up.—Army and Navy Journal.

Mr. Whitney should send to England at once for another set of plans and specifications for an American ship-of-war.

Outrageous Election Laws.

To the Editor of the Press: I read your paper with much interest during the canvass, and think its able advocacy of the principles of protection to labor and capital as well as an honest ballot had a great deal to do with the splendid victory. Republicans of the South could only hope that the party at the North would triumph, for so far as we were concerned we could not aid in the simplest way, as we were completely disfranchised politically. Our friends beyond Mason and Dixon's line have been unable to fully comprehend the bonds of political slavery with which we are burdened. Free, fair elections are farces. The notorious election laws of South Carolina are the most infamous and outrageous in the face of the globe, and as the Charleston, (S. C.) World of the 23d said, "and especially when administered by a set of political Janizaries."

This county, Georgetown, is a part of the most famous "Black District" of South Carolina, in which there are 30,000 republicans to 7,000 democrats, and yet the democrats so manipulated this law that they have succeeded in counting out Miller, republican, and counting in Eliot, democrat. The question may be asked, how is it possible to bring about such stupendous results? The answer is simple. In the first place the law is, that all who failed to register in 1882 are forever debarred that right, and all who came of age since that time and failed to register when they were twenty-one years of age are also forever disfranchised. Of coure the law only holds good as to republicans; democrats are furnished certificates ad libitum. But it does not stop there.

Those who may lose their certificates must have them renewed on certain days prior to each election. Well, in this country, I, as a republican county chairman, notified our people to appear for renewals. They did so to the number of over 1,000, but of that number only 100 were given certificates, and one-half of this number were not permitted to vote for electors or Congressmen—their names having been left off the list by the supervisor. The whole machinery is in the hands of the vilest democratic partisans, and what the law fails to achieve prior to the election the managers do not scruple to accomplish at or after the time the ballots are cast.

Vain of Her Eyes and Lost Them.

About a year ago one of the most lovely girls in the state lived at No. 40 Orange avenue in this city. A pair of large, liquid blue eyes set off a face that would put any picture to shame, and her form was simply perfect. The young lady was highly educated and possessed all the qualities that go to make up a society belle. Her parents are well to do, and she has wanted for nothing since she was old enough to prattle. But she had one fault, and that fault has proved her undoing. It is called vanity. She fairly worshiped her own eyes, and did everything in her power to make them more beautiful than they were. She used numerous drugs before she found what she wanted. This last drug made her eyes sparkle like diamonds, and she used it to such an extent that her right eye began to shrivel. This brought her to her senses and the family physician was called in. But he came too late, and informed the poor girl that she must lose one of her eyes sure and probably both. The right eye was taken out some time ago, and she has lost all sight in the left and will be blind for life. It is one of the saddest cases that was ever brought to light in this city.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Times.

His Life Saved by a Present of Flowers.

A beautiful girl drove out to the Sand Hills and gave Dr. Sollace Mitchell a magnificent boquet of flowers for a certain one of the patients (mentioning him by name.) When asked by the doctor, "Who shall I say brought them?" the young lady, blushing deeply, replied: "Never mind the name; just give them to him." "It's strange how some things will help along a sick man," said the doctor. "There was this fellow in a bad fix with the fever and as soon as I told him that a young lady who refused to give her name had sent him these flowers, which she had brought out herself to the Sand Hills, the patient smiled and began to mend from that very minute, and now is out of danger."—Savannah News.

SCROFULA

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors;" which fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula, be sure to try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, sores breaking out on them in various places. My little boy, three years old, has been a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. I was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we have all taken it. The result is that all have been cured of the scrofula, my little boy being entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

J. C. CARR.

The worst feature about catarrh is its dangerous tendency to consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying the blood.

We are astonished at parties who introduce new remedies for coughs when they should know the people will have Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

"Kings are like stars, they rise and set." They have headaches, cuts, and hurts like meaner men, and are just as sure to call for Salvation Oil.

The editor of a Chicago paper sent a reporter through a train to take up a straw vote as to the most popular daily in the West. Out of 410 votes his paper received two. He concluded not to publish the scoop.

Hundreds of letters from those using Hall's Hair Vigor attest its value as a restorer of gray hair to its natural color. As a stimulant and tonic, preventing and curing baldness, and cleansing the scalp, its use cannot be too strongly recommended.

The steamer Worcester, from Boston for Halifax, concerning whose safety grave fears were entertained, has arrived at her destination all right, but two days behind time owing to the great gale.

As a purifier, Ayer's Sarsaparilla acts directly and promptly. A single bottle will prove its merits. Many thousands of people are yearly saved from dangerous fevers by the exercise of a little timely care in cleansing the system by the use of this remedy.

The man who knew how the election would go might have made millions.

Avoid the harsh, irritating, griping compounds so often sold as purgative medicines, and correct the irregularities of the bowels by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills, which are gentle, yet searching, in their action.

She Blushed

Awfully when I told her what to do for those horrid pimples, with which her face was covered. She now says if you want a pink and white complexion with a clear, smooth skin, you must use that best of all blood purifiers, Sulphur Bitters.

Be Your Own Doctor.

It won't cost you half as much. Do not delay. Send three 2-cent stamps for postage, and we will send you Dr. Kaufmann's great work, fine colored plates from life, on disease, its causes, and home cure. Address A. P. Ordway, & Co., Boston, Mass.

"Let me have the votes of a city," remarked a Tammany chieftain "and I care not who makes its campaign songs."

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This made of advertising would prove ruinous if the Balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle today to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at all druggists. Large size 50c. and $1.00.

The Excitement Not Over.

A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

"We are startled constantly by the sudden death of some man who seemed the picture of health. He thought he was well. He had felt strange pains shooting through his body, but as they did not remain, he forgot them. He had complained him periodically, he was somewhat paler than common and unaccountably tired, but he felt comparatively well and vigorous. And yet, he suddenly died! He a victim to our boasted civilization!"

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and why is it? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the most terrible of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful, sudden strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural law. The solemn and terrible fact is, that men and women drag along, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the real cause lay far back of all these things. The truth is that weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' I have seen numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where this preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been such a remarkable in its results. I use it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

THE SIN OF OMISSION.

It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone
Which gives you a bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun;
The tender word forgotten,
The letter you did not write,
The flower you might have sent, dear,
Are your haunting ghosts to-night.

The alms you might have lifted
Out of the brother's way,
The bit of heartsome counsel
You were hurried too much to say.
The loving touch of the hand, dear,
The gentle and winsome tone
That you had no time nor thought for,
With troubles enough of your own.

These little acts of kindness,
So easily out of mind,
Them chanced to be angels
Which even mortals find—
They come in sight and silence
Each child reproachful wraith,
When hope is faint and flagging,
And a blight has dropped on faith.

For life is all too short, dear,
And sorrow is all too great,
To suffer our slow compassion
That tarries until too late.
And it's not the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you the bitter heartache
At the setting of the sun.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

CONFUSION OF TITLES.

"And so Fields had a wife and six children!" Mr. Scott smiled gently to himself as he thought of it. "And not only a wife and six children, but he had been married twice—he had had two wives." There was nothing absurd nor remarkable about these facts, except as Mr. Scott chose to make them so. He had known Thomas Fields for ten or fifteen years on Wall street, and he had always fancied him an old bachelor, while in truth he was mourning one wife and courting another.

"I wonder if he made love!" said Mr. Scott to himself, and again he smiled. Then he wondered if the six boys looked like their father. And there was no reason why they should not have been willing to look like him, for he was by no means ill favored, although he was tall and spare, and had the anxious, worried look of a man whose anxieties and responsibilities outrun his resources. But as far as money goes this was not true of Mr. Fields, who was a very rich man indeed.

Perhaps it pleased Mr. Scott to be facetious, and to take a lively and contrary view of life. It was late afternoon and near train time, and all the young people and the wives whose husbands went to the city every day had gone to the station, so that the two men were almost alone under the tree on the lawn where they had placed their chairs. They were smoking, and Mr. Scott was toying with a tennis racquet left in his care.

After a while Mr. Scott spoke, not the substance but the shadow of his thoughts:

"Your boys ought to be a great comfort to you, Fields. Six sons! They ought to carry on your business and perpetuate your name."

"They will not carry on my business—not one of them. When Dick made up his mind that he wanted to go to West Point, and Bob determined to study medicine, I didn't care, because there were the four left; but Logan has taken to farming, Fred has gone into law, and Harry has a perfect craze about becoming a minister; so you see the business will go into other hands. It is not right—not at all right."

"But there are six of them! How about the sixth?"

"Phil! He is the greatest disappointment of all. The brightest boy I have, Mr. Scott."

"Well?"

"Phil has very reprehensible ideas. He writes verses, and will not go into business nor into a profession. He says he can live on his allowance. And he does, I'll say that for him—and on his salary."

"His salary? Why, then, he is in business?"

"Just now he is. In a brewery. He is a clerk in a brewery, and gets $650 a year. That is like Phil. Obstinate—a perfect pig headed fellow for obstinacy."

"But I don't understand," said Mr. Scott. "Don't you want him to be in a brewery, or does he do it to spite you?"

"Not to spite me, but he is very aggravating. I have talked to him a good deal, and I have said some plain truths to him. One day he told me that he would prove that he was not lazy, and that he could earn his living at a tread mill if he chose, and so he found this situation and took it. He says he means to stay a year."

"Why, I like that," cried Mr. Scott. "The boy has grit."

"Well," said Mr. Scott, "I've often wished we had a son, but six of them can make life lively. My daughter is as good a girl as any one need desire, but she has her vagaries."

"Your daughter is a very nice girl," Mr. Fields warmly responded, "and a very pretty one too. I have noticed her a good deal. If I had a daughter I should be perfectly satisfied to have her exactly like your Regina."

"She is a very good girl," repeated the father, with modest pride; "but it is a great responsibility to have a marriageable daughter."

Mr. Fields grimly smiled. "She seems to have her choice. All the young men here have eyes for her only."

"It is the poor quality of the young men, Mr. Fields—the men of today. Why, there is not a man at Oak Hill to whom I would give Regina. No, nor in New York, as far as I know. It is a serious matter, and one to be looked at from every point of view, this choosing of a husband for a girl. She gives up everything when she marries—name, home, everything into which she has grown. To choose for a girl means to blindly take for her either misery or happiness."

"You are fortunate if you are allowed to choose," Mr. Fields dryly answered. "Logan married well, and Bob is engaged to a very nice girl, one of the Hookers—Hooker, Hood & Co.; but here comes another of Phil's perversities. He wants to marry a professional."

"A professional! Is the lady on the stage?"

"Why, that is horrible! I'd send him away. I never heard of such a thing! I suppose she is pretty?"

"I do not know. I have never spoken to him on the subject. He told Mrs. Fields, his stepmother. I told her to say to him from me that I would never hear a word about her. In such matters it is wise to be decided, and he had best understand that we—that I—will never countenance nor condone such a match. If he marries her he will have to keep to the brewery."

"Our sons marry with too much freedom," and here Mr. Fields took breath and lighted his cigar.

"It is a matter of wide importance who it is a man marries, because his whole family is involved. When a man brings a woman into a family, gives her his name—the family name—and she becomes the mother of the new generation, the family should have a voice in the matter. Not every woman, not every other family should be admitted. Marriage is more than a merely personal matter."

"It does not matter so much to the man, but the woman—there's the puzzle! But Regina and I agree about everything, except that she wants to marry a business man, and I am sick of business men. I should like her to marry such a man as an English country gentleman, if we had such a class—a man with landed property and human responsibilities; a man of affairs. But Regina says that her father's trade is the one for his daughter, and so I am to go to Wall street and look for a husband for her."

"I wish you would find one of my boys there, then; but you won't. Oh, what a fool a young man can be! And Phil is a fastidious fellow, quiet and well behaved—not at all the kind of boy you would expect to like loud, unfeminine women."

That night Philip Fields was the subject of two midnight conversations. His father and his stepmother talked him over, and they decided to ask him to come and spend a few days at Oak Hill.

"A counter irritant," said Mrs. Fields, who consorted much with doctors, "is sometimes the best, the only remedy in cases of this character."

Mr. Scott told his wife and daughter the story of Mr. Fields and his six sons, and he made it so absurd that Mrs. Scott was animated by a most lively curiosity to see them all. But Regina didn't think the story funny. She said the Fields boys were all stupid. She had met two of them, the divinity student and Phil. Still she lingered in her mother's room, and talked about them until it was after 1 o'clock, and the next morning, when Mr. Fields managed to secure her for a few minutes, she listened with much politeness to all he said of his son, assuring him of her sympathy with him in the trials he confided to her.

"She is a flirt," said Mrs. Fields; but Mr. Fields did not agree with his wife. He pronounced Regina quick and kind hearted. That she was so pretty was a factor apart from her mental and spiritual character.

And so it came to pass that Mr. Philip Fields came to Oak Hill, and met the household delegation at the station, and found his own committee, in the shape of his father and stepmother, waiting for him. And he was not stupid in his appearance. He was a very good looking young man, tall, like his father, but better built and muscular. He was also a very easy person to become acquainted with, and he at once proved a most desirable acquisition to the young ladies, because he proved to be so good a tennis player that he was able to enter against Miss Scott, and thus the games became more equal and spirited. Before he came she had had it all her own way, and consequently the games were growing dull for her as for the others.

"You play better than you did last summer," she said to him one morning, as they sat alone down by the creek.

"I meant to," he replied, "and when I have not been brewing or keeping brewers' books I have studied tennis. It has kept up my nerve."

"And how about your poetry?" said the young woman.

"Who told you I wrote poetry?" asked he.

"Oh, I know. I know a good deal about you, Mr. Philip Fields, and if you please, I should like to have my racquet when you go back to town; the one you took last year, sir."

"It is broken," he said. "You knew you could never use it again."

"I want to have it mended. It was the best I ever had. I played the Richhaven game with that one."

"I know that," said Phil.

"Then you will send it to me?"

"No, I will not. You gave it to me."

"But I want it. I really do."

"Young ladies should not be Indian givers."

"Young ladies may be what they please."

"No, they may not."

"You think they may."

"Indeed I don't."

"Now come," said she; "I do not know any one who allows women the latitude you do."

At this Phil paused up. "I do not see how you can say such a thing. You know I dislike women who step out of what I consider is womanly."

"That is the very point," urged Regina, who seemed more in earnest than was necessary. "Your definition of 'womanly' is so wide, it takes in so much!"

"I beg your pardon."

"Oh, but it does!"

"I do not see why you say so, Miss Fields."

"Have I ever given you reason to be so unjust to me?" he persisted.

"Oh, no."

"Then why do you say such things to me?"

"Oh, because," said Regina.

"You are unkind," and Phil looked as though he really thought she was; "you make cruel, unauthorized charges against me and refuse to explain them."

"Indeed I do not," retorted she. "I have very good authority for my opinions and your taste in young ladies is very peculiar. It may be excellent but it is peculiar."

"It is very modest in you to say so."

"You like professional women."

"I would, I am sure; but I don't know one, not even a woman doctor."

"Oh, a woman doctor! Some of them are lovely. Nobody would wonder if you liked them.

"Pray tell me at what any one may wonder."

"Well," said Regina boldly, "a young man who likes women prize fighters must be considered as having odd tastes."

"Women prize fighters!"

"Yes."

"What on earth are you talking about?"

So then Regina was committed, and she told him all his father had said, and gave him a sharp little lecture, in which justice was very little tempered with mercy, on his duty to his parent. She professed a good deal of regard and sympathy for Mr. Fields, and indeed it was pleasant to see this pretty girl taking the side of the father, and preaching the Fourth Commandment. To all this the young man listened in silence. He was hard to impress, it seemed, for he made no reply, and then suddenly he asked:

"Who said all this?"

"Your father."

"But who told him?"

"Your mother—Mrs. Fields."

"And who told her?"

"You told her yourself, and you told her more than I have spoken of."

"Nonsense!"

"But you did. You told her you were engaged to marry this person. I insist—I mean my mother, Mrs. Fields."

"So you said."

"Oh Lord!" cried Phil, and he lay back on the grass and laughed until Regina was so offended she arose and walked back to the house.

After that she saw no more of Phil until after supper, when he came to her as she finished a most stupid game of tennis, there being no one engaged in it who could contest it with her.

"Miss Scott," said he, "Mrs. Fields would be glad if you could come to her for one moment."

Regina hesitated, and then said that she would come presently with pleasure. Would he be kind enough to say so?

"I think she wished me to bring you," replied Phil, boldly; and so, not wishing to expose their quarrel to the public, she was constrained to go with him, but she did not speak to him, and indeed he did not ask her to do so. He was perfectly silent, and seemed humbled and quieted enough.

Mrs. Fields was not in the house, but over by the well—a forlorn and weed-grown place, where only the servants went. She was sitting on the stump of a tree. She turned when she heard footsteps. "I have waited ages for you, Phil," she said.

"Miss Scott was engaged," replied Phil, "and I waited for her. You must pardon me," said he, turning to Regina, "for my mother did not send me for you, but I wanted to ask her a question before you, and I had no alternative. You would not have come had I asked it."

"Certainly not;" and Regina turned to go. Phil laid his hand gently on her arm.

"Surely," he said, "you will not be unfair to me?" And then, all in a breath, he turned to his stepmother.

"Do you remember," he said, "when you once asked me about a glove you found in my room? You teased me."

Mrs. Fields laughed. "Certainly. Do you want me to tell you what you said?"

"I do."

"It wouldn't be polite, Phil."

"Indeed you are mistaken. It would be very polite—and true."

"You said it belonged to the prettiest girl in America."

"I cannot see," said Regina, "how this interests me."

Phil made no answer to her.

"Then you asked me who she was."

"Yes, and you said she was some sort of a professional character."

"A prize fighter!" said Phil.

"Mercy! no. Your father calls her that, because he is so indignant with you; but you never said so. I understood you perfectly. Some kind of athlete; not a teacher of calisthenics, but something like it."

Again did this young man burst into laughter, but he controlled himself, and it would not have been wise to have irritated Regina much farther.

"Oh, mother," he said, "now that Mrs. Partington is dead, why do you want to play her Elisha? Did I say calisthenics and professional?"

"I do not care what you said," cried Regina; and again she turned, and this time ran away, leaving poor Phil looking like the stupid she had called him.

Now Mrs. Fields always said when he was congratulated on his daughter-in-law that he had made the match. He certainly never made the explanation, and convinced Regina that Phil had said the glove belonged to "a champion," and he never showed the glove to Regina and made her confess it was hers, and she had missed it. It was very true that the old gentleman knew that Regina had played match games of tennis, and had carried off the title and honors as "champion," but he never confounded her with a "prize fighter." He always held to a vague belief in the existence of a reprehensible young woman from whom Regina had won Phil, and that he had induced her to do so, and when Phil called her, by way of a pet name, a Synonym, he asked for no explanation of the joke, if joke he considered it. It was Phil only who could have told what an uphill task he had in convincing Regina that if he loved her now, so had he loved her always. How many times before the summer was over did he hold his breath thinking of his stepmother's imagination and his father's credulity. To have said he was engaged to her was ever Regina's grievance, and it was difficult to persuade her that what was once a fiction of others should be a fact of their own. And indeed he made little headway until he found out that she liked men in business after she found he was in a brewery, and that Wall street was not enticing to her.

But, of course it all came right at last, and every one was satisfied. And when Phil went into politics and made a short, brilliant campaign, both the fathers were delighted, and Regina in Washington was more charming than ever to them.

And so Mr. Fields' pride and complacency over his feat always reminds me of Jack Horner. It is all very well to be proud of your plum, but where should one look for plums if not in a Christmas pie?—Louise Stockton in Harper's Bazar.

My Poor Back!

That "poor back" is held responsible for more than its share of the sufferings of mankind. If your dog bites a man who kicks it, do you blame the dog? On the same principle the kidneys bites their protest against nervousness, impure blood, and resulting constipation. These force them to do extraordinary work in ridding the system of the poisons which are the result of effete matter retained in the blood. Then the sufferer says the back aches; the kidneys are diseased. "Not yet;" but they will be unless the nerves are strengthened, the blood purified, and the constipation removed. These are the causes of kidney troubles, and Paine's Celery Compound removes them quickly. With its tonic, purifying, and laxative effect, it also strengthens the weak kidneys, making it almost infallible in curing all diseases of the nerves and kidneys. If your hopes of cure have not been realized, try Paine's Celery Compound; it gives perfect health to all who complain of "their poor backs." Price $1.00.

MASON HAMLIN ORGANS PIANOS

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with all makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues $22 TO $900. free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They combine the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRUNG, by which the tension of each string is secured the greatest possible purity and fullness of tone, together with a permanent firmness of tuning, greatly increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, mailed on application, post free, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

REPUBLICAN CLUB.

The Republican Club of Portsmouth held its second regular meeting on Friday evening at the old headquarters on Congress street, and was called to order at seven-thirty by its president, Mr. Willard J. Sampson, who in persuance of authority given him at the previous meeting named the following gentlemen, who will act as an executive committee of the new club:

The club then proceeded to complete its organization by the choice of the following officers:

Corresponding secretary, Michael E. Long.

Treasurer, Chandler M. Hayford.

The president was empowered to hire Badger's hall on Daniel street for permanent headquarters, and a committee of three, consisting of Thomas E. O. Marvin, Albert C. Anderson and A. Coburn Hoyt were appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws, and report the same to the next meeting.

A vote was passed making every person who voted for Harrison and Morton at the late election eligible to membership in the club; it being understood, however, that no person who has become of age since the election, or may do so hereafter, is debarred from the privilege of membership, provided he determines to give his support to the republican party and vote for its candidates.

The next meeting will be held at Badger hall on Daniel street next Friday evening, December 7th, at 7:30 o'clock.

MASONIC ELECTION.

St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 56, A. F. & A. M., held its annual election Friday evening at Masonic hall, and chose the following officers for the ensuing year:

Lemuel T. Davis, worshipful master.
Samuel W. Emery, senior warden.
Michael B. Gregg, junior warden.
Wingate N. Ilsley, treasurer.
Samuel M. Joy, secretary.
John Christie, John Pender, standing committee.

John Tanton, representative to grand lodge.

The installation will occur at the next regular meeting, which occurs on the second Monday in December, when the worshipful master will announce his staff.

SOCIETY NEWS AND PERSONAL NOTES.

—Miss Emily I. Hoyt of State street gave a complimentary supper last night to her brother, Frank C. Hoyt, and some of his Dartmouth college friends. It was a pronounced success. Mr. Charles F. Garvin was the caterer.

—Mrs. Young, wife of Capt. Andrew Young, U. S. Army, formerly of Dover, is stopping at the residence of Col. Aaron Young. Capt. Young has been stationed in the west for the past three years, and Mrs. Young's visit east is occasioned by the death of her mother.

—Lieut. F. H. Delano, U. S. N., is at the Rockingham with his family. He made the trip from Norfolk to Boston by sea, and was delayed some 39 hours in reaching Boston, but fortunately escaped the worst of the recent storm. His interesting little son, Phil., who is confined to the house by measles, is improving rapidly and hopes to be out soon.

—Asst. Engr. Thomas F. Carter left last Monday afternoon for his home in Kentucky. He expects to be married on the 5th of this month, and to return to Portsmouth with his bride about the middle of the month.

—Howe Call, Esq., of this city, was present at the meeting of republican orators held in New York this week, when the Republican Spell-Binders' Association was formed, and Hon. Chauncy M. Depew was the choice for president of the club. Mr. Call represents New Hampshire on the list of vice-presidents, thus securing merited recognition for his efforts in behalf of the republican national ticket at the recent election.

—Dr. and Mrs. Du Bois gave a most delightful card party last Wednesday evening, at their residence on the navy yard. They were assisted in receiving by their charming daughter, Miss Clara, who is soon to make her debut in society. After playing progressive euchre, the guests were invited to partake of a delicious supper, after which dancing was indulged in until after midnight. Among those who were present were Captain and Mrs. O'Kane, Capt. and Mrs. Barclay, Capt. and Mrs. White, Capt. and Mrs. Bradford and Miss Bradford, Capt. and Mrs. Higbee, Col. and Mrs. Hebb and Miss Hebb, Mr. and Mrs. Douglass, Chief Engr. Joseph Trilley and Mrs. Trilley, Mr. and Mrs. Crosby, Dr. and Mrs. May, Naval Constructor W. L. Mintoyne, Miss Mintoyne, Mrs. Peacock, Miss White, Lieut. Mahoney, Lieut. Doyen, Mr. Frank Cosby, Mr. Fred Bradford, Dr. M. H. Simons, and Mr. Higbee.

MARITIME NOTES.

The schooner Mary S. Hontvet, which has been engaged in the bank fishery out of Gloucester, Mass., during the summer, will probably come around to this port shortly to engage in winter fishing.

The schooner Clara E. Simpson of this port, Hontvet master, from New York, arrived in Salem, Mass., on Friday morning, all right. She sailed from New York just before the great storm, and though no serious fears of her safety were entertained, all interestered in her will be glad to know that she is snug in port.

The schooner Willie Parkman, seventy-eight tons gross register, arrived at this port on Friday from North Haven, Me.; she is to be added to the fleet of vessels engaged in winter fishing out of this port, and will be commanded by Capt. Thomas Jameson, formerly of the schooner Franklin S. Schenck. She is the second largest vessel of the local fishing fleet, is mostly owned by E. Newton & C., and will carry sixteen men and fourteen dories, the latter new being built to order.

Schooner James H. Deputy was hauled off the rocks at Fort point on Thursday morning by tug Clara Batemen, and towed to the town wharf, Newcastle, where she now lies awaiting inspection. It has not been decided whether she will be repaired here or at Bath, her hailing port. The schooner Mollie Phillips, which went ashore very near the Deputy, was hauled off Friday morning by steamer Undine, towed to Kittery, and placed on the marine railway, where she will undergo repairs.

The company of the ill-fated steamer Allentown, at the time of her wreck on Cohasset rocks on the afternoon of Nov. 25th, consisted of eighteen men, as follows: George W. Paul, captain; Joseph Ross, mate; Peter Livingston, second mate; Benjamin Pritchard, chief engineer; Henry Hayward, assistant engineer; John Duvall, steward; five seamen, three firemen, two coal passers, one ordinary seaman, and a mess boy. Capt. M. H. Reamy, keeper of Minot's ledge light, has reached the shore, and says a vast amount of wreckage, evidently from a steamer, passed the lighthouse Tuesday morning, Nov. 27th, coming from the direction of Jason's ledge, a small rock with seven feet of water over it at low water, rising from a shoal bottom about a mile northeast of the light, directly in the track of vessels. He has no doubt the Allentown struck Jason's ledge, but no signs of her show above water.

The union services at the Pearl street church on Thanksgiving day were well attended, all the Protestant pastors in the city being present with the exception of Rev. Mr. Hovey, rector of St. John's, in which church services were held. The pastor of the Pearl street society, Rev. Mr. Harrington, pressed a very impressive and appropriate sermon from the text "Righteousness exalteth a nation."

An elm tree on State street, in front of the residence of Mrs. Wm. A. Plaisted, was taken down on Friday.

Mr. Charles Oxford lost a valuable horse on Thursday, the animal dying from the effects of running a nail into one of its hoofs.

The thanksgiving ball in the town hall at Hampton, for which the Music hall orchestra of this city supplied the music, was a largely attended and very successful affair.

Workmen were busy Friday draining off a large quantity of water that gathered on the easterly side of Goodwin park during the storm.

The cost to Rockingham county for the trial of Palmer for the murder of Whitehouse, is said to amount to about $7000. "Expert" testimony comes high—fifty dollars a day, it is said—and when three experts are in attendance on the court for over a week, their compensations alone foots up a very respectable sum. But the result of the trial is so satisfactory to the public at large that there will probably be little complaint over the size of the bills.

Immense quantities of ben clams, which are thrown up from the bottom of the ocean only by the heaviest seas, were tossed ashore at York beach by the recent great gale.

Repairs are being made to the roof of the Athenaeum building on Market square, and also to the roof of the building occupied by J. M. Tebbetts on Market street.

A horse with part of a harness on was stopped on Market street yesterday afternoon between five and six, evidently a runaway. The vehicle to which he had been attached could not be seen, and we did not learn to whom the team belonged.

The repairs necessitated by the fire at Mr. Hartie W. W. Jackson's house on Islington street are progressing, and he expects to move into his home in about three weeks.

POLICE COURT—BATCHELDER J.

FRIDAY, Nov. 30th.

One drunk was find $3, costs $5.76; paid.

Thomas Francis, vagrant, six months at Brentwood, costs $6.90.

Two Hundred Dollars in Gold.

We are authorized by advice received from I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, to say that they have for three years offered poultry raisers, premiums payable in gold coin, for the best results obtained from using Sheridan's Powder to make hens lay. Their object has been to satisfy themselves beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the claim made by them that "Nothing on earth will make hens lay like Sheridan's Powder," was positively true. The hundreds of testimonials sent them from people who have used the powder, prove the statement; so that it seems folly to again offer premiums; but so many persons, especially women who kept a few hens, have made such good showing in former trials, and been beaten by some one else by a slight fraction in average, that in justice they ought to have another trial.

Johnson & Co. have devised a plan this year, to overcome that trouble in a measure, by offering twice as much cash and six times as many gold coin premiums as last year. The larger premium is $50.00 It is well worth trying for. If you miss that, there are twenty-three more chances for some other premium.

But supposing a competitor did not get any premium, they would still have the satisfaction of getting a lot of eggs to sell at a good round price. The retail price for eggs in Boston and New York last year reached as high as 50 to 60 cents per dozen. It pays to use Sheridan's Powder when eggs sell for even 10 cents. One of the competitors last year wrote as follows: "I am well paid in eggs without a premium. I will cheerfully recommend Sheridan's Condition Powder to poultry raisers generally for egg production, and all diseases of hens. I can now say confidently that it will beat anything I ever tried to make hens lay. I was surprised at the end of the eight weeks trial." He was evidently satisfied, and well he might have been; for during eight weeks he got from 30 hens, 1420 eggs, which at the average of prices above would amount to $65.08.

Any person can compete. Johnson & Co. will send full particulars free to anyone, whether they order powder or not.

For 50 cents in stamps, I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., will send to any P. O. address two 25-cent packs, five packs for $1.00; or, for $1 20, a 2 1-4 pound can of powder sent postpaid; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send for full particulars.

Precocity.

"Well, Johnny, have you learned your A B C's yet?" said his father, after the lad's first week in school. "Yes, sir," replied the young hopeful. "A. B. C. B. means Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam." Johnny remembered how quickly his last cold had been cured.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

ASSOCIATED PRESS DESPATCHES.

WASHINGTON.

Congress to Convene Tomorrow; Outline of the Work to be Done.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—Both houses of Congress are expected to organize promptly tomorrow. The first legislative day will probably be occupied with reading the President's message, which is understood to be of unusual length. The report of the secretary of the treasury will not be sent in until Tuesday. The programme for the week in the Senate will depend upon the result of the meeting of the committee on finance, called for Tuesday morning. If it is then decided to take up the committee's revenue measure, the Senate's substitute for the Mills tariff bill, which was pending at the close of last session, its consideration will preclude any possibility of any other bill coming to the front until it is disposed of. It is the expressed desire of Senators Morrill, Allison and Sherman to push the measure to a vote, so it seems probable that it will be taken up. If by any possibility the revenue bill should not come up, the probabilities of the course of legislation are rather vague.

The bills most likely to receive prompt attention with the least opposition are those for the admission of North Dakota, Montana and Washington territory into the Union. The special order for Tuesday at two o'clock is the Union Pacific funding bill, popularly so called. There is a slight possibility that after the reading of the message in the House an effort will be made to secure the passage of the Nicaraugua canal or Oklahoma bill under a suspension of the rules. This possibility, however, is very slight. Tuesday and Wednesday will probably be devoted to the consideration of bills on the calendar in what is called "consideration morning hour." The privilege of calling up bills rests with the committee on Indian affairs, and the pending measure being for a settlement of claims of old Senter band of Indians. Thursday is the day fixed for the democratic caucus resolution for the consideration of the direct tax bill; but it is still a matter of surmise whether or not the caucus programme will be adhered to. At the caucus held on the night of April 11th, the memorable deadlock which held the House in continuous session from April 5th was broken by the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved: On reassembling tomorrow the house shall adjourn with the understanding that the committee on rules will report a special order setting apart Thursday, Dec. 6th, 1888, immediately after the reading of the journal, for the consideration of senate bill No. 139, to provide for refunding the direct tax levied in 1861, on which order a reasonable time not to exceed three days, viz: Thursday, Saturday and Tuesday, shall be allowed for debate and amendment, and the time for a vote on its final passage shall be fixed at four o'clock on Tuesday."

The effect of the caucus action was an adjournment of the House on the following day, with the understanding implied by the caucus resolution, but not expressed by any action of the House, that the direct bill should be the special order for Thursday next. It is generally understood that this programme will be carried out, although there has been no meeting of the committee on rules to formulate the order. The opponents of the bill without any formal consultation, practically decided that it would be bad faith for them to resort to dilatory tactics should the order be reported by the committee, or the bill be called up by a democratic member, but they reserve the right to take any other action they see fit in the case. If a republican member calls it up, should the order be made, Saturday will be consumed in its debate and Friday devoted to the consideration of private bills.

Report of the Secretary of War.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—Secretary Endicott in his annual report alludes feelingly to the death of Gen. Sheridan, which he says deprived the army of its chief, pre-eminently fitted for such command, whose wide experience, ready resources and personal qualities made him a tower of strength in council and action. The secretary again invites the attention of Congress to the defenceless condition of our seacoast and lake ports, and says it appears more important than ever that immediate and liberal action in this direction should be taken by the coming session of Congress, in view of the fact that the last session gave appropriations for the construction of heavy ordnance. For the construction of needed defences in which to place these guns an appropriation of $2,840,000 is asked for: torpedoes and sub-marine mines, the Secretary says, are now acknowledged to be absolutely necessary to efficient defence of harbors and seaports, and for the purchase of these and necessary appliances for operating them, and for experimenting to ascertain the best of many torpedo inventions, an appropriation of $1,890,000 is recommended; under provisions of the Army bill for the procurement of pneumatic dynamite guns, necessary specifications are now being prepared, and advertisements for proposals will issue early this month for guns of 15 inches calibre to throw projectiles carrying charges of about 500 pounds of explosive gelatine. Discussing the operation of the Ordnance Department for the fiscal year, 41,130 rifles and carbines were manufactured at the national armory, and investigations were completed to determine the charge and projectile for arms of smaller calibre than the present service piece. It is intended to use compressed and perforated cartridges, but as yet the powder makers have not produced a satisfactory powder, the desired velocity being accompanied by too great a pressure. The matter is still under study.

The Postmaster General's Report.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. — Postmaster General Dickinson's annual report presents concisely the condition and history of every branch of the postal service for the fiscal year, with many comparisons with previous years, showing a remarkable expansion of business and a large increase in expenditures. The gross revenue for the year was $52,695,176; expenditures, $56,885,403; estimated deficiency, $4,190,227. Deficiency for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1885, was $6,973,944; for 1886, $7,166,594; for 1887, $4,297,238. The revenue for the current year is estimated at $62,508,658; expenditures, $65,812,073, with a probable deficiency this year of about $3,500,000. During the past year 12,288 postmasters were appointed, 6521 upon resignations and commissions expired, 1244 upon removals, 659 to fill vacancies by death, and 3864 on establishment of new post-offices. The railway mail service shows an increase of 12,000 miles and a decrease of twelve per cent in rate of cost per mile travelled. The volume of business in the money order division was upward of $143,000,000, and self-sustaining, with a net profit to government of $50,000. The volume of ordinary mail matter has largely increased, and its estimated revenue during the past year would have been, without reductions of postage, upward of $70,000,000.

The Six-Days Go-as-you-Please Race; All Previous Records Beaten.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—The six-days go-as-you-please race at Madison Square Garden ended last night with George T. Littlewood of Yorkshire, Eng., the winner, he having eclipsed all previous performances, beating the record of Albert, the previous champion, by two miles. The finish was witnessed by fully 10,000 persons. The score at ten o'clock, when the race practically ended, was as follows:

The Schooner Jonathan Sawyer Safe.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BIDDEFORD, ME., Dec. 2.—Schooner Jonathan Sawyer, Captain Reynolds, for whose safety much anxiety was felt here, arrived in port today from Philedelphia with a cargo of coal. She was not at sea during storm, but lay in Delaware bay till it abated. Schooner Edwin, Captain Anderson, from New York for Saco with coal, also came up river today. She was in New York harbor during the storm. No more vessels are due here this fall.

The Election Frauds in Virginia.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—The Tribune prints a column and a half special from Richmond, Va., showing how Cleveland carried the state. The republicans have gone to work to obtain the sworn statements of officers of the law. The evidence already obtained warrants the belief that the republicans will be able to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that at least 4,000 legal voters belonging to their party were unlawfully prevented from voting; that hundreds of fraudulent democratic ballots were counted; that many ballots cast for the Harrison electors were counted for the Cleveland electors; that if there had been a fair election and an honest count in Virginia this year the vote of the State would have been given for Harrison and Morton by a majority of several thousand, and that, eliminating the fradulent democratic ballots counted for Cleveland, and counting for Harrison only the republican ballots actually deposited in the boxes, would give the latter a fair plurality. The republicans have not engaged in this task "for fun," as a considerable number of democratic registrars and judges of election in that state will learn to their sorrow before they are a year older.

The Kearsarge Sails For Montevideo.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NORFOLK, VA., Dec. 2.—The U. S. S. Kearsarge, after being inspected by Rear Admiral Jouett, has sailed for Montevideo, carrying out the relief crew for the U. S. S. Tallapoosa. The Tallapoosa's present crew, whose term of service has expired, will be brought back to New York by the Kearsarge.

Drowned.

PORTLAND, ME, Dec. 2.—Ephraim Mitchell, 60 years of age, living on South street, in a fit of aberration, wandered from his home on Saturday night and fell into a dock. His dead body was found this morning.

Up Go The Rates.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec 2.—The general managers of railroads between Chicago and St. Louis and the Atlantic seaboard, after a two days session, finally agreed late last night to restore all rates to the full winter tariff, including dressed beef and live stock rates. Over forty important roads were represented.

After Many Days.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The Washington Post, which has for a long time claimed a majority in the next House for the democratic party, now admits that the republicans will have a majority of seven.

FOREIGN.

Honor to Baudin's Memory.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PARIS, Dec. 2.—There was a great demonstration today to commemorate Baudin's intrepid defence of the republic's rights against Caesarism, and to honor those who had been proscribed or had fallen at the time of the coup d' etat or after. A host of sight seers gathered around Baudin's monument at the entrance to Montmartre cemetery this morning. Delegates from the deputies union of the left and the republican union and from the republican left of the senate, arrived in separate groups and placed wreaths at the foot of the monument.

Harrison's Cabinet.

Meetings between prominent politicians have been pretty frequent of late. Those have been held at the Fifth Avenue hotel in New York, and have been participated in by Ex-Senator Platt, Vice President Morton, Senator Hiscock, Major McKinley and others. It is not doubted that some matters have been cleared up at these conferences, and probably they will have an important bearing upon the policy of General Harrison in making up his Cabinet. It seems clear at this writing that Joan Sherman can have the state portfolio if he will take it, but there is a complication in Ohio politics which may deter him from leaving the senate. Governor Foraker carries the present legislature in his pocket and would most assuredly be elected to fill out Sherman's term should the latter vacate his seat. There is no love lost between Sherman and Foraker, and besides, the latter is so dreaded by a very large element in the party, especially in Ohio, that pressure will doubtless be brought to bear on Sherman to dissuade him from leaving the senate at this juncture.

New York's representative in the Cabinet is more likely to be Ex-Senator Platt than Miler. The former, besides being a capable and experienced business man of large ability, is the recognized leader under whose care and control the republican party in New York has marched to victory. Miller, on the other hand, is known as a poor politician, whose every attempt to lead his party has ended in discomfiture. His recent canvass for the governorship is no exception, for while he has extorted praise from many for his outspoken bravery in respect to the highest kind of high license, it was seen by the judicious to be the bravery of recklessness. The fact is now confessed by most New Yorkers that Miller might have won but for his extreme—almost fanatical course. Thousands of republican hotel keepers and others who were engaged in kindred businesses, who favored high license, refused to vote for him because of his violent denunciations. It is not considered at all probable that General Harrison will entrust to Mr. Miller any considerable share in shaping the policy of his administration.

As for the part New England is likely to play, all is very uncertain. It does not now look as though Mr. Blaine would form a part of the official family. Perhaps Captain Boutelle, now and for many years a capable and efficient representative in Congress from the Pine Tree state, may be called to the navy department. His excellent record as an officer of the navy during the war well fits him for this post. Or perhaps Ex-Governor Long, or maybe Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, may be called upon. If the report that General Harrison will seek young timber, brought from Indianapolis by General Sewell, is true, the three gentlemen last mentioned would all be likely candidates. In this event McKinley might be Secretary of State.

A despatch from North Adams, Mass., says the Hoosac Tunnel is not yet successfully lighted. Several experiments have been made for lighting it with electricity, but none of them has yet been satisfactory. The company which is now putting in cables for lighting it hopes to succeed. The difficulty thus far has been that no electric lights have been found powerful enough to penetrate the thick smoke which sometimes accumulates in the tunnel two miles from the opening.

In another column will be found a communication signed "Justice" regarding the selection of a postmaster for Portsmouth under the next administration. The letter comes from a well known citizen of Portsmouth, and deserves respect and thoughtful consideration. While our columns are open at all times, within a reasonable limit, for suggestions and expressions of opinion which may affect the business interests of Portsmouth, it should be understood that the editor of the CHRONICLE is not committed to the views which may be thus expressed. We are glad to have our citizens make known their opinion, not only in reference to filling the post-office, but upon all other subjects of local interest.

Clerical Haps and Mishaps.

The cozy squire's pew of the eighteenth century, says the Argosy, was an elaborate structure, luxuriously furnished, and surmounted by crimson curtains. It often contained the only fireplace in the church, and was never complete without a square table. During the reign of George I. a colored footman would enter with a tray of light refreshment just before the sermon. Ensconced in one of these retreats Ernst, duke of Cumberland, was roused from a doze by the exhortation, "Let us pray." "By all means," shouted the duke: "I have no objection."

The poor were accommodated in narrow pews, very high and stiff in the back. No wonder a timid child remarked that a man in velvet breeches had sat her on a pantry shelf and shut the door. Not so little Johnnie, who, "on the promise to be dood," was taken to church. He kept very still till the last prayer, by which time he had grown so tired that he got up on the cushion of his seat, and stood with his back to the pulpit. When the lady in the seat behind bowed her head for prayer, Johnnie thought she was crying, so he leaned over and said in a too audible whisper: "Poor dear lady, what ce matter? Does oo tummy ache?"

Very formidable must have been the pew with the lattice around it, in which that red-haired vixen, Queen Bess, sat to criticise the court preachers. They had to be as particular in their allusions as the chaplains of Louis XIV. "We must all die," exclaimed the preacher. The king frowned fiercely. "All, I mean, save your majesty," added the subtle courtier. When a bishop or other cleric made mention of anything which did not please the vain old woman, the lattice was rattled with terrible energy and distinctness, to the discomfiture of the unfortunate ecclesiastic. Sometimes she spoke outright, as when the bishop of St. David's ventured upon statistics which the queen could not follow: "You keep your arithmetic to yourself; the greatest clerks are seldom the wisest men."

How different was the appreciation of a sermon delivered by my eloquent incumbent in Bosley church, Cheshire. At the conclusion the kind vicar, leaping through the paper hoop as rubrical restrictions, exclaimed: "My good people, before we sing the hymn I think we cannot do better than heartily thank Mr. Hughes for his most excellent sermon."

In that same church a local landowner, the earl of Harrington, placed a stained-glass window containing figures of the Virgin and St. John. Some friends of mine, being shown over the building, asked the venerable clerk the subject. "They," said he, "are meant for Mr. and Mrs. Harrington, but I can't say as they are much loike."

My first incumbent, Mr. Hughes, was very absent minded. A well-known member of the congregation had enlivened dull December by bringing home a bride, and the ladies were on the tip-toe of expectation on the following Sunday to see what she was like. An involuntary smile was caused by the text, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." By no means diffident was the young lady who extracted a promise from her vicar that he would preach an appropriate sermon when she appeared in the church on the Sunday following her marriage. The text was somewhat a surprise: "Yea, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth."

Speaking of marriages, how amusing is the following incident: The incumbent of a populous parish in the midlands who never failed to have publication of numerous banns looked for the banns book, as usual after the second lesson. Feeling assured of finding it he commenced: "I publish the banns of marriage——" An awkward pause, during which he looked beneath the service books, "but could not see my little friend, because he was not there." "I publish the banns," repeated he, still fumbling, "between—between——" "Between the cushion and the seat, sir," shouted the clerk, looking up and pointing to the place where the book had been mislaid.

She Took Precautions.

"O mamma!" said the happy girl, pale and trembling, and holding a letter in her hand, "Harold has proposed at last!"

"Let me see," said mamma. "Yes, it is a genuine proposal. Put on your clothes, love. We'll go down to the lawyer's office and have a copy made, and Harold's signature certified by two or three witnesses."

"Why, mamma," exclaimed the fair young maiden, "why must we do that?"

"It is simply a proper precaution, daughter. This letter may, for all we know, be written in that new lover's ink, which is warranted to fade in twenty-four hours after using."—Idea.

WHAT IS

SCROFULA

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors;" which fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula, be sure to try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, sores breaking out on them in various places. My little boy, three years old, has been a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. I was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we have all taken it. The result is that all have been cured of the scrofula, my little boy being entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

The island has had many vicissitudes. One of them was the building of Fort Columbus. There was a fort there before,—Fort Jay; but the good people of New York thought this was not stout enough for a defense if the mother country, or France, were to send men-of-war sailing grimly up the harbor against the men of war who were stationed behind the walls of the island fortification.

Finally, our good fathers and grandfathers became so worried about it, that what did they do but go down to the island themselves, strip off their coats, and help to build Fort Columbus. It was a sight to see!—those goodly old gentlemen puffing over their patriotic toil.

Even the learned professors of Columbia College laid aside caps and gowns and went to help rear the stout walls which were to shield the city's defenders. And the boys—the young fellows! It was a jolly time for them. Not sorry were they to quit thumbing their Homers and Ciceros in order to become patriots. They liked it. It was fun. Of course, to have those heavy blocks of stone to carry all the time, to dig and wheel and hammer every day, wouldn't have been so enjoyable. But it was only for a time that they must put their shoulders to the wheel and help the country; and they did it with exuberant, boyish enthusiasm.—J. a Becket, in St. Nicholas.

The war wave has swept even Switzerland. Her military budget, which was 11,000,000 francs ten years ago, is now over 20,000,000, and an extra credit of 20,000,000 has just been demanded to re-arm her infantry with new small-bore repeating rifle.

A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

"We are startled constantly by the sudden death of some man who seemed the picture of health. He thought he was well. He had felt strange pains shooting through his body, but as they did not remain, he forgot them. His head pained him periodically. He was somewhat paler than common and unaccountably tired, but he felt comparatively well and vigorous. And yet, he suddenly died! It is a shame to our boasted civilization."

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and ask, Why? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the most terrible of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful, sudden strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural laws. The solemn and terrible fact is, that man and woman drag along, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the cause lay far back of all these things. The truth is that weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is: 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' I have seen numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where the preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been almost remarkable in its results. Use it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

DAMSON'S BALSAM

Breaks up a cold and stops a cough more speedily, certainly and surely than any other medicine.

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS.

DAMSON'S BALSAM prevents the growth to serious illness of a dangerous class of diseases that begin as mere trivial ailments, and are not to be neglected as such.

ANY persons have tested the efficacy of Adamson's Balsam. It allays inflammation and puts a stop to tickling in the throat.

THER remedies may be shown you and recommended as being "just as good" as Adamson's but remember the genuine is the best.

ONE need over die unless by neglect or old age if the resources of the healing art are completely, judiciously and timely applied.

INCE its introduction throughout New England, over twenty-five years ago, it has constantly won its way into public favor until now it is the universal decision that it is the best remedy for curing coughs, colds and pulmonary complaints including asthma.

Genuine made by F. W. Kinsman & Co., 343 Fourth Ave., New York. At all druggists.

To coming ice and snow I shut my eyes;
And to the edg'd wind's sighs
Across the winter's bound
How well I see a wafting hand, and hear
A rippling voice draw near:
Fresh May, fair May, old light heart Chaucer's May,
Thou beckonest me away!

* * * * * * *

I now am with thee, and we smoothly pass
Through small and twinkling grass,
While sought the watery sod beneath our feet,
And lean odors sweet.
Here stayest thou the wistful banks to dight
With violets blue and white,
(Sun colored violets, too); and wind flowers there
Thou givest to the air;
Gold dandilions thou for alms dost drop,
Which weanling lambs may crop;
The early thistle, sleeked by thy soft hand,
Looks gem like on the land.

I follow thee, as thou dost hasten on,
Where, piled with green and wan,
The slow, deliberate woods take in thy joy.
What handmaidens so coy
Are these that press upon thy progress glad?
Wild service snowy clad,
The cornel white, and white wayfarer's tree,
Are decked for thee;
And chaliced trillium, and spring beauty frail,
And blood root passion pale,
Furred liverwort, and cresses blending all.
Still others heed thy call:
The misty bluebell, rosy crane's bill, too,
And starred sweet William true,
And fragrant squirrel corn—all these are had
To grace thy progress glad.

I followed through the woods; I follow now
Thee into the orchard bough.
O listen—not a moment's space is mute
For the oriole's clear flute!
I listen—surely 'tis not Grief but Love
Speaks through yon moaning dove!)
I follow thee. Above us and around,
White tented is the ground.
Oh, why with semblance of the unloved snow
Drap'st thou the orchard row?
Laughing, thou sayest (and thy blue eyes laugh):
"'Tis winter's cenotaph!
To build an empty tomb—
An empty tomb, for he sleeps not beneath
The canopy and wreath!"
—Edith M. Thomas in Pittsburg Bulletin.

THE SIEGE OF BERLIN.

I was walking in the Champs Elysees with Dr. ——, speaking of the siege of Paris, when the doctor suddenly stopped, and, pointing to one of the imposing houses grouped about the Arc de Triomphe, said:

"Do you see those four closed windows above that balcony? In the early days of the month of August, that terrible month of August in 1870, so heavily freighted with disasters, I was summoned there to attend a very bad case of apoplexy. It was at the house of Col. Jouve, a cuirassier of the First Empire, an old man infatuated with glory and full of patriotism, who, at the beginning of the war had come to live in the Champs Elysees, in an apartment over that balcony—and for what purpose, do you suppose? To take part in the celebration when our troops should return in triumph.

"Poor old man! When the news of the battle of Wissembourg came he was about to rise from dinner. On reading the name of Napoleon at the end of that bulletin of defeat he fell as if struck down.

"I found the old soldier lying at full length on the carpet, his face purple with blood and the veins sluggish, as if he had been stunned by a heavy blow on the head. When standing he seemed to be a very large man; lying down his stature seemed immense. He had handsome features, superb teeth, a fleece of white curling hair and was 80 years old, although he did not appear to be more than 60. Near him was his granddaughter on her knees and in tears. She resembled him. Seeing them side by side made one think of two beautiful Greek medallions from the same mold—the one, however, being antique, with the contours partially effaced, the other fresh and clean cut.

"The grief of the child touched me. She was both the daughter and granddaughter of a soldier. Her father was a staff officer with MacMahon, and the sight of that grand old man lying before her called up in her mind another image not less terrible. I reassured her as best I could; but I really had little hope, for I knew that at his age one could hardly recover from such an illness. For three days the patient lay in the same condition of immobility and stupor.

"In the meantime news of the battle of Reischoffen reached Paris. You remember in what a strange way it came. Until evening we thought we had gained a great victory, that 20,000 Prussians had been killed and the crown prince made a prisoner. I know not by what miracle or magnetic current an echo of the national joy reached that poor old man, lying mute and helpless on his couch. On visiting him that night, I found him altogether another man. His eye was almost clear and his tongue less thick. He was able to smile at me and to stammer, 'Vic-to-ry.'

"'Yes, colonel,' I answered, 'a grand victory.'

"By degrees, as I related to him the details of MacMahon's success, I could see his features relax and his face brighten.

"When I was about to depart I found the young girl awaiting me at the door. She was pale and was sobbing.

"'But he is safe,' I said to her, taking her hand in mine.

"The poor child had scarcely the courage to answer me. The truth in regard to the battle of Reischoffen had just been made known. MacMahon was in retreat and his army was crushed.

"We looked at each other in consternation. She was in an agony of doubt as to the fate of her father. But I trembled for the life of the old man. I was sure that he would not be able to survive this second blow. But what was to be done? Clearly we must not destroy the joy, the illusion which had revived him. But it would be necessary to lie.

"'Oh, well, I will lie,' said the young girl, heroically, as she quickly brushed away her tears. Then, with a bright face, she returned to the chamber of her grandfather.

"It was a severe task which she had undertaken. At first, however, it was not so difficult, for the old man was very feeble and allowed himself to be deceived, as if he were a child; but with returning health his ideas became more clear. It became necessary to keep him informed of the movements of the armies, to write out military bulletins for him. It was indeed pitiful to see the beautiful girl bending night and day over a map of Germany in her efforts to plan a glorious campaign. Bazaine was at Berlin, Frossard in Bavaria, MacMahon at the Baltic. In all this she asked my counsel, and I gave her such advice as I could; but it was her grandfather, above all, who aided us most in making this imaginary invasion. He had taken part in so many conquests in Germany under the First Empire! He knew all the routes. 'That,' he would where they will grow. The plans were always fulfilled. Thus nothing was left undone that might help to keep up his spirits.

"Unfortunately, we had to capture cities and wage battles. We were never expeditious enough for him. He was insatiable. Each day, on arriving at the house, I heard news from the seat of war.

"'Doctor, we have taken Metz,' the young girl would say, as she received me with a sad smile, and, opening the door of her grandfather's room, I would hear a joyous voice crying:

"'We are advancing! Still advancing! In eight days we shall enter Berlin.'

"At that time the Prussians were only eight days' march from Paris.

"We considered whether it would not be better to take him into the country, but, on going abroad, the true condition of France would be made known to him, and I saw that he was altogether too feeble to endure the suffering which a knowledge of the truth would entail. It was decided, therefore, that he should remain where he was.

"Ah! I remember well how, on the first day of the siege, I ascended the stairs leading to Col. Jouve's apartment. I felt that anguish of heart which we all experienced when the gates of Paris were closed, when the war was brought under our very walls and the outskirts of the city were made our frontiers. I found the old man jubilant.

"'Well,' he said to me, 'the siege has been begun!'

"I looked at him in stupefaction, and at last said:

"'How, colonel, you know'——

"'His granddaughter turned quickly toward me.

"'Why, yes, doctor; that is the great news. The siege of Berlin has been begun.'

"She said this in a quiet manner as she plied her needle.

"'How could the colonel doubt this news? He could not hear the reports of the cannon at the forts. He could not see the gloomy and agitated city. All of it that met his eye, on the bed on which he lay, was a bit of the Arc de Triomphe. In his chamber the bric-a-brac, which had come down from the First Empire, helped to maintain his illusions. There were portraits of the marshals, engravings of battles, the king of Rome—he had his baby dress; and then there were the large stiff consoles, covered with imperial relics, with medallions, bronzes, a rock from St. Helena, under a glass globe; a miniature representing a lady, with closely curling hair, in a ball dress, and another representing the same dame in a yellow robe, with leg of mutton sleeves, a high girdle and all the inflexible stiffness which was grace in 1806. Ah, gallant colonel! It was this atmosphere of victory and conquest far more than what we were able to tell him which made him believe so naively in the siege of Berlin.

"From this time our military operations were more simple. To take Berlin required patience. From time to time, when the old man became too uneasy, a letter from his son would be read to him, an imaginary letter, of course, as none entered Paris at that time, and as, since the battle of Sedan, his son had been a prisoner in a German fortress. You can imagine the despair of that poor girl, without news from her father, whom she knew to be a prisoner, suffering from privations, ill perhaps, and yet she was obliged to make him write joyously in those letters, which, however, were a little short, as would naturally be the case with those of a soldier making a campaign and always advancing into the enemy's country. Sometimes the power to write deserted her, and weeks would go by without news. But the old man would at last become restless and cease to sleep. Then would come another letter from Germany. She would take it gayly to her grandfather, restraining her tears, and read it to him as she sat by his bed. The colonel would listen carefully, smile with a knowing air, approve, criticise and explain to us any doubtful passages.

"But what made him happiest of all was answering his son's letters. 'Never forget that you are a Frenchman,' he would say. 'Be generous to the poor people; do naught to make the invasion seem too hard for them to bear.' And his letter always ended with a charming little sermon on the proprieties to be observed, the politeness due to all ladies, and the true code of military honor which should be followed by the conquerors. With all he mingled some general reflections on politics and the conditions of peace which should be imposed on the conquered.

"He dictated to his granddaughter in a firm voice, and with so much frankness in his words and with such patriotic fire that it was impossible to listen to him without being moved.

"During all this time the siege had advanced daily, but not, alas! the siege of Berlin. It was a period of severely cold weather, the bombardment was in progress, and there were epidemics and famine. But, thanks to our care, to our efforts, to the indefatigable tenderness which surrounded him, the serenity of the old soldier was not for a moment disturbed.

"When at last my patient was allowed to eat bread and fresh meat you could not imagine anything more charmingly touching than one of his little breakfasts. The old man would sit up in his bed, happy and smiling, his napkin under his chin, and he, him his granddaughter, a little pale in consequence of her many cares, guiding his hands and giving him drink. Then, refreshed by his repast, there in his comfortable warm chamber, while the wintry north wind whistled without and the snow beat against the windows, the old soldier recalled his campaigns in the north, and recounted to us for the hundredth time that terrible retreat from Russia when there was nothing to eat but frozen biscuit and horse flesh.

"'Do you understand, granddaughter. We ate horse flesh!'

"Ah! she understood him well. For two months she had eaten scarcely anything else.

"From day to day thereafter, as he became convalescent, our task in caring for the patient became more difficult. The torpor of his senses and his limbs, which up to this time had served our purpose, began to disappear. Two or three times already had the terrific volleys fired from the Maillot gate made him start. It became necessary to invent a final victory for Bazaine at Berlin, and we told him that in honor of it these salutes were fired from the Invalides. One day, his bed having been pushed near the window, he plainly saw the National Guard as they were being massed in the Avenue de la Grande Armee.

"'I wonder why those troops are there?' said the old man, and we heard carry themselves badly, very badly!

"Nothing more happened at that time; but we perceived that henceforth it would be necessary to take the greatest precautions. Unfortunately we were not careful enough.

"One evening when I arrived at the house the young girl displayed great anxiety as she received me.

"'To-morrow they will enter the city,' she said to me.

"At that moment the door of her grandfather's room was opened. On thinking of the matter since then I have recalled the fact that his face wore an extraordinary expression that evening. It is probable that he had overheard us. We, however, had spoken of the Prussians, and he thought we had referred to the French, to their triumphal return, for which he had waited so long—MacMahon descending the avenue amid flowers and the blare of trumpets. Col. Jouve's son at the side of the marshal, and he, the old man, on his balcony, in grand military costume, as at Lutzen, saluting the tattered battle flags and the eagles blackened with powder.

"Poor old Col. Jouve! Without doubt he thought that we were trying to prevent him from witnessing the parade of our troops in order that he might avoid emotion that would be too severe for him. He spoke little to any one that evening. The next morning, however, at the very hour the Prussian battalions emerged timidly in the long way which leads from the Maillot gate to the Tuileries, the window was opened softly and the colonel appeared on the balcony wearing his casque and the gorgeous costume of an old cuirassier. I have often asked myself since what effort of the will, what renewal of youthful vigor, had thus put him on his feet and in harness. At any rate he was there, standing erect behind the railing of the balcony. He seemed surprised to find the avenues almost empty and silent, the shutters of the houses closed, Paris gloomy as a great lazaret, flags everywhere, but, strange to say, all white with red crosses, and no one there to receive our soldiers.

"For a moment he seemed to think that he had been deceived.

"But no! From a distance, behind the Arc de Triomphe, came a confused sound, and a long black line moved in sight. Then, one by one, the eagles on the casques gleamed in the sunlight, the drums began to beat, and under the Arc de l'Etoile, where the pavement sounded with the rhythmic tread of the legions and the clanking of sabers, burst forth the triumphal march of Schubert.

"Then a cry was heard, a terrible cry: 'To arms! to arms! The Prussians!' And the four Uhlans of the advance guard saw above them on the balcony a grand old man totter, throw up his arms and fall. This time Col. Jouve was dead."—Translated from the French of Alphonse Daudet for The New York Press by G. A. R. Haven.

Trifling With Safety Valves.

It is almost incredible that a man in his senses should walk up to a boiler which is discharging steam through its safety value, and deliberately close that only avenue through which the surplus steam might escape to prevent a dangerous over pressure.

And yet this thing is done with a frequency which is alarming. Only a few days since we learned from an inspector that he had found a battery of boilers, every safety valve upon which was wedged down by a pine plug, "to keep them from leaking;" and now come the particulars of an explosion in this state, reciting that one Arthur Leavitt, annoyed because the escaping steam from the safety valve of his boiler made his horses restless, fastened the valve down with a heavy weight. The natural consequence ensued, and, although swift retribution was meted out to the offender, he carried into eternity another and innocent man, while as a result of his criminal act two men are suffering serious injuries, a pair of valuable horses and a large factory are destroyed, and a prosperous business seriously interrupted.

The man who will deliberately tamper with the safety valve of a steam boiler is a first class rascal. If the consequences of his act reverted upon himself alone he might be forgiven, but there is no knowing how widespread and disastrous may be the results of his folly, and he should be placed in the same category as the man who would put a fuse to a powder magazine or lay the train to incite a conflagration.—Power and Steam.

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, when they first competed with the best makers of Europe, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues $22 TO $900.

ORGANS

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGS," by the use of which is secured the possible purity and evenness of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

A SUGGESTION ABOUT THE POSTMASTERSHIP.

Editor Chronicle: Please allow me through the columns of your paper to make a suggestion for the consideration of the citizens of Portsmouth in connection with the selection of our next postmaster. I would suggest that one of Portsmouth's quota be given that honor. There are in that quota, soldiers fully qualified for the position—both as to business experience and character—who gave long and faithful service during the late war, in honor of Portsmouth. Some of them have received neither political emolument nor preferment, since. As whatever is to be for the benefit of soldiers must come in the immediate future, what more fitting time than now to honor a Portsmouth soldier with this position?

We offer this both for the careful consideration of our citizens and as an act of JUSTICE.

ACCIDENTAL.

Saturday afternoon about 3:30 o'clock a horse attached to a buggy was drinking at the fountain on the Parade when something startled him, and he ran for the corner of High and Congress streets. A team was hitched to the post in front of Pettigrew's store, and the runaway took to the inside, striking the carriage against the post, breaking the whiffletree and some parts of the harness, left the carriage there, and kept on down the sidewalk toward Vaughan street. The animal, which belongs to a Newington man, was stopped near Stoddard's stable without having done any other harm.

Charles Moran, a young man about nineteen years old, living at the Creek, in attempting to pass from one car to another of the Pullman train from Boston to this city on Saturday evening, as the train was rounding the curve near Ipswich, Mass., fell beneath the train, which ran over him and cut off one of his feet just above the ankle. He was found insensible beside the track, but recovered sufficiently to give his name and say that he belonged in this city. He was sent to the Salem hospital on the Flying Yankee, which was flagged at Ipswich for that purpose. The unfortunate young man was employed in the boiler shop on the Portsmouth navy yard until the recent suspension of work there; his father is one of the employes in the Jones brewery.

POLITICAL MATTERS IN DOVER.

At the municipal election in Dover last week the total vote was 396 larger than at the municipal election in 1887, and 167 larger than in 1886. Mr. B. Frank Nealley, the republican candidate for mayor, received 1122 votes, the largest vote ever given to any person at a city election, although his majority was but seventy-one, owing to the large increase of the democratic vote caused by naturalization in ward five, and the earnest solicitation of the democrats to defeat Mr. Nealley, in consequence of his attitude on the temperance question, particularly as to the enforcement of the "nuisance" act. The city councils for the ensuing year will stand as follows: Board of aldermen, republicans eight, democrats two; common councilmen, republicans twelve, democrats three—a republican gain of two councilmen, one in ward one, the other in ward two. Thirty-six per cent of the voters whose names were on the checklists did not go to the polls. The republicans of ward five seem to have but a very moderate prospect of carrying that ward in the immediate future, as its vote at the late election was as follows: Nealley, republican, eleven; Pinkham, democrat, 320; democratic majority, 309, on a total vote of 331.

There was a notable absence of fat turkeys in the market Thanksgiving week. There were of course a few, but most of the birds, though very fair as to meat, were anything but fat.

Messrs. Robinson & Woodbury have leased the two lower stores on Long wharf of C. Morris Tredick, for the fish business. Mr. Tredick is putting up a building 50 x 80 feet, on the end of Long wharf, for Randall & Caswell, they having given up the remainder of the wharf. Work is being rapidly pushed on the repairs of Tredick's wharf, adjoining Commercial wharf; the building to be erected on this wharf will be 66 x 24 feet, and has been leased by E. Newton & Co. for a term of years.

Mr. Charles S. Drowne has purchased the spars of the schooner Oliver Dyer, wrecked on Jerry's point last week.

Mr. Charles W. Coleman has purchased the Ham house, corner of Water and South Mill streets, and will convert the ell on Water street into a grocery store, to which he will transfer his stock from the Emery store opposite, on Pleasant street. The Emery house will shortly be occupied by Mr. John Wood, for some time past a resident on the Davis farm at Sagamore Creek, who will open a grocery store in the new building now in course of construction between the house and the south pond.

"George," said the young girl shyly, "do you not find the time from Wednesday evening until Saturday evening dull and dreary?" George was a little absent-minded at the moment and said, "No, not very." "What," she exclaimed, "can you go three whole days without seeing me and not count the absence long?" "Ah, no, darling," he cried; "I didn't rightly catch your question. Why, every night when the twilight begins to fall and the birds flutter to their nests I take a quarter grain dose of morphine, hypodermically administered, to seek oblivion."—Epoch.

Two Hundred Dollars in Gold.

We are authorized by advice received from I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, to say that they have for three years offered poultry raisers, premiums payable in gold coin, for the best results obtained from using Sheridan's Powder to make hens lay. Their object has been to satisfy themselves beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the claim made by them that "Nothing on earth will make hens lay like Sheridan's Powder," was positively true. The hundreds of testimonials sent them from people who have used the powder, prove the statement; so that it seems folly to again offer premiums; but so many persons, especially women who kept a few hens, have made such good showing in former trials, and been beaten by some one else by a slight fraction in average, that in justice they ought to have another trial.

Johnson & Co. have devised a plan this year, to overcome that trouble in a measure, by offering twice as much cash and six times as many gold coin premiums as last year. The larger premium is $50.00 It is well worth trying for. If you miss that, there are twenty-three more chances for some other premium.

But supposing a competitor did not get any premium, they would still have the satisfaction of getting a lot of eggs to sell at a good round price. The retail price for eggs in Boston and New York last year reached as high as 50 to 60 cents per dozen. It pays to use Sheridan's Powder when eggs sell for even 10 cents. One of the competitors last year wrote as follows: "I am well paid in eggs without a premium. I will cheerfully recommend Sheridan's Condition Powder to poultry raisers generally for egg production, and all diseases of hens. I can now say confidently that it will beat anything I ever tried to make hens lay. I was surprised at the end of the eight weeks trial." He was evidently satisfied, and well he might have been; for during eight weeks he got from 30 hens, 1420 eggs, which at the average of prices above would amount to $65.08.

Any person can compete. Johnson & Co. will send full particulars free to any one, whether they order powder or not.

For 50 cents in stamps, I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., will send to any P. O. address two 25-cent packs, five packs for $1.00; or, for $1.20, a 2 1-4 pound can of powder sent postpaid; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send for full particulars.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Second Session.

SENATE PROCEEDINGS.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The senate was called to order at noon. The reading of the President's message occupied an hour and twenty minutes. Those portions bearing on tariff revision, the treasury surplus, the fishery troubles, and the West incident, were listened to with very close attention and interest by fourteen republican senators and about an equal number of democrats. The other portions seemed to have few attentive listeners, and the reading gradually cleared the galleries. The message was on motion of Mr. Hoar laid on the table and ordered printed.

The senate at 2:55 P. M. adjourned until tomorrow, after notification by Mr. Frye that he would call up the Union Pacific settlement bill tomorrow, and by Mr. Chandler that he would ask for action on his resolution to investigate the Louisiana election of April last, and by Mr. Allison that he would ask the senate to proceed with the tariff bill, and would even, if discussion became too protracted, call it up during morning hours of the session

HOUSE PROCEEDINGS.

The President's reference in his message to the Sackville-West incident provoked laughter from the Republican side, but no counter demonstration by the Democrats. From this point, interest in the message slackened. Mr. Mills was the only member who paid the slightest attention to the further reading, and the noise of conversation was so great that this was no easy task. When at 3:15 the reading was completed, Mr. Mills offered a resolution which was agreed to, referring the message to the committee of the whole, and providing for its printing. The House then adjourned.

The Speakership.

There are now in the field three open candidates for speaker, McKinley of Ohio, Cannon of Illinois, and Reed of Maine. It is only within a day or two that Reed and McKinley have acknowledged themselves candidates. Now they are willing to admit they are "in the hands of their friends." Friends of the other candidates say that Reed is handicapped by the fact that he comes from the east. It was well enough, they say, to give him a complimentary caucus nomination when the republicans were in a minority, but they do not think the party can give the speakership to Maine under the existing political conditions. There are several dark horses in the field, ready to make a race if the leaders are crowded off the track.

Comments on the Message.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—Representatives of the Associated Press today endeavored to obtain from prominent members of the Senate an expression of their views upon the President's message.

Mr. Hoar said "About all I can say is that it embodies the utterances of a disappointed politician."

Mr. Sherman said "The latter part of the message consists of a review of the work of the different branches of the government, and there is nothing striking about it. The first part I did not hear."

Mr. Cullum said "Of necessity he dies game on his tariff views; and in his reference to international affairs he runs into a great scold."

Mr. Frye said "The only part of the communication which interested me was its reference to the fisheries question. I am now trying to solve the problem therein. The President states that there has been nothing of moment occurring on that subject since March last. Why does he then so severely criticise us for not passing the retaliatory measures?"

Mr. Manderson said "I was not particularly struck with what I heard of the message, but can say, however, if Mr. Cleveland will visit the northwest when he has more leisure, he will find that our farmers do not endorse his utterances on the tariff question."

Mr. Cockerell said "I cannot say much about the message until I shall have read it over. Generally speaking it impressed me very favorably."

Mr. Ransom thought it was, as all Mr. Cleveland's public communications have been, a very able and concisely framed instrument.

Mr. Teller said "I think the first part of the message is full of spleen. There was no silver lining to the cloud that overhung Cleveland when he wrote it. I do not believe the country is in so deplorable a condition as he would have us believe. As to the administration of the several departments I want to say in answer to the President, that the post-office department was never in worse condition than it is today."

Bold Attempt at Robbery.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SIOUX CITY, DAK., Dec. 3.—A bold attempt was made early Sunday morning to rob the safe in the office of the Booge packing house. About one o'clock four masked men rushed upon Thomas Coleman, the watchman, and overpowered him. A sack was tied over his head, and he was bound hand and foot. As the watchman did not report, the engineer, assistant engineer and tank-men went successively to see what was wrong, and each in turn was seized and bound like Coleman. The burglars worked hard to open the safe, but at four o'clock broke a drill and gave up the job, after going through the pockets of the men and securing $65.

Attempted Robbery of a Sporting Man.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Phil Daly, a well known sporting man of this city, was the object at an attempt at robbery today. By appointment he called on Addie Stanton, who lived at 406 Fourth avenue with a female companion. He had on his person $3000 in cash, and $30,000 in bonds, which he was intending to deposit. While at the house two men came in, and one of them levelling a revolver at Daly, told him to throw up his hands. Daly made a rush and grappled with his assailant, and the weapon was discharged, the ball grazing Daly's temple. The men fled and have not been apprehended. The women were arrested, but deny knowledge of any plot against Daly.

NEWCASTLE, COL., Dec. 3.—A terrific explosion occurred in the Midland mine at six P. M., in which one man was killed and eight seriously wounded, of whom several will die.

What the South Wants; Gen. Longstreet has an Interview with Gen. Harrison.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 3. — The President-elect was called on this afternoon by Gen. James Longstreet of Georgia, accompanied by Hon. E. A. Angier of Atlanta and E. C. Atkins of this city. Mr. Harrison conversed half an hour or more with the famous soldier. This evening Mr. Harrison dined at the residence of Mr. Atkins. The other guests were Gen. Longstreet, E. A. Angier, Dr. Wilson and half a dozen Indianapolis gentlemen. Gen. Longstreet tells the reporters, "There is not the least bit of political significance in my visit." When asked what the South wanted, the veteran laughingly replied "The South wants everything. It wants the earth, if it can get it. But it wants, more than anything else, a good, honest friendly spirit manifested toward it. We simply want to be treated kindly and considerately."

Protestant Conference.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—The first of the series of meetings under the auspices of the Protestant clergymen to consider the best means of keeping their religious work abreast of the increasing population of this city, was held at Chickering hall tonight, a large audience being present. Hon. John Jay presided. Mr. Jay introduced Rev. James M. King of the Methodist Episcopal church, who spoke. He showed that while the saloons had kept a numerical pace with growing population the Protestant churches had remained nearly stationary or had fallen off. The saloons controlled 40,000 votes and were open day and night.

Republicans Elect their Mayor by Five Majority.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Dec. 3.—Today the new city elected George Grant, the Republican candidate for mayor, by five majority, in a total vote of 1515. The board of aldermen stands 4 reps., 1 dem. Common council, 12 reps., 3 dems.

An Important Decision Regarding Insolvent Banks and Depositors.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—Judge Shepard rendered an opinion this morning on the application of the creditors of the Traders bank, to have money, checks and drafts to the amount of nearly $50,000 returned to them because they were deposited with the bank when it was known to its officers to be insolvent. The court denies the petitions in all cases in which checks were deposited and money collected before actual failure, but grants the prayers for restitution in cases wherein checks were deposited before failure, but payment was stopped before collection, but where collections were made by the receiver after the bank had closed its doors. The ruling, in effect is that the bank is not trustee for depositors for collection of checks, and that transactions of this character which remain uncompleted at the time of the act of insolvency, cannot be completed for the benefit of the defunct corporation.

Steamer Goliah Spoken.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 3.—Bark Camelia, which arrived at North Sydney, C. B., today, reports when off Country Harbor she spoke the steamer Goliah, broken down, and trying to reach port. The Goliah was from Halifax for Pictou.

A Murderer Lynched.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 3.—Ben Cannady, the murderer of James Philbeck, was taken from Shelby jail early yesterday morning and lynched. Philbeck was a white farmer living near Shelby, and was called to his door by an unknown party and shot dead, and his house robbed, the murderer first shooting down Philbeck's wife. Cannady confessed to having committed the crime.

Mr. Bright's Condition.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Bulletin tonight says John Bright's fever is increasing.

The London Press on the Message.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—The Morning Post, commenting on the President's message, says: "If America is really inclined to resume negotiations on the fisheries dispute, she will find English ministers animated only by a sincere desire to promote a final satisfactory adjustment which Cleveland mentions, while they are unable to hold the same opinion as Cleveland as to what the just demands of comity are."

The Daily News says "It would express more regret for Cleveland's acrimonious reference to the dismissal of Sackville if Salisbury had not set up an example for Cleveland, and thinks he evidently has Salisbury's fatal gift of a bitter tongue. In other respects the message seems to be the most powerful performance the President has accomplished, namely, the feat of saying something both new and true about protection." The News further remarks that the message is likely to become a household word for the orators of Hyde Park and Clerkenwell. The fisheries question, it thinks, will have a smaller chance for settlement under Harrison than under Cleveland, but having only one great party to please, the chances for judgment on its merits may be greatly improved.

The Coming Oarsman "Got There."

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

TORONTO, ONT., Dec. 3.—Forty thousand persons gave William O'Connor a reception here tonight, and it eclipsed that given Hanlan on his return from the American Centennial. Standing on the top of a huge structure laden with torch bearers and flags, and drawn by four horses, and preserving equilibrium by resting his left hand on a cross formed by the oars with which he won the Washington race, O'Connor was kept constantly busy doffing his hat in response to the deafening plaudits that greeted him all along the line of procession from the railway station to the Horticultural Gardens. There he was presented with an address and a check for $1000, and a purse containing $300 in gold. He made a neat reply.

Movements of Henry George.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Henry George will attend the annual conference of the committee on taxation and ground rents on Tuesday and Wednesday, and a meeting at Rev. Joseph Parker's on Thursday; and will sail for America on Saturday.

A General Strike of Foreign Colliers.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 3.—The Workingmen's Congress at Chatelet has decided upon a general immediate strike for the colliers.

DOVER.

MONDAY, Dec. 3d.

About 9:30 last evening a gentleman from Great Falls, while passing the corner of Portland and Main streets, was set upon by a gang of young roughs and severely handled, although after a hard tussle he succeed in getting away whole. This is not the first or second time this has been done; the worst gang of young toughs in the city infest this locality, and make things decidedly uncomfortable for any stranger who happens along.

The filling of the new Garrison Hill reservoir began Saturday noon, and things went smoothly until yesterday, when the pipe burst, and the work stopped. The reservoir was nearly full and had not the break occurred would have been filled in a few hours. The pipe is being repaired and the work will be finished today.

Mr. D. E. Smith, manager of the Telephone Exchange in this city, is soon to leave for Tennessee, where he has a lucrative position waiting his arrival.

As the firemen are to have their annual ball on New Year's, the Sawyer Rifles have been obliged to change the date of their first annual. It will be held about the middle of January.

And now it is rumored that Contractor Dacey is to have an investigation. He claims that the measurement of the streets was not as correct as it might have been.

Wm. Sterns, who recently lost his valuable horse "Billy," has received from New York a very fast one to fill his place.

The hydrants about town were tested today by Engineer Blake.

Geo. E. Barney has opened the store formerly occupied by the Atlantic Tea Co., as an insurance office.

The foundation for the now stable adjoining the jail is being laid.

Wm. S. Reynolds has opened a jewelry store in Morrill's block.

Schooner J. Frank Seavey came up the river today for the first time. She is the latest addition to the Dover Navigation Co's fleet, and is a fine looking craft.

Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Patterson of Manchester are in town, visiting the parents of Mrs. Patterson.

Dr. M. B. Sullivan is suffering from a severe throat trouble, and has gone to his home in Lewiston, Me.

James Morgan has entered Printy's tonsorial parlors.

Jos. Blackburn opened a class in shorthand at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms tonight.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Frank P. Brooks took place this afternoon.

A dividend of ten per cent has been declared on the schooner J. Chester Wood by the Navigation Co.

The new shifter to be used in the B. & M. yard has arrived.

The contest for the officer's sword rests between Lieut. Rollins of the Guards and Capt. Brown and Lieut. McDuffee of the Rifles.

Dr. Watson went to Auburn, Me., today.

Maj. W. H. Trickey, formerly railway postal clerk on the B. & M., was in town this morning.

TUESDAY, DEC. 4, 1888.

The CHRONICLE desires to publically express its deep obligations and thanks to its neighbor the Daily Evening Times for so generously placing its press at our service yesterday morning when an accident prevented our press from being used. Through the kindness and courtesy thus extended we were enabled to print and distribute the CHRONICLE at the usual hour.

The President's Message.

The first impression upon reading the President's message is that he has a grievance against the country which has so affected his judgment that he can only look at public affairs through darkened glasses. The tenor and tone of the document show clearly that it was written by a disappointed man incapable of rising above his personal feelings. We shall be very much mistaken if the verdict of the country is not that this is decidedly the weakest state paper yet sent to Congress since Mr. Cleveland became President. It fails to grasp the situation, or look beyond a mere party question in discussing public affairs. It is a document written by a politician and from a politician's standpoint, and not from that of a statesman. We shall notice the message more at length hereafter.

The revolt in the ranks of the Grand Army in Indiana seems to find little sympathy outside of that state, notwithstanding the "national" importance assigned to the movement by its promoters at the start. Many prominent democrats in the order here in the east say they will take no part in the movement, and have no idea that it will amount to more than a brief sensation. They distinctly contradict the assertion of Gen. Palmer that the Grand Army is but an adjunct of the republican party, and say the results of the election have not in the least shaken the fealty of the great majority of the democratic veterans to the organization. It is possible that the defeat of Gen. Palmer, a gallant soldier and popular citizen of Illinois, for governor of his state, to which position he was nominated on the democratic ticket, may have caused him to see more of partisanship in the Grand Army than really exists, even in the untamed west; as to the order here in the sober and methodical east, we are certain that the charge brought against it is unjust, and cannot be substantiated by facts. We personally know somewhat of the great good done in the most silent and unpretentious manner by the organization in this section of the country, and should deeply regret to see it supplanted by two "strictly non-partisan charitable associations," one composed wholly of democrats and the other wholly of republicans!

Hon. Don M. Dickinson, postmaster general of the Cleveland civil-service-reform administration, seems from his own showing, as made in his annual report of the management of the affairs of his department, to have done pretty well in the line of "taking the boys in and letting them warm their toes," considering that he is, of course, a reformer like the rest of the members of the Cleveland cabinet. There were 12,288 postmasters appointed during the year, of which appointments 1244 were made upon removals, and 6521 upon "resignations and commissions expired." That is a very convenient muddling up of the accounts; how most of the "resignations" came to be made is well enough understood, but it might be interesting to know just how many of such resignations there were in the lumped total of 6521.

The Supreme Court of South Carolina has decided that over a million of dollars worth of railroad and township bonds were unconstitutionally issued, and consequently worthless. The bonds are held largely in New York. The decision is a sweeping one, and probably ends railway development in that state by means of outside capital.

President-elect Harrison is reported as having recently told Senator Farwell that he did not intend to make a promise to appoint any man to office for some time to come. The appointments will be made only upon due deliberation and careful examination.

The pilot chart of the north Atlantic ocean for December has been issued by the United States hydrographic office. This publication is unique, no other government issuing anything of the kind. It gives a vast amount of information regarding the position of derelicts, sunken wrecks and other obstructions to navigation reported during the previous month, shows the tracks of storms, gives the full list of notices to mariners issued during November, indicates the probable safe routes for steamships between New York and Europe for December, gives a forecast of December weather, with the storm card for the Northern Hemisphere, etc. The publication of this chart is one of the government expenditures which should be ungrudgingly met, as the chart is a recognized aid to navigation, both transatlantic and coastwise, of great and steadily increasing value.

The next step toward fame and glory for Miss Gillette, the young Vermont lady who stuffed turkeys with notes asking for presents from republicans in the shape of jewelry, and who succeeded in getting a fine gold watch from His Honor the democratic Mayor of Boston (there is an election pending there,) is to let herself out to some Dime Museum. She can make more than seven dollars a week at that service. Respectfully submitted.

The London Spectator points out that the best ground for hope of the safety of Stanley is the fact that his death would have made so great a stir throughout all east Africa that we should have been almost certain to hear of it through the native tribes.

Where Was "The Place Called Calvary"?

From an illustrated article under the above title by Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robinson in the Century we quote the following: "The only representative site for Calvary now offered pilgrims in Jerusalem is found in a couple of rooms inside the old edifice; one is owned and exhibited by the Greeks, another by the Latins. These share the same disability; both—since the church is already so full of traditions on the ground floor—had to go up a flight of stairs into free space nearer the roof. And there it is, amidst tawdry curtains and gilt bedizenments of candles and altar-shrines, that this ancient spot upon which the cross of Jesus Christ rested is pointed out, and the veritable hole is shown in which it was planted. And the thieves' crosses—a decorous but rather inadequate distance of five feet between them on the right and left of the middle one—are ranged alongside. And down underneath, far below across some intervening space left by grading away the actual soil of the hill, so we are sagely told, is the grave of Adam! Tradition has related that at the crucifixion of Jesus some drops of blood fell through upon Adam's skull and raised him suddenly to life; and there are commentators who declare that so the prophecy quoted by the apostle Paul (Ephesians v. 14) was well fulfilled: 'Awake, thou Adam that sleepest (for thus the former versions read in the text), and arise from the dead, for Christ shall touch thee.' The art-people say that this is the origin of the fact that in those early rude representations of the death of our Lord a skull is introduced.

"Can any man of sensibility be blamed if he makes an imperious demand that something more—something else at least—shall greet him in answer to his question, Where was our Lord crucified? If there should be no other advantage gained by the acceptance of a new site as now proposed, this would be enough; it would put an end to the awkward and offensive impostures daily exhibited under the roof of that filthy old church. They are a standing mockery of the claims of the Christianity they profess to uphold. Those ceremonies of Easter at the tomb where our Lord is declared to have been buried are a caricature of an event so glad and holy. The struggle around the flames that are chemically forced out of the smoky hole in the sepulcher, so that devotees in frantic zeal may light their lamps, brings death from the trampling of thousands, fills the house with howls that put heathenism to shame, and sends true believers away with an infinite disgust and horror deep in their hearts. How long must such a scandal be patiently endured?"

Blinks—Hold on! What's your hurry? Jinks—Nearly driven to death. Half a bushel of letters to answer this morning and no one to help do it. "What has become of that pretty girl typewriter you had?" "She's no use any more; she went and got married." "You don't say so. Whom did she marry?" "Me."—Philadelphia Record.

SCROFULA

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors;" which fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula, be sure to try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, sores breaking out on them in various places. My little boy, three years old, has been a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. I was advised to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we have all taken it. The result is that all have been cured of the scrofula, my little boy being entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N.J.

100 Doses One Dollar

A Dead Give-Away.

One of this year's crop of brides was just starting forth upon her bridal journey, says the New York Evening Sun. Every precaution had been taken to conceal the fact that she was a bride. She wore a plain, dark dress and black hat. Neither her gloves nor her boots were glaringly new and unwrinkled. Much pains had been taken with the groom.

"I don't think, Augustus," said the bride complacently, as they drove to the station, "that we could possibly attract the least remark. Nobody would notice me, and you positively look quite shabby."

Augustus did not seem to be as elated at this assurance as he was expected to be, but the bride went on cheerfully:

"Now, when we get in the train you must make the valise very prominent, it looks so dingy. Put it where it's right in the way of my feet, and don't seem to notice. And be sure not to help me off with my jacket, but let me manage the best I can myself. And, oh! you'd better go right out and buy a newspaper and read it attentively. Don't forget now!"

Augustus promised to remember all these instructions, but as they waited in the crowd to get to their seats in the train, in spite of their ostentatiously absent and indifferent manner, everyone gave them a second look. The bride observed this and was much annoyed, for she could not see why they should attract attention. But the mystery was solved when the porter, who showed them to their seat, whispered to Augustus:

Customer—"I see you advertise something new in coffee. What is it?" Grocer—"Coffee."—Judge.

A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

Extracts From a Remarkable Lecture Delivered by Dr. R. R. Hammond, Before the National Scientist's Convention.

shame to our boasted civilization."

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and why is it? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the most terrible of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful, sudden strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural laws. The solemn and terrible fact is, that men and women drag along, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the cause lay far back of all these things. The truth is that weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is: 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' I have seen numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where the preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been almost remarkable in its results. I use it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

DAMSON'S BALSAM

Breaks up a cold and stops a cough more speedily, certainly and surely than any other medicine.

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS, It cures all lung and throat diseases that can be reached by human aid.

DAMSON'S BALSAM prevents the growth to serious illness of a dangerous class of diseases that are as mere trivial ailments, and are not to be neglected as such.

ANY persons have tested the efficacy of Adamson's Balsam. It allays inflammation and puts a stop to tickling in the throat.

THESE remedies may be either your physician's recommended as being "just as good" as Adamson's but remember the genuine is the best.

ONE need ever die unless by accident or old age if the resources of the healing art are completely, judiciously and timely applied.

INCE its introduction throughout New England, over twenty-five years ago, it has constantly won its way into public favor until now it is the universal decision that it is the best remedy for curing coughs, colds and pulmonary complaints including asthma.

MUST THE NOSE GO?

A Claim That the Olfactory Sense Diminishes as Man Progresses.

The future of the human nose looks dark. A scientific gentleman has been making this non-partisan organ the subject of his careful investigation and makes a distressing report. He argues that it is only a question of time when all sorts of noses, the Roman, the anti-Roman, the snub and the turn up, will have permanently disappeared from the human face. The Philadelphia Telegraph presents this abstract of the report:

"When the sense of smell vanishes altogether—as, it is affirmed, will infallibly be the case one day—the organ itself is bound to follow its example sooner or later. It is, no doubt, a fact that the olfactory sense is much keener in the savage than in the civilized man, and it is reasonable to conclude that the more we progress in civilization the duller the senses will grow, and as nature never preserves useless organs, when the nose loses its power of smelling the nose 'must go.'"

A fair count would disclose the presence of a large number of noses which their respective owners hold in the highest esteem. Amid the changes of fashion, the nose has firmly held its place, and long ago it came to be regarded as a staple—not for a day only, but for all time.

And must the nose really go? Well, if it must we pity that noseless age that lies ahead of us, for it is certain to find itself seriously embarrassed. In certain parts of our country sacred and secular music is sung through the nose, those indulging in the exercise arguing that that's the true way to sing. But with the decline and fall of the nose this school of music must necessarily break up, and unless another school take its place, what's to become of the fine art of singing? Equally obvious is it that when faces come without noses, eyeglasses will have to be held in their place by strips of sticking plaster or a rubber band going around the head. Such wretched devices will be far from ornamental, even if the strips are edged with pink gimp and the bands are accentuated with yellow rosettes. Consequently, noseless persons with failing eyesight will grow nervous—let us trust that they will not grow profane as they sigh for the noses of their ancestors. It is unnecessary to observe that the moment the nose goes out florists will be forced into bankruptcy. The majority of people buy flowers to inhale their delicious fragrance. But in order to inhale one must have an inhaler. An attempt has been made to give the blind some idea of colors by means of certain colors, scarlet for example, being expressed by the blare of a trumpet. But we believe that no educator has ever conceived it possible to make a noseless man smell with his ears or his eyes, or even with his wisdom teeth. Hence we feel warranted in asserting that, let the nose be discarded and florists will not be able to pay ten cents on a dollar. Will an important department of the crockery business also suffer? Inevitably. There will be little or no call for vases in that evil day of no noses. For the average lover of bric-a-brac collects vases in order that when the girl that does the dusting shatters or breaks them "the scent of the roses may hang round them still." But who wants the scent of roses hanging round a vase—but the reader will catch our meaning.

The subject is so painful that we stop right here. As has been so beautifully remarked—we quote from memory and may not give an exact quotation—"while the nose lasts we have high, exciting, gratifying prospects spread out before us and our children. Beyond that, I seek not to penetrate the veil."—New York Tribune.

Cold Weather and Health.

There is no greater fallacy than the opinion held by many—particularly the young, and strong, and vigorous—that winter, especially a sharp, frosty one, with plenty of ice and snow, is the most healthy season of the year. Very few persons seem to realize the facts, that cold is the condition of death, whilst heat is that of life. In warm as well as in cold climates, it is our unconscious effort to maintain our bodily heat at a temperature of 98 degs. that wears us out. To this temperature, called "blood heat," every cubic inch of oxygen that serves to vitalize our blood must be raised by our own bodily heat or life ceases. Since in cold weather the maintenance of a sufficiently elevated bodily temperature becomes very often a difficulty too great for our strength, the advent of a severe winter is quite as much to be dreaded as the visitation of a pestilence. Besides this, children should not be sent out to walk of a morning before breakfast in a cold wind, especially with an empty stomach, as they get chilled, and it does the system a great deal of harm. A like rule should be observed in malarious countries, that on no urgency should children or grown up people go out in the early morning without a cup of tea, coffee or chocolate taken beforehand.—Herald of Health.

Origin of Blood Oranges.

The blood orange is a mere variety of the sweet orange obtained by cultivation, and appears first to have been raised by the Spanish gardeners in the Philippine Islands, from the capital of which (Manila) it, together with the well known cigars, formed at one time one of the chief articles of export. On its first appearance in Europe it excited a considerable sensation, and, in the last century, very high prices were demanded for the trees which bore the wonderful fruit. None, however, now come to us from Manila, our supply being derived almost entirely from Malta, where great pains and attention are bestowed upon their cultivation. It was for a long time supposed—and, indeed, the idea is not yet quite extinct—that blood oranges were produced by the grafting of the orange with the pomegranate; but there is not the slightest foundation for this belief—New York Star.

"Everybody Borrows."

Haggard is sensitive. He has publicly denied having borrowed from Moore in writing "She," and from a Frenchman in writing "Mr. Meeson's Will." He is very sensitive, so that his friends have to come to his defense. This is not worth the while. Everybody borrows, either consciously or unconsciously. Ideas are current coin; and he only is original who can stamp his personality on a few. If he have no personality, he never can be original. When Longfellow was charged with having plagiarized, he answered nothing. His publisher fretted, and Mr. Longfellow simply said: "Does our publisher pay his bills?" Coming from the publisher pressed it on him, and something be done. "Does my book sell well?" repeated the poet. It is all he would say. He never entered on a line of self defense. It would have been folly if he had. The public does not continue to buy what it believes has been stolen.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

He Prefers Experience.

A writer who is a good observer, and has had considerable experience, thus defines the difference between the old and young. There is, he says, a wide gulf between youth and ripe old age, hence the proverb, "You can't put an old head on young shoulders." This proverb was written by an old man; youth had nothing to do with it. Youth don't believe the old man knows anything, and the old man expects continually that the young man will be along saying, "I didn't know it was loaded." The wise young man will seek the counsel of those ripe in years and experience and avoid the mistakes in life. But Young America will continue to figure in the divorce courts, and compound his debts at ten cents on the dollar. He don't want to be told that it is loaded; he prefers to find out himself. He gets there, and pays the piper generally.

Monkeys as Coin Testers.

The Siamese ape is said to be in great request among Siamese merchants as a cashier in their counting houses. Vast quantities of base coin obtain circulation in Siam, and the faculty of discrimination between good money and bad would appear to be possessed by these gifted monkeys in such an extraordinary degree of development that no human being, however carefully trained, can compete with them. The cashier ape meditatively puts into his mouth each coin presented to him in business payments, and tests it with grave deliberation. His method of testing is regarded in commercial circles as infallible; and, as a matter of fact, his decision is uniformly accepted by all parties interested in the transaction.—London Tid Bits.

Keeping Close to the Schedule.

England has a record for punctuality of passenger trains that is worthy of emulation by some, if not all, American railway companies. Out of a total of 100,000 passenger trains on the Great Eastern road, for the first six months of this year, over 56 per cent. were absolutely punctual, 37 per cent. were less than five minutes late, 4 per cent. were over five and less than ten minutes late, and 3 per cent. were over ten minutes late in arriving at their destination.—Chicago Herald.

Fitting Them to Be Soldiers.

France has now a National league for the promotion of physical education, designed to fit her citizens to be soldiers. The programme which has been completed includes outdoor games throughout the land, for which the local authorities will set apart a "green" whereon the children shall regularly "play."—New York Sun.

Black Hills Horses.

The Black Hills country is making a name for itself as a horse growing country, and it is predicted that within ten years it will be as famous for its horses as the Blue Grass region. It already boasts many fine horses of the best breeds known in the world.—New York Evening World.

Growth in Machinery.

There is arising here and there a note of protest against the growing subservience of society to machinery. Mr. William Morris, in The November Fortnightly, bewails its deteriorating effect, but is not without hope that there will be in some sort a saving revival of handicraft. The pleasure which the craftsman once took in his work, the individuality he put in it, is gone. A great element of happiness has disappeared from his daily life, and occupation once interesting is dull and cheerless. The machine feeder has not the chance to grow to the status of the skilled artisan. He is not lifted by his work, but depressed by it.

Individuality and the exercise of taste are denied to the purchaser of goods. "You want a hat, say, like you wore last year," but you must take the one that fashion and the machine turned out this year. You want a piece of furniture not "blotched over with idiotic sham ornament," but you cannot get it without paying a prohibitive price for it. "A serious evil and degradation of human life" result from the utilitarian ugliness "produced by machinery" in everything which the labor of man deals with.

Under the influence of machine production the line between employers and employes is accentuated. The employing class is one "of slaveholders," with its choice as to mode of life "limited by the necessity of finding constant livelihood and employment for the slaves who keep it alive." There is a tyrannous condition here which breeds discontent. Just how emancipation is to be brought about is not clear. The effectiveness of machinery cannot be spared. But the fact that the grumbling about its evils has set in portends a desirable reaction.—New York World.

Everything Done by Hand.

It is human muscle that cultivates Japan. Cattle and horses are no part of Japanese country scenes, and an American plow, which I saw in a Tokio store, was pointed out as a curiosity. If it is used at all, it will probably be pulled by men. As it is, the land is made fallow with a sort of mattock, which is heavy, and which has a blade about six inches wide and two feet long. The rice fields of Japan are living monuments of human labor, and every grain of rice you eat represents a certain amount of human muscle. The fields must be flooded again and again with water, and the plants are transplanted from their first growth into rows. I have seen men and women by scores bending their backs and hoeing this rice, and I am told that their wages run from 10 to 20 cents a day.

Human muscle carries nearly all the burdens of Japan. Brown skinned, slant eyed men and women, with baskets containing several bushels each upon their backs, pass by my window as I write, and others follow with great loads balanced across their shoulders on long poles. Six-year-old boys carry two four gallon buckets of water in this way, and loads of heavy merchandise are pushed along the road in carts. Two or three men are harnessed up in front. Several push behind with both head and hands. Their muscles stand out like whipcords as they work. The sweat rolls down their brown skin in streams, and their

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as a demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, they have received the highest award of merit, with best make of organs from the juries of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues $22 TO $900, free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which greatest possible power and richness of tone, together with great musical endurance, they claim to have secured a decided advantage over all other pianos. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

TUESDAY, DEC. 4, 1888.

W. C. T. U.

The quarterly conference of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in this city on Wednesday, Dec. 5th, at the Baptist church on State street. The forenoon session will open at 10:30, with devotional exercises. Afternoon session at 1:30. Basket collation at noon. There will be a parlor meeting in the evening, to which all are invited.

G. A. R.

The annual election of officers of the posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Hampshire, occurs at the first stated meeting in December, and the installation of officers will take place at the first stated meeting in January, unless it is done publicly, in which case the meeting must be a special one. Delegates to the Department Encampment are also elected at the above mentioned meeting in December. There are eighty-eight posts in New Hampshire, who send a total of two hundred and three delegates to the encampment, Storer Post, No. 1, of Portsmouth, sending eight. A thorough inspection of each post in the department is called for, to be made prior to January 1st, 1889. Storer Post will be inspected by Comrade John W. Locke, of Post No. 21, of Seabrook.

MUSIC HALL.

The Bennett-Moulton Opera Co. opened at Music hall last evening. The company is as strong as ever, and the entertainment afforded was excellent, both musically and dramatically. This evening "The Two Thieves" is to be the attraction. See advertisement.

PERSONAL.

—Last Friday was the eightieth birthday of Hon. James W. Emery of this city. Mr. Emery exhibits more vitality and mental activity than most men many years his junior, and we trust his form may be a familiar object on our streets for many years to come.

—Mr. Charles Trainer of Boston passed Sunday in this city as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles K. Wadham.

—Mr. Joseph Hawes of Boston was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Decator of Middle street on Sunday.

—Mr. Horace P. Montgomery of Middle street has been confined to the house a few days by sickness.

Dr. Gage's lecture in the Congregational chapel on Middle street this evening, on "Berlin and the Royal Family of Germany," will begin at eight o'clock. Tickets can be procured at the door. The lecture will be very interesting, and the charity to be benefitted is a most worthy one.

The schooner Grace K. Green, Seaward master, of this port, which has been lying at the navy yard several weeks having slight repairs made to her spars and hull, sailed on Monday.

The old bell tower on top of the Boston & Maine railroad station in this city has been taken down.

Revival meetings at the Pearl street church every evening this week, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. S. Harrington; services commence at 7:30 o'clock.

The death of Mr. George Hooper, for a number of years connected with the Boston & Maine railroad in this city, occurred on Sunday morning at his residence on Noble's Island. Mr. Hooper ber on account of failing health, and his many friends will be pained to learn of his decease.

Our postoffice was the subject of an official visit from Postoffice Inspectors Whittemore and Fahey on Monday.

A telephone message was received at the police station in this city about one o'clock this morning, to the effect that Patrick McDonald, brakeman on freight train 253, from Boston bound east, was knocked from the train, and was then lying in Lynn depot, seriously injured.

One of the York county incidents of the great storm was the total wreck on Sunday, the 25th ult., the first day of the storm, of the fishing schooner Katie Clark of Cape Porpoise near Kennebunk piers. Another was the breaking of C. H. Walker's boom on the Kennebunk river, and the losing of 200,000 feet of logs.

Naval Intelligence.

Paymaster Joseph Foster has been detached from the Pensacola, and ordered to the Norfolk navy yard as inspector of stores, etc.

Passed Asst. Surgeon W. W. Whittaker has been ordered to the nautical shoolship St. Mary's.

New Hampshire News.

The usual custom of giving the convicts at the state prison a turkey dinner on Thanksgiving day was followed this year, and over 200 pounds of turkey were required to go around. Each man also received a whole mince pie.

E. W. Pearse of New York opened the Goffstown high school on the 3d inst., with new teachers in each department.

Haverhill ladies have formed a village improvement society.

St. Andrew's day was observed in Manchester by Clan McKenzie of the order of Scottish Clans, by a concert and ball.

By the death of Adolphus Whitcomb, who died in Paris recently, the town of Hancock receives $20,000, one-half of which goes toward a public library, and the other to beautify the town common.

Dr. David Taylor Parker, of Farmington, died on the 1st inst. at the age of seventy-five years. He had represented his town in the state legislature, served as president of the State Medical society, and of Strafford District Medical society, was a member of the American Medical society, as well as of several secret societies, and was a prominent Congregationalist.

John A. Hussey, of Manchester, was nearly frightened to death on Saturday last, by the engineer stopping the elevator at the Amoskeag mill between floors. Hussey thought something was wrong and that the elevator would fall, and was found lying in an unconscious condition. His recovery is doubtful.

The condition of Ex-Senator Rollins continues favorable, and he will probably be moved from the Massachusetts General hospital at Boston to his home at an early date.

Maine News.

Charles E. Dwyer, shipping clerk for Carter, Rice & Co., Boston, went to Saco to pass Thanksgiving. In the afternoon he went out gunning with the father and brother of his fiancee, and on returning one of the guns was accidentally discharged in removing it from the wagon, the contents taking effect in young Dwyer's right side, from which death resulted in about an hour.

One Kelly of Saco had some trouble with a boy named Sawyer six years ago, and has waited for a meeting and satisfaction all this time. They met Thanksgiving day, and Kelly insisted on a fight. He got it and now wishes he had satisfied his wrath when Sawyer was a boy, for the latter gave him a thrashing.

A grand fireman's ball was given at Biddeford on Thanksgiving eve, under the auspices of Eben Simpson steam fire engine company. One of the largest crowds that ever gathered at a ball there, was in attendance.

Raymond Sickra, a barber of Biddeford, was out with his broncho on Thanksgiving day, or rather, as subsequent events proved, the broncho was out with Sickra, for he ran away and Sickra was thrown out against a tree, and severely injured. But then, barbers like close shaves.

Francis Murphy of Portland, the noted temperance worker, observed the twelfth anniversary of the Murphy temperance movement at Pittsburg on Sunday evening, Nov. 25th, speaking from the same text that he used twelve years before.

On the arrival of steamer Vancouver, of the Dominion Line, at Portland on Friday morning, a man named Stevens was arrested for obtaining goods under false pretenses at Wilkesbarre, Pa., a year ago. He jumped his bail, went to Europe, got homesick and started for home. Officers were on the watch for him, with the above result.

Thousands of children who die annually of those diseases incident to early childhood, could have been saved by Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup.

Fa... Yes Rules. ...ating

Blessed are the poverty stricken, if longevity be a blessing. The majority of the eighty-four centenarians who were alive in France at the taking of the last census were extremely poor. There were twenty-one of them living on alms as beggars or in almshouses. The open air life of a shepherd must be also conducive to long life. A beggar named Rives, at Tarbes, was born in 1770, and a woman who herded goats in the Cevennes mountains had exceeded 118 years. Widows survive into a great old age; their husbands more often than widowers pay such a bad compliment to their wives. The proportion of the centenarian widows as compared to the same class of widowers was as 41 to 23 in 1884. Is this because the ungentle sex are the more deeply sentimental, or the gentle ones eat less and have better regulated tempers?

You know—or perhaps you don't know—that nothing hastens senility like habitual guzzling. Would it not be well to hang up the above statistics in the dining rooms of city companies and at the Mansion house? Your elderly guzzler on the shady side of middle life is, though he lives, in many respects dead. His brain is starved by the clogging of the hair like arteries which used to feed it. The sediment that chokes them comes of too nutritive food and too much of it. His bones are dense and weighty, his muscles rigid, his knuckles chalky, and his lungs and throat ready to catch cold. Turkish baths keep off, in a degree, these effects, but the best plan is not to be gourmand.

Those centenarian beggars, I dare say, had not the means of eating heavily, and few in the south of France, to which they belong, drink deep. Meat, too, is there dear and trying to bad teeth, and fruit is plentiful, cheap and good. This last won't make bone and muscle in a child—a reason why it does not clog capillary arteries. But in the south it has a deal of force in it derived straight from the sun, which is convertible into vivacity. Eggs are also plentiful, hens laying in the south four more months in the year than in the north. The egg is ideal food for any one who wants a lot of nutriment in a small volume. I should pity the French mendicant who could not procure at village inns an omelette or an œuf sur le plat.

It is a fact worth noting that most of the families who were raised to high positions and profusely gilded by the First Napoleon are extinct, and that those still existing are represented chiefly by women. The First Empire and its wars did not play havoc with the dukes and princes who sprang up around its head. The harm was done by the second empire, whose ideal was faire bombance. The higher class Bonapartists ate, drank, and were nearly all guzzlers, and managed to soak any amount of fine wines at their lunches and dinners. The fashion in their time came in of having as many wine glasses at each plate as there are flues in a great stack of chimneys. When appetite palled, the sorbet russe was brought in to act on the unfortunate stomach as a tonic and enable it to go through as much more as it had gone through already. One of the reasons why the late Marshal Bazaine could not get quickly out of Metz to bar the way against the Prussians was that the emperor started before him, and so the road was blocked with the service de la bouche and the wagons carrying the belongings of his imperial majesty, which were truly impedimenta.

When the Israelites were under a theocracy, and the chief priest's sons ate as do city of London aldermen, the Philistines routed them. Likewise Marshal de Soubise was immortalized by his sauce for mutton chops and disgraced by his defeats. The old French monarchy was done for when Louis XVI, whether trying to fly from France or a prisoner of the assembly in one of its most stormy sittings, could not do without a heavy meal at the usual hour. I never saw anything so prodigious as the service de la bouche at the Tuileries and Fontainebleau. The kitchens there were vast factories, and were situated at a great distance from the court dining and banqueting rooms out of respect for imperial nostrils. By the time, therefore, the dishes got to table they were spoiled.—Paris Cor. London Truth.

About Uncle Sam's Musicians.

On a sign board in front of the regular army recruiting station in Park row every day in the year can be seen the words, "Musicians wanted." Clarinets, fifers and snare drummers are always in demand, because skilled musicians can find more lucrative employment outside of the army and consequently they do not enlist. The pay of an army musician is $30 per month, and no distinction is made between a pounder of the bass drum and a skillful clarinetist. Another deterring influence is that the army musicians are not allowed to play outside of camp or barracks and thus earn an extra honest dollar. Cornet players are as plentiful as sparrows in the park and applications are received every day for positions. The clarinet player's place in the band is the hardest to fill.—New York Evening Sun.

The Red Clover Crop.

The failure of several crops of red clover in New Zealand was explained by the absence of the fructifying insects which are requisite and necessary to the perfection of certain plants. A hundred wild bees were imported from England and set free, and in that district the clover has begun to flourish.—New York Sun.

While searching through his father's effects Ticket Agent Moffett, of Knoxville, Tenn., found a gourd over 100 years old. It contained many old papers, among them a note from Davy Crockett, payable to William Moffett, for one shilling and three pence for a barrel of whisky and a keg of cider.—New York Evening World.

A boy naturally wants to do everything, and nothing very long. No matter how enjoyable a new job may be it soon grows old with a boy. He is a natural experimenter—necessarily—and is always wanting to do the precise thing he can't do.—Hamlin Garland in American Magazine.

Items Worthy of Notice.

A number of well known agriculturists replied in The Rural New Yorker recently to the query, "Fall or spring plowing for corn?" All advocated the spring plowing of sandy soil and clover sod. A difference of opinion prevailed as to when to plow clay soil and timothy sod, but spring plowing was generally preferred.

Sulphate of iron is reported as the most popular of all remedies in France against mildew.

Remove the seeds when feeding pumpkins to cows. They do harm by acting as a strong diuretic.

A Vermont beekeeper says that a solution of soda and water is among the best of remedies to apply wherever the bee or wasp has inserted its venom through the sting.

...ew Plan for Recruiting.

In order that the proper material for the army may be provided, it will be necessary to change the methods of the recruiting service. It should be the duty of that branch of the war department to procure the recruits from the youth of the land, from all parts pro rata, in order that all sections of the country shall be represented; when the enlistments expire the young men, with the knowledge they have acquired while in the service, should be distributed as widely as possible. They should be young men, preferably 18 and certainly not over 25 years of age. Selecting them from congressional districts, the present strength of the army could be maintained by obtaining fifteen recruits annually from each district. The prevailing rule should be one enlistment, in order that the greatest number possible may get a military training. Five years is ample time in which to produce good results. The young man who could not in five years qualify himself for an officer under a system with that end in view, would not be likely to do it by longer service.

If an education, in addition to the pay, clothing and subsistence, could be held out, there would be no difficulty in getting the necessary young men. There is little doubt that, when such a plan should become known and established, it would be necessary to make the selections by competitive examinations. The prospect would be very inviting to a large percentage of the young men of the United States, for the number of those whose ambition is greatly in excess of their opportunities is very large. The opportunity of getting an education while one is being clothed and fed, and receiving from 50 cents to $1 per day, would be availed of gladly by any young man who had not been favored by fortune. It would be his chance to see something of the great world. After five years he could return to his home and relatives with a diploma and a discharge that would give him a claim to a commission as an officer in the event of a war, and he could have from $1,000 to $2,000 in his pocket; for he could save all his pay, as he would have little time to spend it if he applied himself closely to his duties. Many armies of young men, larger than the United States army today, are longing for such a start in life.—Gen. Augst V. Kautz in The Century.

Bathing in Trinidad.

In place of the box of coffin size and shape that American plumbers give us, our tropical friends plash about in basins eight feet square or more, through which a stream of pure water is always flowing. By its side a shower bath stands ready, and one comes out into the cool morning with a delicious sense of purity and comfort, a skin as soft and smooth as silk and a readiness for breakfast that is not known in northern climates—where pores are sealed by cold, where indoor air is a mixture of carbonic acid and outdoor breathing chills one's very bones. Clad in lightest pajamas, the loose night jacket and trousers that have come from India to be at home in every region of the sun, men loll about an hour before dressing, enjoying the delight that mere living brings in the delicious climate.—American Magazine.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

What is Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It ... mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

ASSOCIATED PRESS DESPATCHES.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE PROCEEDINGS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Various annual reports, including that of the secretary of the treasury, were presented and referred.

Mr. Frye at 12:30 moved to proceed to the consideration of the Union Pacific settlement bill.

Mr. Mitchell opposed the motion on the ground that he had no time to examine the report.

Mr. Frye did not press his motion, but asked to have it made the special order for next Tuesday, and the Senate proceed to consider the Tariff bill.

Mr. Vance said the democratic senators who had amendments to offer to the tobacco section of the Senate tariff bill were not prepared to offer them today, but would be tomorrow. He asked its postponement. The bill was then postponed until tomorrow morning.

Senator Keagan introduced bills authorizing the secretary of the navy to cause two steel rams and two steel cruisers to be constructed, each to be armed with four ten-inch high-power rifles, throwing shots charged with dynamite or other high explosive, and also with six pneumatic torpedo throwers capable of throwing torpedoes two miles, the cost of each not to exceed $750,000. The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE PROCEEDINGS.

The speaker laid before the House on the 4th the annual reports of the secretary of the treasury and the comptroller of the currency, which were referred.

Mr. Macdonald of Minnesota presented a petition of citizens of North Dakota for the immediate admission into the Union of South Dakota and Montana and for constitutional conventions in North Dakota, Washington territory and New Mexico. Referred to committee on territories.

Representative Stone of Kentucky introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution providing that the president and vice president shall be chosen every fourth year by direct votes of the people. The bill forbids holding any local or state elections, except for members of Congress, on the day set apart for the election of president and vice president.

During the closing days of the last session Mr. Dingley of Maine succeeded in having made the special order for today the bill for the erection of a monument to Major General Henry Knox, at Thomaston, Me., but subsequently Mr. Kilgore of Texas entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the order was made. Mr. Dingley today called up the motion, and moved to lay Kilgore's motion on the table. Mr. Kilgore opposed, declaring there was no warrant in the constitution for an appropriation of $25,000 as proposed by the bill. The yeas and nays were ordered and Dingley's motion prevailed, yeas 125 nays 53. The house then proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. Dingley strongly supported the bill. Kilgore, Breckenridge of Kentucky and McMillan of Tennessee opposed it. Manson of Missouri wished the monument to be in Washington. Spinola of New York supported the original bill. Its opponents resorted to dilatory measures and took up the time until five o'clock, when the House adjourned.

Excitement in the Coffee Exchange.

Special Despatch to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—This was the most exciting day for years in the Coffee Exchange, and the amount of transactions were unprecedented. Higher quotations in Hamburg and Havre, coupled with Brazilian advices that the new crop would be 25 per cent below average, while the world is a million bags below last year's total, and consumption largely increasing, caused a sharp rise of 70 points, and market closed 1 to 1 1-2 cents higher than the opening.

THE WHITE CAPS IN OHIO.

Colored Children Driven from the Schools.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 4.—The excitement about the White Caps in southern Ohio continues. Efforts are being made to drive colored children out of the schools. Some children were forcibly ejected, and their parents went before the grand jury and gave testimony. Since then the houses of these colored people have been assailed after night with stones, and windows and doors broken down. In some places the colored children are guarded to and from school. An unwholesome feeling pervades the neighborhood

Yellow Fever All Gone

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

GAINESVILLE, FLA., Dec. 4.—Surgeon Martin discharged the last case of yellow fever under treatment today. Fumigation is progressing and will be complete in a few days. The board of health has declared the epidemic at an end today. Through traffic has been resumed. The first passenger train arrived this afternoon.

The Reading R. R. Co. Reduces the Hours of Labor and Pay to an Eight Hour Basis.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

READING, PA., Dec. 4.—The Philadelphia & Reading R. R. company posted notices in all their shops in this city this afternoon notifying employes that on and after tomorrow eight hours will be a day's labor, instead of ten as heretofore, and there will be proportionate reduction in wages. Similar notices were posted in all the company's shops along the entire system and branches. The reduction is due to the suspension of coal mines. All persons connected with the coal traffic will also be reduced to eight hours a day.

Rum and Revolver.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HAVERHILL, MASS., Dec. 4.—James O'Neil went home drunk about nine o'clock tonight, went into the kitchen, drew a revolver, and shot his wife four times in the head; injuries probably fatal. O'Neil was locked up while still crazed with liquor.

Attempt to Remove O'Brien, who Sold Out the Republican Ticket on Election Day.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—A resolution introduced in the police board this afternoon for the removal of John J. O'Brien, Chief of the Bureau of Elections, resulted in a deadlock between two democratic and two republican members of the board, the latter voting against it.

Death of Maj. Gen. Ayres.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Major General Romeyn B. Ayres, U. S. A., died this noon at Fort Hamilton after an illness of several months, aged 62 years.

Gen. Harrison Goes Shooting.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 4.—Gen. J. A. Williamson of Iowa, ex-commissioner general of the land office, called on Gen. Harrison today. Gen. Harrison leaves tomorrow for two days grouse shooting.

Switchmen Beaten.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 4.—The switchmen's strike was declared "off" this morning, the men acknowledging themselves beaten.

Lynch Law.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CANON CITY, COL., Dec. 4.—Twenty armed men broke into the jail early this morning, took out Witherell, who made a desperate resistance until he was shot down, and hanged him to a telegraph pole.

The Democrats Routed.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Dec. 4.—Election today was a democratic rout; the reps. elected the mayor for the first time in eight years, and the town agent for the first time in ten years.

FOREIGN.

High Tides.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Dec. 4.—Although there were no heavy winds the tide in St. John harbor today was the highest known for ten years. In some places the water rose fully thirty feet, submerging wharves and covering the floors of warehouses.

MONCTON, N. B., Dec. 4.—The tide here today was the highest known for many years. The railroad station was surrounded by water, and the track washed out in several places.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 4.—The tide in the Bay of Fundy has been exceedingly high the past few days, and dikes in the vicinity of Wolfville are broken and overflowed.

Shall the British Troops in Soudan be Sacrificed!

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—In the House of Commons this evening Lord Randolph Churchill moved to adjourn debate and discuss the sending of troops to Suakim. Within a few days a battle would be fought, probably desperate, between British and Egyptian troops and Arab tribes. For what end were a mere handful of British soldiers exposed to risk of encounter with Soudanese? He implored the House to prevent renewed slaughter in Soudan, and save the lives of the soldiers from being uselessly sacrificed. Mr. Stanhope, secretary war, said Lord Randolph spoke without knowledge. The government's action was based upon full information. Sir William Vernon Harcourt supported Lord Churchill, saying the latter's motion was amply justified by gravity of the situation. The motion was rejected by vote 231 to 189.

Condensations.

Excitement and terror reign in New Bedford, Mass., over a number of assaults which have been made on women by some unknown person, who strikes them in the pit of the stomach with his fist. No less than seven women have been so attacked near the centre of the city.

Diphtheria is on the increase at the Insane Hospital at Augusta, Me., four new cases developing on Saturday last, one of them being on the floor where the epidemic raged last spring.

It is reported that the Maine Central railroad contemplates a suit for damages against the Water Power company which flows Lake Maranacook. The power company, it is claimed, raised the lake two feet by their dams, so that the roadbed was washed away, causing the recent accident, whereby an engine and several freight cars were thrown into the lake.

By the fall of an elevator at the Olneyville horsecar barn at Providence, R. I., on the 1st., four persons were badly injured, and one probably fatally. The contrivance was a miserable affair, and was loaded to double its capacity when in good order.

The largest and only five-masted center-board schooner ever built, the Governor Ames, was launched successfully on Saturday morning at Waldoboro, Me. She was built by Levitt Storer of that place, was designed for coal carrying between Boston and Philadelphia, and cost $80,000.

Mrs. Lyrena Pearson died at Newburyport recently from heart trouble, hastened by the amputation of a foot. About a year ago she drew blood while picking a corn, which grew worse until mortification set in, and amputation was necessary.

The shoe business is on the increase at Newburyport, and enlargements of several of the factories are talked of, and new ones projected.

New Hampshire News.

The subject of a state armory is being discussed by prominent military men.

Mrs. Mary Taylor of Manchester fell down stairs Monday evening and received a serious fracture of the skull on the left side of the head.

Manchester is likely to lose the First Regiment Band, seventeen of its members having applied for their discharges, in order to form a new musical organization. The title of First Regiment Band will probably be transferred to Dover.

Nine divorces have been granted by the September term of the Supreme court. Manchester parties got six, Nashua two and Peterboro one.

Charles F. Nichols of Concord has purchased the stock and fixtures of the Concord railroad restaurant at Nashua, and will conduct the same.

Capt. John Sawyer, a life-long and prominent democrat, and the oldest inhabitant of Penacook, died recently at that place at the advanced age of ninety years and four months.

Work on the Lake Shore railroad is progressing rapidly, considering the unfavorable weather which has lasted since Sept. 1st.

Hon. Frank D. Currier of Canaan, Gen. Simon G. Griffin of Keene, Hon. A. A. Woolson of Lisbon, Hon. Chester Pike of Cornish, and Hon. Chester B. Jordan of Lancaster, are mentioned as candidates for the position of naval officer for the port of Boston.

Charles T. Marsh, twenty-five years old and employed by the Laconia Car Co. in the construction department, in assisting to handle some Eastman Heater cars in the yard near the shops on Saturday, was caught between two of them and badly crushed, and now lies in a critical condition.

Joseph Ide, who has recently been admitted to the bar at Albany, N. Y., is a native of Croydon, and a graduate of the Claremont high school.

There is talk of erecting a new hotel at Laconia. Interested parties have the necessary means and it will be an elegant affair.

HAMPTON JOTTINGS

HAMPTON, Dec. 3d.

The churches were well filled yesterday; three persons united with the Congregational church.

The republican club met Saturday evening to settle campaign accounts, and enjoy one of James K. Prescott's oyster suppers; he is an expert in the business.

The rain storm and cold made sad havoc with farmers' produce; hundreds of barrels of apples were in sheds and barns, and many of them were frozen. Water in many cellars was three feet deep. After the storm shingles were in great demand, and there's not enough in town to supply all who need them.

ITEMS FROM RYE.

RYE, Dec. 4th.

The big storm of last week did no great damage on our six miles of sea front. No wrecks reported, but a section of plank walk here and there was moved out of its proper place. Lots of sea weed came ashore, but as usual the supply was not equal to the demand. Some cellars were flooded, and unless a house was airtight, the rain found its way in.

The high school commenced the winter term Dec. 3d, with Miss Nellie Clark, who so successfully taught the preceding term, as teacher. About twenty pupils were present.

A singing school has already met two evenings, and is attended by thirty or forty; the instructor is Mr. Boynton.

Now that election is over the ladies are beginning to think that their time for doing something has arrived, and those connected with the Congregational society are agitating the subject of a festival to be held during this moon. Of course it will be a good one.

Langton B. Parsons, Esq., who has been here during the summer, left for New York on Tuesday, where he will remain until February, afterwards going to Cedar Key, Florida, where he has extensive business interests.

Prof. Parsons is putting up a house on the Dow farm, that is from present appearances likely to go ahead of anything of the "cottage" kind on the New Hampshire coast. Unlike most of the sea side sojourners, the professor chooses for a site a locality quite a distance from the water and right in the woods, where the ocean is not visible except from the upper windows. The owner evidently thinks much of the pine trees on the place, for rather than to cut one down that was in the line of a sewer, he had the workmen dig under it so that the pipes could be placed in their proper position. A habitation surrounded by pine trees may, perhaps, in a sanitary point of view, be preferable to one exposed to the whole fury of such blasts as we had for three days last week. NAT.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 5, 1888.

It is not encouraging to American institutions to learn as we do by despatches from Chicago that the Anarchists are rapidly gaining in strength, and that sooner or later will make themselves felt. It is quite time that the legislative branch of the Government should enact laws which will reach and prevent this class of men from coming to the United States at all. They are not Americans, and never will become good citizens in the sense that they will have the good of the country at heart, and it is a great mistake to permit them to land on our shores. Those that are in the country now should be made to understand plainly that they must respect the laws, and if they do not there should be no hesitation in applying a heroic remedy and hanging a few of the worst of them to the lamp posts. The lives of men, women and children should not be imperilled by the presence of such wretches.

It is a sufficient answer to the claim set up by the democrats that Cleveland has a plurality in the country at large, to point to the votes cast in the States where there is no pretense that frauds were perpetrated, or that every legal voter had not an opportunity to give expression to his convictions without personal danger. In the New England States, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania the plurality for Harrison exceeds 150,000, while in all the Northern States the plurality is about 450,000. To overcome this the democrats take the Southern States where it is notorious that the grossest frauds were perpetrated, and republicans by the tens of thousand were either deprived of their votes by intimidation, or the throwing out of the votes on the flimsiest pretext.

The New York Tribune in its review of Mr. Cleveland's last state paper says:

> President Cleveland's message is the snarl of a beaten candidate. In a document which should be a dignified state paper he has taken pains to exhibit the soreness of a discarded politician because the policy which he had forced upon his party was defeated by the people. * * * * No other Presidential candidate has ever had behind him as powerful an array of "trusts, combinations and monopolies" as that which had been brought by executive and legislative favors to the support of Mr. Cleveland. The telephone conspiracy, the sugar trust, the whiskey ring, the combination of Wall street sharpers with bankers who held over fifty millions of the public money, the Washington real estate jobbers, the host of other jobs and monopolies which leagued with foreign manufacturers and importers to break down an American policy, hoped to own the government after Mr. Cleveland's re-election. They failed; and Mr. Cleveland and his free traders went down with them, and the decisive votes were cast, as everybody knows, by the plain people of the farming regions who are not mastered by corporations, and do not mean to be.

Gen. Sherman publishes in the North American Review a letter addressed to him in May, 1884, by Mr. Blaine, as follows:

> Confidential, strictly and absolutely so.
>
> WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1884.
>
> My Dear General: This letter requires no answer. After reading it file it away in your most secret drawer or give it to the flames.
>
> At the approaching Convention at Chicago it is more than possible, it is indeed not improbable, that you may be nominated for the Presidency. If so you must stand your hand, accept the responsibility, and assume the duties of the place to which you will surely be chosen if a candidate.
>
> You must not look upon it as the work of the politicians. If it comes to you it will come as the ground swell of popular demand, and you can no more refuse than you could have refused to obey an order when you were a lieutenant in the army. If it comes to you at all it will come as a call of patriotism. It would in such an event injure your great fame as much to decline it as it would for you to seek it. Your historic record, full as it is, would be rendered still more glorious by such an Administration as you would give the country. Do not say a word in advance of the Convention, no matter who may ask you. You are with your friends, who will jealously guard your honor and renown. Your friend,
>
> JAMES G. BLAINE.

To this letter Gen. Sherman replied at some length in which he declared he would not "in any event entertain or accept a nomination as a candidate for president by the Chicago republican convention or any other convention for reasons personal to myself."

The mugwumps, civil service reformers, and ministers of the gospel who felt constrained to support Mr. Cleveland because his morality was superior to that of Gen. Harrison, whom the whisper of scandal never touched, and because of his wonderful devotion to the cause of civil service reform, must have experienced a shock yesterday when they perused the President's message only to find that he had nothing to say in commendation of civil service. They will know better next time.

THE STORY OF AN EXILE.

The following from the Century is one of the most touching stories that Mr. Kennan has yet told of the fate of Siberian exiles: "To me perhaps the most attractive and sympathetic of the Tomsk exiles was the Russian author Felix Volkhofski, who was banished to Siberia for life in 1878, upon the charge of 'belonging to a society that intends, at a more or less remote time in the future, to overthrow the existing form of government.' He was about thirty-eight years of age at the time I made his acquaintance, and was a man of cultivated mind, warm heart, and high aspirations. He knew English well, was familiar with American history and literature, and had, I believe, translated into Russian many of the poems of Longfellow. He spoke to me with great admiration, I remember, of Longfellow's 'Arsenal at Springfield,' and recited it to me aloud. He was one of the most winning and lovable men that it has ever been my good fortune to know; but his life had been a terrible tragedy. His health had been shattered by long imprisonment in the fortress of Petropavlovsk; his hair was prematurely white; and when his face was in repose there seemed to be an expression of profound melancholy in his dark brown eyes. I became intimately acquainted with him and very warmly attached to him; and when I bade him good-bye for the last time on my return from Eastern Siberia in 1886, he put his arms around me and kissed me, and said: 'George Ivanovitch, please don't forget us! In bidding you good-bye, I feel as if something were going out of my life that would never again come into it.'

"Since my return to America I have heard from Mr. Volkhofski only once. He wrote me last winter a profoundly sad and touching letter, in which he informed me of the death of his wife by suicide. He himself had been thrown out of employment by the suppression of the liberal Tomsk newspaper, the Siberian Gazette; and his wife, whom I remember as a pale, delicate, sad-faced woman, twenty-five or thirty years of age, had tried to help him support their family of young children by giving private lessons and by taking in sewing. Anxiety and overwork had finally broken down her health; she had become an invalid, and in a morbid state of mind, brought on by unhappiness and disease, she reasoned herself into the belief that she was an incumbrance, rather than a help, to her husband and her children, and that they would ultimately be better off if she were dead. A little more than a year ago she put an end to her unhappy life by shooting herself through the head with a pistol. Her husband was devotedly attached to her; and her death, under such circumstances and in such a way, was a terrible blow to him. In his letter to me he referred to a copy of James Russell Lowell's poems that I had caused to be sent to him, and said that in reading 'After the Burial' he vividly realized for the first time that grief is of no nationality; the lines, although written by a bereaved American, expressed the deepest thoughts and feelings of a bereaved Russian. He sent me with his letter a small, worn, leather match-box, which had been given by Prince Pierre Krapotkin to his exiled brother Alexander; which the latter had left to Volkhofski; and which Volkhofski had in turn presented to his wife a short time before her death. He hoped, he said, that it would have some value to me, on account of its association with the lives of four political offenders, all of whom I had known. One of them was a refugee in London, another was an exile in Tomsk, and two had escaped the jurisdiction of the Russian Government by taking their own lives.

"I tried to read Volkhofski's letter aloud to my wife; but as I recalled the higher character and lovable personality of the writer and imagined what this last blow of fate must have been to such a man,—in exile, in broken health, and with a family of helpless children dependent upon him,—the written lines vanished in a mist of tears, and with a choking in my throat I put the letter and the little match-box away.

"The Tsar may whiten the hair of such men as Felix Volkhofski in the silent bomb-proof casemates of the fortress, and he may send them in gray convict overcoats to Siberia; but a time will come, in the providence of God, when their names will stand higher than his on the roll of history, and when the record of their lives and sufferings will be of heroic inspiration to all Russians who love liberty and their country."

An Incorrigible Witness.

It was a horse case. Horse cases are difficult to deal with, and in the course of the trial a horsey-looking witness was put in the box. Counsel asked him what happened.

Witness—"I zez, zez I, 'How about the hoss?' and he said he'd give me 10 shillings to zay nothin about un."

Counsel—"He did not say that he would give you 10 shillings."

Witness—"Yes a did; that's exactly what a did zay."

Counsel—"He could not have said 'he'; he must have spoken in the first person."

Witness—"No; I was the first person that spoke. I zez, zez I: 'How about that hoss?'"

Counsel—"But did he not speak in the third person?"

Witness—"There was no third person present, only he and me."

The Judge (interposing)—"Listen to me, witness. He could not have said, 'He would give you 10 shillings to say nothing about it,' but 'I will give you 15 shillings.'"

Witness—"He zaid nothing about your lordship. If he said anything about your lordship I never heard un. And if there was a third person present I never zeed un."

Point given up.—The Saturday Review.

This Way Every Time.

Naomi—"I regard it as a very singular thing, Henry, that a young man will swear by everything sacred that his love for a girl is undying, and then if she refuses to marry him he will accuse her of heartlessness, deception, and everything else that is wicked."

Henry—"Oh, Naomi, you judge young men harshly. For instance," and his voice grew low and passionate, "I swear before heaven that I love you as man never loved woman before, and I ask you to be mine, and you will see what an undying love is."

"Oh, I can not, I can not consent."

"Will nothing change your mind?"

"Nothing—nothing."

"Well, I am thankful that I found you out at last. Had I dreamed that you were a jilt, a deceptive flirt, I would never have laid my love at your feet that you might spurn it."—Nebraska State Journal.

The expression "cut it short" is spiced with wisdom. If men would cut out these three simple, unostentatious words and paste them in their hats for frequent reference, there wouldn't be as many sighs, and groans and heartaches in the world. People wouldn't dislocate their jaws yawning so much if there was more "cutting short" done. For instance, when a tedious man commences to tell a tedious story, and in the course of it roams from one subject to another until he has exhausted all the subjects on the book, what a relief it would be if he would cut it short. And when a clergyman, a patient, holy man who means well, gets along to sixthly and seventhly, and then proposes to review the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, it is not impious or irreverent to wish that he would cut it short. The net results in the way of salvation would also be greater if he would cut it short. When a lawyer is delivering an eloquent address to a jury he frequently labors under the gross misapprehension that the more talking he does the greater service will he render his client. But the juryman has a good deal that is human about him, and the lawyer's chances would be greater if he cut it short. Pale and spirituelle reader, as you journey down the sunlit pathway of life, whether you may be talking or singing, cut it short. And those with whom you have come in contact during your life will weep a number of tears when you are dead, and hire a man to see that your grave is kept green.—Lincoln Journal.

If the Prince of Wales' oldest son ever falls in love with an American girl, which he is certain to do one of these days, she will most likely hail from Troy. It takes a Troy girl to understand the art of bringing "Collars and Cuffs" into subjection.—Drake's Magazine.

A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

"We are startled constantly by the sudden death of some man who seemed the picture of health. He thought he was well. He had felt strange pains shooting through his body, but as they did not remain, he forgot them. His head pained him periodically, he was somewhat paler than common and unaccountably tired, but he felt comparatively well and vigorous. And yet, he suddenly died! Its a shame to our boasted civilization."

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and why is it? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the most terrible of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful, sudde strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural laws. The solemn and terrible fact is, that men and women drag along, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the cause lay far back of all these things. The truth is that weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is: 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' I have seen numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where the preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been almost remarkable in its results. I use it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

MIST.

I can rejoice that I have not been born
In southern climes, where heavens are deep and clear,
Where stars are brighter, and the hues of morn
And sunset shine with richer glow than here;
Where myrtles flower and palm trees wave on high
For, had I lived in such an atmosphere,
The solemn glories of a northern sky
Would bring to me not joy, but gloom and dread—
The veils of rainy mist that magnify
The mighty hills and glaciers round me spread,
While in the clouds is lost the mountain's head,
And every hollow to the baffled eye
Seems like a sea's unfathomable bed.

—Joseph John Murphy.

SLINKS, THE OUTCAST.

The "enforced emigration" of Slinks from Prairie City occurred because the citizens had grown tired of having him around. Slinks was a failure at everything but slinking. His walk, his raiment, his appearance and minimum of history, all conspired to his degradation, and had not only robbed him of respect and credit, but even of an abiding place. He had slunk into Prairie City, no person knew exactly when; but when he slunk out of it, every person in the settlement who had arrived at the years of understanding was apprised of his going. Several of the more enterprising citizens—the self appointed emigration committee—followed him.

In such cases, the undesirable man is usually given twenty-four hours in which to settle up his affairs and place the county line between himself and the unappreciative community. In the case of Slinks, there were no affairs to settle.

The line was ten miles away, and as the committee had but little faith in Slinks as a pedestrian, a little procession of mounted men had left Prairie City with Slinks, round shouldered and discouraged looking, riding ahead. When the line was reached, the distance to Boomopolis was about a mile less than that to Prairie City, and the committee reasoned that Slinks would keep on, and thus save a clear mile's journeying.

"Wal, yere we air," said Long Jess Masters, as they reached the lone jack oak just beyond the county boundary. "I reckon you know the penalty, Slinks?"

"Reckon I do."

Perhaps a previous experience had made him familiar with the unpleasant penalty bestowed upon a "runout" man found within the county confines after the expiration of his time of grace. When he had dismounted, Slinks strode slouchingly away.

"Wal, good-by, Slinks," called Long Jess.

He looked like a blot on the face of the fair prairie picture, bright with a profusion of wild flowers springing from the soft, undulating carpet of green. His hat drooped dejectedly, his boots were run over, and his garments seem undecided whether to fall off or stay on. There was less color in his face than usual, and the ruddy scar on his cheek was more marked by the contrast.

For a little while the committee watched him, dragging his feet as if they were almost too heavy for him. Then, just as they turned to ride away, they saw him stoop as if plucking one of the bright prairie flowers. Only the blossoms heard him mutter:

He sloched away faster than before. There was more color in his face now, and the scar on his cheek showed less plainly.

"Flowers, and a run out manpshaw!" he muttered, with more energy than he had displayed for weeks.

The committee watched him a little longer, but they were galloping toward Prairie City when he half turned and gazed after them with a look that was almost wistful.

None of the horsemen spoke for several minutes. Then Cal Senter, the self elected wit of the settlement, remarked, with a prefatory "wal:"

"Good riddance to bad rubbish, as I told 'em when the blind dog was stold."

The committee scarcely grinned, and Long Jess Masters did not appear to hear. This inattention upon the part of the elongated citizen was all the more depressing to the humorist because Jess was usually the first and loudest to laugh at his efforts.

"When a man's got to go, w'y, he's got to," Jess said, presently. "An' when he gits so's he sets around till he mighty nigh grows fast, an' sneaks around till everybody is tired o' seein' him, an' borrys his tobacco, an' never buys nuth'n, an' pays no taxes, an' won't vote, an' never does nur says nuth'n' to help the boom along, an' 'lows it's nuth'n' to him whether the railroad comes yere or goes to Boomopolis—w'y, when a man gits that fur gone, I reckon he's got to go, or"——

"Or be buried," interrupted Cal.

"That's it," Jess went on. "Prairie City h'ain't got no use fer that kind o' people. But, somehow"——

"What's that over thar?" interrupted another committeeman.

"Must come middlin' fur by the way the team crawls," said Jess.

Changing their course, the committee galloped towards the slow moving vehicle. As they neared it they made a discovery. There seemed to be no driver, and the reins were dragging. The skinny team stopped as the horseman came up. Long Jess lifted one of the tattered curtains and looked into the wagon.

"Oh, have you found my boy?" a faint voice quivered, eagerly.

The other members of the committee peered into the wagon. A woman, with tangled white hair about her wrinkled face, that was wan and ghastly, turned her delirium bright-ened eyes, full of a pitiful, unreasoning pleading, slowly from one to another of the bearded faces as they looked down upon her where she lay, on a rude bed of quilts, in the bottom of the wagon body.

"Have you found my boy yet?" she piped, feebly, with eager beseeching. "Oh, have you found him?"

"We hain't"— began Carl Senter.

"Hush!" whispered Jess. "We expect to find him soon, gran'maw. He kain't be fur off," he added, soothingly.

"Oh, I am so glad!" the sick woman whispered. "I was afraid that something had happened to him. But you'll find him, won't you?" she went on, anxiously.

"We'll try," answered Jess.

"She's clost to dyin', I'm afeard," he said, when the committee had withdrawn a short distance from the wagon for a consultation. "Out of her head an' dyin'!"

"What air we goin' to do?" questioned Cal.

"What we kin!" replied Jess. "She's starvin', too, I believe!"

Two minutes later one of the emigration committee was hurrying towards Prairie City as fast as his horse could carry him.

"Have you found him?" the faint voice quivered, as the bearded faces looked into the wagon again.

"What did you say his name was?" questioned Jess. "It sorto slipped me."

The shaggy heads were solemnly shaken. No one knew Paul Emery. Puzzled, they withdrew for another consultation.

"I'm afeard she'll never see her boy, if he h'ain't found mighty soon," said Long Jess.

"Wonder if we couldn't sorto find him, anyhow," said Cal. "Mebby she couldn't tell"——

The others grasped the idea. Again the bearded faces looked into the wagon.

The sick woman babbled on a little while of how she would know her boy—her Paul. Then she produced a battered tintype from beneath her pillow.

"That is Paul, my boy!" she said, eagerly—"Paul!"

The shaggy heads were gravely shaken.

"The scar don't show much in the picture," the sick woman piped, weakly. "The doctor said it would always remain there. And Bessie said she never wanted it to fade from his cheek, because it would always be a reminder of how he had risked his life to save hers. Bessie"——

The committee heard no more. They had hastily withdrawn.

"I'll stay yere an' wait fur Jerry," Cal Senter said, after a few moments' conference was held. "Take my hoss. Wal, I reckon"——

The rest of the committeemen were galloping away, and he was alone beside the wagon.

"Looks like imposin' on the pore woman," he muttered. "But, if we kain't find the right son we've got to do the next best thing. He'll look something like her Paul when the boys hev got through with him."

Slinks, the outcast, lay stretched face downwards in the shade of a few scraggy persimmon trees, near the head of a little "draw," two miles beyond the spot where the committee had left him. There was more of despair in his face than any citizen of Prairie City had ever seen there. But when, aroused by the hoof beats, he found himself again in the hands of the emigration committee, the old and almost expressionless mask fell over his face again.

He made no comment when ordered to "pile on" to Cal's horse, and the cavalcade took the back track towards Prairie City, at a headlong speed. But once, Long Jess, close at hand, heard him mutter:

"It's all right, anyhow. Nobody'll care!"

Cal Senter, squatting in the shade of the sick woman's wagon, saw the little troop pass, a quarter of a mile away, and grumbled: "Blamed imposition on her, but it's the best we kin do."

Jerry was passed by the cavalcade, ten minutes later, on his headlong way back to the wagon with several packages in his hands and pockets. It was evident that he comprehended the situation, for he said, addressing himself:

Slinks' look of stolidity changed to one of mystification and astonishment soon after Prairie City was reached. He was hurried into the barber shop and thrust into a chair, and, in response to a stern command from Long Jess, the knight of the razor trimmed the outcast's hair and removed his beard with a celerity that threatened to rob him of his cuticle at the same time. While this was going on several of the committeemen were rushing about, to the intense mystification of the unofficial citizens, who asked a hundred questions, and were shamefully snubbed each time. When the "rushing" resulted in the producing of a misfit suit of clothes, into which Slinks was hustled, he was in a state of open mouthed wonder.

As all hands were mounting, Slinks heard Old Man Berry inform a neighbor, in a mysterious but very loud whisper, that it was his belief that the committee had captured Slinks red handed in some atrocity, and were arraying him decently that the outcast might make a presentable looking corpse. The neighbor nodded a convinced head, and Slinks, for want of a more pleasant solution to the mystery, was forced to accept the direful theory.

So great had been the change in the outcast's appearance, resulting from his experience with the committee and the barber, that when the little troop reached the wagon Cal professed to believe that they had added a new and improved head to Slinks' acquisitions.

The sick woman did not look so ghastly, thanks to the kind offices of Cal and Jerry, who had administered some of the brandy that the latter had brought from Prairie City, and had made a doubtful quality of beef tea over a little fire down in the hollow. With awkward gentleness they had pushed back the gray hair and had placed fragrant flowers all about her head.

"Do you think you will find my boy soon?" her faint voice piped, as Long Jess looked into the wagon.

Her wrinkled face lit up with such a look of gladness, that for an instant Jess' heart smote him at the thought of the deception they were about to practice upon the sick woman.

"But it's for the best," he muttered, as he turned away. "It's a shame, but it's the best we kin do."

Every face in the circle that gathered about the outcast was hard and stern. In a few pointed words Long Jess told the story.

"If she don't find her boy right soon, she never will. If she thinks for a few weeks she's found him, we reckon she may pull through to health an' be able to go on with her search. Slinks, you look nearest uv any uv us like her son's picture. You look like him, an' if you don't act like him, we'll—wal, you understand!"

"Well, yer boy's come, gran'maw," he said, and turned away.

It was evident that the deception was a success, for the committee heard the faint, glad cry of the old woman as the outcast bent over her.

"Paul! My boy! my boy!"

Then the committee turned their backs and walked away out of hearing. No one said anything for several moments. Presently Cal spoke, gravely:

"I never 'lowed Slinks had no feelin's, but—did you see his face?"

"I saw it," answered Long Jess, shortly.

After nearly a quarter of an hour had passed, Jess went to the wagon. He was gone a long time, but when he rejoined the group Slinks remained at the wagon.

"Boys," said Long Jess, "it'll work! You ort to have seen the gladness in her ole wrinkled face! I reckon she'll live to find her boy yit. But I have the idy of the time when we've got to tell—wal, maybe we'll find him 'fore that."

"An' Slinks?" questioned Cal.

"He's got feelin's! If I hadn't a-knowed, I'd a-'lowed he found his ole mother. Scar on his cheek must be sorto like the one on her boy's, for she was a-noticin' it, an' a-sayin' sumthin' 'bout Bessie's 'memberin' how Paul'd saved her life at the risk of his own. When she had said that, I'll swear Slinks' eyes were full uv tears! He's got feelin's, Slinks has."

It was nearly a week later, after the sick woman had been provided with comfortable quarters in Prairie City, where she was rapidly improving under the son like ministrations of Slinks, the outcast, that the emigration committee were holding a meeting in the shade of Marshall's "general store."

"I believe Slinks is sick," Long Jess was saying. "Not but that he works—works like a redhead to do everything in the world to make the sick woman happy. But, someway, he acts so blamed queer! Eyes red like he'd be'n cryin'. Don't pay no attention to what a body says to him! Jes' sits in the ole lady. She don't hafto much more than whisper before he hears her."

"Sick, I reckon," agreed Cal. "But if I could git hands on that thar shore enough son that stays away an' leaves his mother to the keer uv Slinks I'd make him sicker'n Slinks is!"

"His tracks wouldn't stop this side uv the state line!" said Long Jess. "Must a-thought a heap uv him. Her longin' to see him was so strong that she sold out what little she had, an', half sick, started west to hunt for him. When she reached the end of the railroad it took the best part uv her little money to buy the team an' wagon. No idy whur to find him. No word from him in many a long day; but she started with the determination, woman like, to look all over the west to find her boy. Took sick an' kept a-gittin' worse, but kept right on in the hunt fer her boy. Then the balance is a blank to her. Got out of her head. Don't know whur nor how long the team wandered ar'und. But now she's happy, thinkin' at last she's found her boy. If I could git a-holt of the feller—roamin' around in the west at his ease, while his ole mother's pore an' needy, and brealcin' her heart fer him—I'd"——

"Maybe he did not know how bad her condition was," he said, abruptly. "Perhaps, when he left, misfortune had not taken the most of her property. Perhaps, discouraged, heartbroken, he had gone west, where misfortune met him at every turn, till he sunk—sunk—well, perhaps the thoughts of home served still more to dishearten him, and"——

"Wouldn't thoughts of his mother an' of Bessie"——

"Bessie died before he left home," said Slinks, gravely. "She was his sweetheart in those old, happy days—Well, he was unlucky, heartsick, discouraged and sank"——

"Do you reckon he'd try to lift himself up if he had a ole mother an' a gang uv friends, which gang kain't precisely express all their feelin's, but"——

"He would try," said Slinks earnestly.

Long Jess put out his hard paw.

"Paul Emery," was all he said.

"Boys," said Long Jess, "I a-'lowed, a little bit ago, that Slinks was sick. But he's dead, now an'"——

"He will never rise again!" said Paul Emery, gravely.—T. P. Morgan in Frank Leslie's.

MUSIC HALL.

"Robert Macaire" was the opera that attracted a large audience to Music hall last evening. To say that all were highly pleased is mildly putting it, judging from the complimentary remarks we overheard from those coming from the hall. In truth the evening was a very enjoyable one, and will be an incentive to attend again tonight and listen to "The Chimes of Normandy." The Bennett-Moulton Opera Co. has always been a favorite here, and is stronger this season than ever. Matinee this afternoon, "The Mikado;" take the children there.

ECHOES FROM THE GREAT STORM.

Capt. David R. Grogan, keeper of White island light station, Isles of Shoals, arrived in on Monday of this week, and reports the November storm as the most severe ever experienced by him at the island, but no very serious damage was done, beyond the carrying off a henccop and flock of hens owned by Asst. Keeper Tarlton.

About a year ago the lighthouse department erected on Anderson's rock, a detached rock about three-quarters of a mile southeast from White island, having deep water all around it, and being the outermost peril to navigation of the Isles of Shoals, an iron spindle ten inches in diameter and thirty-six feet high, surmounted by a cage. This spindle was broken off about two feet above the surface of the rock by the November storm.

The Ipswich bay fishermen report large quantities of barrelled flour to be floating about the bay, supposed to be the cargo of some homeward-bound Nova Scotia vessel wrecked in the great storm.

The spar-laden schooner whose dismasted and abandoned hull drifted ashore on Boon island five years ago, was floated off by the sea during the November storm, and drifted to the Shoals. The waterlogged hulk found its way in between Smuttynose and Cedar islands, was carried clear over the breakwater by the tremendous sea, and finally brought up on Lunging island, and there went to pieces. About a hundred fine spars were secured by Mr. John Hall of Smuttynose island, most of them, it is said, being far above ordinary high-water mark when found.

The monument to Capt. John Smith on Star island, a shaft about fifteen feet high, was blown down by the gale. While there was no one specially disastrous accident on Star or Appledore islands during the gale, the aggregate of damage done will foot up to a large sum.

MATRIMONIAL.

Mr. Charles Bowden, postmaster at York Beach, Me., and Miss Romie Ellis, eldest daughter of Mr. H. Z. Ellis of the same place, were united in marriage on Saturday, the 24th ult., by Rev. G. O. Holmes, at the Ocean House, the residence of the bride's parents. The ceremony took place at 11:30 o'clock in the forenoon, and was followed by a sumptuous wedding breakfast, after which the newly made husband and wife left amid a shower of old slippers and rice, and bearing with them the best wishes of many friends, to take the 1:40 P. M. train for Boston. Mr. and Mrs. Bowden were the recipients of a large number of useful and valuable presents.

"A COMING STAR."

Miss Grace Esther Drew, daughter of Mr. John W. Drew of Concord, an estimable and accomplished young lady well known in this city, has adopted the stage as a profession, and has achieved a flattering success. She was given the leading part in Charles Atkinson's company, after one rehearsal, and her first appearance brought her many favorable notices, unsought. The Boston Herald in closing a long complimentary article on this lady says: "She will work in the ranks for a few seasons, until she has gained needed experience and become familiar with the technical work of her profession, and after that she is likely to take her place in the firmament of the theatrical stars."

Miss Drew's first appearance as a professional actress was made after a few hours study, and to fill a vacancy in the leading part with which the manager of a company suddenly found himself confronted. She was at the time a pupil at a school of dramatic expression at Boston.

THE STORM AT BOON ISLAND.

Capt. James Burke, first assistant keeper of Boon island light-station, arrived in on Monday night for the first time since the November storm, coming in on a schooner. Capt. Burke is an experienced seaman, but never experienced anything like the late storm, which made noticeable changes in the minor features of the rocky islet.

For one thing, the spar-laden schooner Teal, of St. John, N. B., which was thrown ashore on the island five years ago next January, dismasted and abandoned, and of the fate of whose crew no word was ever learned, was carried off by the sea, and the place which has known her so long will know her no more forever.

Capt. Burke was the only member of the official staff on the island during the gale, Keeper Lamprey having resigned and removed to the main land, and Mr. Williams, the new keeper, being ashore on business connected with the light at the time the unexpected storm began; but there were twelve good men on the island engaged in making general repairs to the buildings of the station, and they rendered every possible aid to the light keeper. The worst of the storm was on Sunday night, Nov. 26th, from midnight to daylight. About midnight Capt. Burke roused all hands—or called them, for no one on the island was sleeping—and all the stores were removed from the storehouse to the keepers' dwelling. At two o'clock Monday morning he directed the workmen to leave their quarters, a small detached building about fifty feet from the house, and take refuge in the dwelling; the stone underpinning was soon washed from under this detached building, and it rested on a lot of stones that were washed in under it, wabbling about like a drunken man until it was shored up and blocked up the next day; the stone underpinning of the boat house was also washed away, and a huge rock weighing thousands of pounds was thrown in between the ways, rendering it impossible to use them for hauling up the boats until it is broken up and removed.

About three o'clock Monday morning Capt. Burke and one of the workmen were passing through the brick covered way between the dwelling and the lighthouse, when the workman happening to glance up through a window saw an enormous sea descending, and jumped back, having no time to even give a word of warning to the keeper. The sea struck the southerly face of the covered way, smashing in the double doors, one being of heavy plank and the other of lighter panel work, and carried the debris out through a window opposite, but leaving enough water to fill the covered way and tower to the depth of about three feet. A barrel of glass chimneys for the tower lamp were smashed to atoms, and a large quantity of kerosene set afloat. Capt. Burke, who was but just clear of the doors when they were stove in, had no thought but that his companion had been swept away by the sea, and was delighted to find him still in the land of the living a half hour later.

The tower is 133 feet high from the sea level, but the plate glass of the lantern was thickly encrusted with salt from the evaporation of the spray which every few moments struck it; and the vibration of the heavy stone tower was plainly perceptible throughout the storm. Mrs. Williams, wife of the keeper, and her daughter, did not remove their clothing for three days and nights, but none of the men on the island displayed more quiet bravery and coolness than did these ladies. There are two floors to the dwelling, one fifteen inches above the other, and between these floors on that Monday morning the water was rushing with every sea, and Capt. Burke was thinking at one time to order all hands into the light tower for safety, but the fall of the tide obviated any need of this.

On the morning of Wednesday, the 28th, a large boat was seen adrift in the offing, but no person was seen in her; and had there been no help could have been given, for it would have been madness to have attempted to launch a boat in such a sea. On the same day a large piece of a vessel's rail was thrown ashore, with about seventy feet of wire rope attached; it was evidently part of a new vessel, and from the size of the eyebolts in it, and other indications, was supposed to have been a part of some large square-rigged vessel.

The storm was far the worst within the experience of any of the persons on the island, and they have no desire to go through such another.

MUCH SALT WATER.

The tide on Tuesday was very high—higher, it is said, that at any previous time for twenty years or more past. The driveway at E. F. Sise & Co.'s coal wharf was a lake; T. E Call & Son's and John H. Broughton's lumber wharves were over-flowed, and Appledore wharf was entirely submerged, while some of the lower wharves seemed to have been totally obliterated. The marginal road along the northerly side of the south pond was wholly out of sight for several days, and the waters of the south pond were navigable for good sized boats. The cause for this unusual aggression of old Neptune is not apparent, there having been no storm raging at the time to back in the waters of the ocean; possibly a great earthquake in some other part of the world may prove the solution of the phenomenon. No damage worth mentioning is reported as having resulted here.

The Portsmouth House, formerly the Walker soap manufactory, near the Boston & Maine rail oad station, was closed Monday, and a keeper put in by Sheriff Coffin. It is reported that the manager of the concern cleared out last Saturday with considerable "boodle." If one-half the stories told about the place are true, it has been closed none too soon; and there are a number of other similar institutions which could be abated without the least injury to the morals or business welfare of the city.

The Boston & Maine Railroad Relief Association's fourth annual ball is close at hand, and the event is eagerly anticipated by a large number of ticket holders in this city. The occasion will be an enjoyable one, and the object is laudable and should not be ignored by any who can assist in its success.

Congress is recommended to appropriate $50,000 for the improvement of Portsmouth harbor, a like sum to make Little Harbor a harbor of refuge, and $12,430 to establish a water supply at the Portsmouth navy yard.

Mr. C. Sullivan, telegraph operator at the Kittery Depot, while tending the drawe on the bridge Tuesday evening had one of his hands caught in the gearing, and was released with some difficulty; the extent of his injury we were unable to learn, but trust it is not serious.

The life-saving station at Jerry's point, Newcastle, will soon be connected with this city by telephone, Capt. Harding, captain of the station, having been in Portsmouth Tuesday and made the necessary arrangements. This is proper.

Mr. H. Fisher Eldredge will entertain the Mechanics' Fire Society at the Rockingham house next Friday evening, at its quarterly supper.

The Literary society of the Eliot Library association had a "Holmes night" in the Methodist church at South Eliot on Tuesday evening, in aid of the library fund. Selections from the poetical works of Oliver Wendell Holmes were read and commented on, and the quite large number of persons in attendance passed a very pleasant evening.

Master Philip D. Laighton, son of Hon. John Laighton and wife of Richards avenue, celebrated the third anniversary of his birthday on Tuesday afternoon by entertaining a number of his youthful acquaintances at the home of his parents.

Chief of Police Conlon, assisted by Patrolmen Pender and Jarvis, will incidentally render the "Police song" at The Court of King Jollyboy, Jan. 1st and 2d.

Much needed improvements are in course of construction at the several entrances to the post-office lobby, in the shape of storm-houses which will undoubtedly keep out much snow and rain.

The recent "slump" in railroad securities is another proof to those who continue to invest their funds in Western securities, through good agents, of the wisdom of their choice. Those parties who have based their judgement on receiving a fixed and safe rate of interest, have reason to congratulate themselves. History shows beyond question, that interest is by far more successful than speculation, and is void of the anxiety which characterizes those of speculative ideas. County, school, principal and Debenture Bonds and Real Estate Mortages are safe as any future thing can well be. For sale by JOHN LAIGHTON, No. 1 Market square.

Moulton Brothers of Beach Ridge, York, have done a large business in their apple-evaporating establishment this fall, having cured about 2500 bushels of the fruit, and are still going ahead, having several hundred bushels more to operate on. The refuse,—cores, peelings, etc.,—is ground up into cider for the manufacture of vinegar. The apples used are all of good marketable quality.

The subject of the appointment of a special liquor constable for York county has been considered by the governor and council of Maine, and it has been decided to make the appointment; but it is not probable that it will be made at once.

The bridge at Dover Point is to be repaired and strengthened by the driving of a large number of spiles on the railroad side. The material is all on the ground and the work has commenced.

The live stock, farming tools and vehicles, and much other personal property of Mr. John Woods, were sold at auction on Tuesday at the Davis farm, so called, at Sagamore, which Mr. Woods has occupied for several years, but now leaves to take up his residence on the Thatcher Emery place at the foot of Pleasant street, this city. Two horses, a yoke of oxen, four cows, a large number (fifteen or twenty) of carts and carriages of various kinds, harnesses, household gear, etc., were disposed of at fair prices.

The under dog in the fight may be right; but the top dog is more than that—he is all right.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

"Was it the girl's father who broke off the engagement?" inquired Jenkins. "No," replied the jilted lover, "it was her little brother."

Now that freezing cold weather is here, nobody seems to have the slightest trouble in getting the car window open to its fullest extent.

A drummer for the general merchandise trade in the mountain region of Kentucky and Tennessee, where the people are supposed to be way behind the times, says that Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam is known there everywhere, and that the demand is constantly increasing.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

What is Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most disagreeable. Catarrh in the head. It is an inflammation of the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Mr. Vest offered a resolution continuing the select committee to investigate the meat product of the United States, and its transportation. The resolution was referred to the committee on contingent expenses.

The Senate on motion of Mr. Dawes adopted a resolution calling for information as to alleged outrages committed in Alaska on Indian females.

Resolutions continuing the select committee on the relations with Canada, and instructing the committee on epidemic diseases to inquire as to cause of yellow fever in Florida were adopted.

The tobacco and alcohol sections were considered, and amendment offered voted down. It was agreed to consider Union Pacific funding bill next Wednesday.

There was considerable political discussion between Dawes and McPherson regarding the continuing of the Internal revenue system, and the former got the latter to admit finally that as an alternative between the protective system and the internal revenue he would vote to abolish the latter to maintain the former. The Senate went into executive session and then adjourned.

HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—During the morning hour a number of bills and resolutions were introduced.

The Direct Tax bill was made order for Thursday, Saturday and Tuesday of next week and then to be voted on.

Mr. Payson of Illinois, from the committee on public lands, reported a sprivileged matter a bill to quiet titles of settlers on Des Moines River lands in Iowa. After discussion the bill was passed, and the speaker laid before the House the annual report of the Attorney General, which was referred to the committee on judiciary.

Representative Vandever of California introduced a bill to divide California into two States. He claimed at length that one State resulted in a diversity of interests and it was thought the interests of the people of two sections would be advanced if each section could legislate for itself alone. The great length of coast line and its variety of climate resources rendered State legislation that would be acceptable to the people of both South and North California very difficult, if not impracticable. He did not expect to secure the passage of the bill at this session, but hoped something would come from it in the future.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT AT DETROIT.

An Engine Runs Into a Street Car and Seriously Injures Ten Persons.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

DETROIT, MICH., Dec. 5.—At noon a Lake Shore and Michigan Southern switching engine on its way to the junction, collided with a street car at the Croghan street crossing, demolishing the car and injuring 10 persons, five of whom will probably die. There were fourteen passengers in the car. The side of the car was crushed in, overturned and pushed along a few feet. Following is a partial list of the injured: John Sceenious, head and back bruised, shoulder broken, face badly cut, hurt internally and cannot live; Mrs. Mary Hoak, bruised near the temple, left arm broken in two places, face, head and back bruised, injured internally, temporal artery cut. The woman nearly bled to death, and her recovery is doubtful. Miss Marshall, cut and bruised about the head and face, hip broken, and contusion over right ear. She is unconscious. Miss Vina Guilloz, cuts about the head and face, and internal injuries. Propably will die. Joseph Cornelius and Frank Egbert the engineer received slight bruises.

Did Not Stand the Test.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

ANNAPOLIS, Dec. 5.—At a second test of the Bessemer cast steel gun at the proving grounds at the Naval Academy this afternoon the gun burst into numberless pieces, breaking a heavy timbered platform it was on, into a thousand fragments.

Schooner Sinbad Burned.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ROCKLAND, ME., Dec. 5.—Schooner Sinbad, lime laden for Boston, went ashore on China ledge in Muscle Ridge channel this afternoon. The cargo took fire, and the vessel is a total loss. She had just been rebuilt. No insurance on vessel; cargo insured.

Electrical Executions.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The law requiring electrical executions goes into effect January 1st. but today the amount and character of the current required to make death certain and instantaneous has not been determined.

Killed While Walking on the Track.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MALDEN, MASS., Dec. 5.—In Chelsea tonight George W. Quinn, aged 24, and Abbie L. Wiggin, aged 16, were struck and killed by the 9:15 train from Boston on the Boston & Maine road. The accident occurred at the Everett avenue crossing. The bodies were hurled 40 feet.

Ex-Senator Rollins at Home.

(Special to Daily Chronicle.)

DOVER, N. H., Dec. 5.—Ex-Senator Rollins was able to be moved today, and was taken from the Massachusetts General Hospital at Boston, conveyed here in a special car, and driven to his home at Rollinsford in a hack. He was not disturbed by the journey, though appearing quite feeble.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—President E. H. Capen of Tufts college was today appointed a member of the State Board of Education, vice E. C. Carrigan, deceased.

It Will Strike Portsmouth Hard.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Representative Stewart of Georgia today introduced a bill to establish a graduated income tax which provides that all individuals, corporations and estates in the United States receiving an annual net income of $5000 and upwards, shall be assessed as follows: Five thousand up to ten thousand dollars, 2 per cent; $10,000 to $25,000, 3 per cent; $25,000 to $50,000, 4 per cent; $50,000 to $75,000, 5 per cent; $75,000 to $100,000, 6 per cent; $100,000 to $200,000, 8 per cent; all over $200,000, 10 per cent,—Said income tax to be applied to the payment of pensions.

Good for the County Committee.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The Republican County Committee tonight by a vote of 295 to 16 adopted the report of the executive committee in relation to the eighth assembly district organization. This action dissolves the district organization, headed by John J. O'Brien, and expels O'Brien from the County Committee.

$50,000 Reward for the Capture of Tascott.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Mrs. Henrietta L. Snell, the widow of the murdered millionaire, t night announced that she will pay $50,000 for the capture of William B. Tascott, in any part of the world. The offer is good for four months. The report that Tascott is under arrest is premature, although a man answering his description is in custody at some place not yet revealed.

Gen. Harrison Brings Down the First Bird.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 5.—Gen. Harrison, Col. Pierce and several others started this morning on a shooting excursion. Russell Harrison received a telegram from Col. Pierce tonight saying that Gen. Harrison was the first member of the party to bring down a bird. They enjoyed a fine hunter's dinner at a farm house, and had had a good and successful day's sport.

A Report that the Release of the Steamer Haytien Republic has been Demanded. Interviews with Officials of the State Department and Secretary Whitney. Available Naval Vessels.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—While there is reason to believe that the government has demanded the release of the steamer Haytien Republic which was recently seized at Port au Prince, it is impossible to obtain any official information to that effect. Secretary Bayard declines to say anything whatever on the subject, and when Assistant Secretary Rives was asked, he answered: "I am not at liberty to say." Secretary Whitney said: "It is a diplomatic question entirely, and I would not know anything about it unless the Secretary of State requested the use of a naval vessel. In case a demand was made for the release of the vessel in question, and it was refused, we would at once take steps to enforce it by sending our vessels to that country. The case cannot have reached that point yet, as we have not been asked to send any vessels to Hayti. Some of our vessels may go there, but so far no orders have been issued on the subject." Commodore Walker, chief of the navigation bureau, said: "The Galena, Yantic, and Richmond, now at New York, could be made ready for sea in about two weeks, and the Ossipee at Norfolk, in about four weeks. In case only one vessel was needed, the Galena, flying the flag of Rear Admiral Luce, would probably be selected.

Belva Lockwood Talks of Contesting the Election.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 5.—Belva Lockwood says she has evidence that several thousand votes cast for her in New York were not counted, and that if she decides to use it several "ward heelers" will be landed in Sing Sing. Her friends are gathering additional evidence, and Belva says she thinks she will contest the legality of the election, in order to show how she has been defrauded of the votes cast for her.

Mr. Blaine's Daughter-in-law To Go Upon the Stage to Support Herself and Child.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Mrs. Jas. G. Blaine, Jr., acting upon the advice of her counsel, Gen. Pryor, has decided to go upon the stage, professionally. Deserted by her husband and with no means of support she has accepted an engagement to become an actress, for which she has shown decided talent in the past. The engagement she has entered into will afford her a salary amply sufficient to support herself and child. "Three years ago," said Mr. Dan Frohman of the Lyceum theatre, "I engaged Mrs. Blaine to appear with Modjeska, but her marriage with young Mr. Blaine interfered and broke off the engagement."

Tascott Said to be in Custody.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—A. J. Stone, agent for the Snell estate, says he has received advices that Tascott, the murderer of millionaire Snell has been arrested.

Quick Work.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Dec. 5.—Joseph D. Stevens, a merchant convicted here in March last, for defrauding his creditors, who was arrested at Portland, Me., last Friday on his return from Europe, was today sentenced to pay $100 fine and the costs of prosecution, and undergo imprisonment in the county jail for a year.

CARSON, NEV., Dec. 5.—The official vote of this state stands: Harrison, 7,238; Cleveland, 5326; Fisk, 45.

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—It is reported that Frank Bates, clerk for B. P. Hutchison, a big board of trade operator, is missing, and that in his accounts he is $20,000 short. John Lonergan, settling clerk for Hutchison, is also said to be missing and it is supposed there was a conspiracy between them.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Brigadier General Samuel Minnes, one of the organizers of the Grand Army, died this afternoon.

FOREIGN.

The White Pasha. Is It Stanley?

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CAIRO, Dec. 5.—Reports received at Wady Halfa, are that the White Pasha is advancing Northward.

An Important Witness for the London Times.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The Times has supbenaed Patrick Molloy, the noted Fenian, who was connected with the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Under Secretary Burke in Phœnix Park, Dublin, to appear as a witness before the Parnell commission. Molloy refused to obey the summons and was arrested and brought to London.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—In the Commons tonight, James Smart, a home rule radical, moved the rejection of the report on the vote for Irish secretary's office, the object being to discuss the statement by the viceroy to the effect 160 deer-elect farms from which tenants had been evicted were readily elect. Stuart contended that this statement was a gross error. Deer-elect farms were never elect. In fact that demonstrated the failure of the government's policy in Ireland. Balfour said the viceroy's report was based upon official returns, and could not be questioned. The vote was approved without division.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—Bismarck in a letter to the Dean of Giessen university, returning thanks for the Doctorship of Divinity conferred upon him says: "I vive the distinction conferred upon me to my constant efforts in the cause of tolerant and practical christianity. He who is conscious of his own insufficiency will, as age and experience enlarges his knowledge, be proportionately tolerant of the opinions of others."

EATING FROM NECESSITY.

How many of us really and truly sit down at the table, and, as we should, enjoy our eating? asks a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Eat to enjoy life. We have no doubt but that the following narrative will be recognized as that of a personal experience by many: Arise in the morn early or late, as the case may be, under protest—a sufficient testimony that balmy sleep, his sweet restorer, has failed to make proper connections, so to speak; move about, strange to say, stretchey, achey, even tired yet, eyes hard to get open properly, maybe fall over a chair or two, or stoop over to get some article of apparel and be compelled to make an effort. In fact he must go through a bracing-up process. After performing his morning toilet he has limbered up some, got his eyes open and floundered down stairs to the breakfast table. Looked at the watch mentally concluded or realized that he must be at business right off. Braces up again and mechanically, may be vigorously, proceeds to ingest what he can; matter of necessity, never hungry for breakfast, you know.

Rush out of house for street cars, stand up maybe all the way down town. If he is fortunate enough to get a seat he experiences a sort of relief, and recognizes that he is still tired. Get to work dull and listless. Necessities or excitement of work for five hours or so occupies his attention. Whistle blows, bell rings, clock strikes or friend comes in. Dinner is sought; feels somewhat empty, hardly hungry; eats a fair meal and feels full; empty feeling gone. A desire to rest is experienced—even sleep. Braces up and again gets to work for five hours or more; has to struggle for awhile; eyes are very heavy; sense of discomfort about stomach. Finally time to stop work comes; closes up active effort, but mind and attention still lingers. He starts home with heavy legs and feet; headache; maybe somewhat dizzy. No seat on cars this way either; recognizes that he is very tired.

Gets home, crawls up the front steps and exclaims: "Supper ready?" "Yes, come right along." He sits down, has no appetite, but eats again, "from necessity." Not much, easily satisfied. Feels sort of weak about his stomach as well as otherwise. Putters around in or out of the house for a while or reads the paper; feels a little better; seeks, maybe, entertainment, the excitement of which fixes his attention from self. At last he seeks repose exhausted, and maybe sleeps heavy, or not at all. The next morn and day bring the same experience, and so on day after day.

Eternal effort; eternal desire for rest; eternal lack of enjoyment of life; eternal eating from necessity. Can we wonder that this man eats from necessity? Yet this is an American of to-day. His distemper is of his own making. He is a robber of nature and has failed to put in practice the full meaning of the divine commandment: "Thou shalt not kill."

Donovan, the murderer of King at New Haven, Conn., saved the hangman a job by drowning himself.

The world moves. Anarchist Sunday schools have been opened in Chicago.

The democratic veterans' movement in Indiana is said to be of comparatively little importance.

A custodian of Polish funds at Mt. Carmel, Pa., has disappeared. The funds have gone too.

Who says woman is man's inferior in business? Miss Hage, internal revenue clerk at Harrisburg, Pa., is $6500 short in her accounts, and has gone to Canada. She has been speculating.

THURSDAY, DEC. 6, 1888.

There are many Dartmouth alumni in and about Portsmouth, and they have an opportunity to show their love for their alma mater by contributing to the fund which Dartmouth students are soliciting for the purpose of erecting a gymnasium shed for winter base ball practice. College athletic sports have thousands of warm supporters, and now-a-days one who withholds his influence from such matters is considered as doing his college an injury. A good, healthy competition for the supremacy in athletics—one that is devoid of any corrupting influences—has always marked Dartmouth's efforts, and there is no reason to believe that she will backslide from this standard; and no person contributing to this fund will have occasion to regret it.

There is no longer any doubt but that the Lord Sackville episode hurt the democrats in New York in two ways, first, in its effect upon the Irish vote, which to some extent would not support Cleveland after it became apparent that his re-election was desired by the British government; and second, in angering the English-born voters. One of the latter, now a prominent democratic business man in New York city, expressed the opinion a few days ago that President Cleveland's treatment of Lord Sackville had alienated from his support nearly every voter in that city who was born in England and who had still a warm place in his heart for the mother country.

Gen. Sherman, who has received hundreds of sympathetic messages since the death of his wife, publishes a card in yesterday's Tribune saying that it is impossible for him to make suitable replies, except in a general way. He says he followed his wife's minutest wish in regard to the spot where she was buried at St. Louis. There is something pathetic in this paragraph in the hero's card:

Of course, being the older and subjected to harder strains, I expected to precede her; but it is ordained otherwise. In due time I will resume my place by her side, and I want my friends, especially my old soldier friends, to know that they shall not be taxed one cent, for I have made, or will make, every provision.

The New York Sun says the democratic party is to be congratulated that Mr. Randall has resumed his seat in Washington, and will now "resume his former leadership, which none but cranks or enemies of democratic government could have assailed." This is a hard blow to Mr. Cleveland and his co-laborer, Mr. Mills, who induced the Democratic House to give Mr. Randall a back seat in the deliberations of the party.

Amid all his cares Gen. Harrison maintains that quiet humor that has always pervaded his daily life, as is evidenced by the following letter written to David Loevi in New York, who named his infant son after the President-elect:

"Let me express the hope that the way in life of the child may be pleasant and that the name which has been assigned without his consent may at least not impede his success in life.

Very truly yours, BENJAMIN HARRISON.

The question of how best to heat Representatives Hall in the Capitol at Concord, where the Constitutional Convention will meet in January, is still unsettled. Inasmuch as the meeting of the legislature will probably be changed to occur in the winter, it would seem well to put in heating apparatus of a permanent character. There is not time to do this before the convention meets, and it is likely that stoves will be employed this season.

The followng pretty good thing is going the rounds of the press: A democratic statesman at Glenn's Falls, N. Y., on being asked what he thought of the election, replied: "I don't like it; it's too bad, but it's ould Cleveland's own fault. If the ould fool had stuck to making his baking powders, and let this free trade business alone, he'd ha' been elected sixy enough."

The story that Mr. Blaine was to become the editor of a New York magazine was too silly to require notice, but it has been contradicted authoritatively. It is understood that Mr. Blaine contemplates writing another book on American political history, but as yet has not given any attention to the matter.

Mr. Bowser Comes Home and Finds That the Cook Has Left. He Essays to Fill the Vacant Place.

Mr. Bowser came home the other afternoon just in time to meet the cook going away with her bundle and he rushed into the house to inquire:

"I suppose you've gone and done it again?"

"What?"

"Abused and maltreated the girl until her sense of justice has compelled her to leave?"

"Then who had? She looked heartbroken as I passed her just now."

"Did she? Poor thing! She got a letter this morning from her aunt in Canada, telling her that she had been left $5,000 in cash, and advising her to come home and marry a man who owns three farms. She must feel very sorrowful!"

"Humph! And you didn't put too much work on her?"

"No."

"Nor make her feel her position?"

"No. Her position was in the parlor about half the time."

"Well, it seems very queer to me that so many of our girls leave. Everything will be upset now for a week, I suppose."

"Oh, no. You can cook, you know, and you are such a sympathetic soul that you ought to be willing to go into the kitchen for a day or two. I shall depend on you, Mr. Bowser."

"Oh, you will? Not satisfied with driving a dozen poor souls to destruction, you want a rub at me. I wouldn't have your spirit for all the money in the world!"

He went away with that, but he was home an hour earlier than usual, and when I inquired the cause he said:

"What for? Why, the child and I have got to have something to eat haven't we, and who's to cook it if I don't take hold?"

"I can cook."

"Mrs. Bowser, I've long felt it my duty to give you a few lessons in the culinary art. I have held off, hoping your pride would force you to take hold, but the limit has been reached. The time has come when I must sacrifice my business to enter my kitchen and prevent my child from feeling the pangs of hunger."

"Please don't."

"But I will! I'm driven to it. I've got a wife who can't cook the northwest end of a last year's turnip, and who can't keep a cook over a week at a time. I've put up with it too long—much too long, Mrs. Bowser. I must sacrifice my dignity to preserve the life of my child."

"Shan't I help you get supper?"

"Not a help. You'd only be in the way. Just sit down in the rocker, Mrs. Bowser, put your feet on the lounge, get a cud of gum in your mouth, and sit and chew and chew, and think what mean things you are going to say to the next girl to drive her away. When supper is ready I will call your royal highness."

He disappeared with that.

When he reached the kitchen he took off his cuffs and coat, pushed up his sleeves, and kindled a fire. His confidence began to desert him at this point, and he seemed to be studying deeply as he filled the teakettle even full and set it to boil. I had some fresh beefsteak in the ice-box, and he got it out, scratched his head in a thoughtful way and laid it on the kitchen table. Then he went down cellar after the hatchet, wiped the head of it on his right leg, and pounded away until a good share of the steak had gone into the board.

Mr. Bowser's next move was to hunt behind the pantry door for a spider which we had never used. He carried it to the kitchen towel, gave it a wipe, and then placed it on the stove. He had heard that grease was necessary, and he put in some butter, dropped in his steak, and soon had it sizzing. Then he started in for the biscuit. He got down the dish-pan, filled it almost full, and then reflected for a moment. I took advantage of the occasion to open the door and remark:

"Mr. Bowser, you needn't figure on an elaborate supper, under the circumstances. Just make a cup of tea and we'll get along."

"Mrs. Bowser, you ought to know by this time that there is no half-way work with me," he replied with great frigidity. "You can afford to neglect the comfort of this family, but I can not. Please return to your gum and your novel."

Then he went ahead just as any other husband would.

He had heard about soda and shortening in biscuit, and he mixed the flour with cold water, put in pepper and salt, slashed off half a pound of butter and stirred it in, and then remembered the baking-powder. There was nearly a quarter of a pound in the box and the whole of it went in.

How Mr. Bowser managed to get a grease spot between his shoulderblades, flour in his hair, and baking-powder in his hind pocket I do not know, but it was probably while he was rolling that mass out. He didn't trifle with the mixing-board, but used the spot where he had pounded the beef. I heard the mass of dough fall on the floor three different times with a dull thud, but he wasn't a bit discouraged. He got it rolled out at last, cut some biscuits with a teacup, and presently the oven door shut on his tins. He had just forty biscuit.

By this time the steak had burned black on both sides and he set it down behind the stove and prepared the tea. To two quarts of water he used one teaspoonful. Ten minutes later he summoned me to the banquet. He had the tablecloth on crisscross, the butter on a pie-plate, the cake in the cheese-dish, and his beafsteak was placed in the center of the table on a pie-tin.

"Anything wrong?" he asked as I sat down.

"Oh, no. You have done spendidly."

"I am aware of it. This table has never looked so homelike before."

His biscuits were raw in the middle, while top and bottom were so wonderfully and fearfully made that I had to laugh.

I didn't taste, but he did. I was watching him, and a look of horror came over his face at the first mouthful. He wouldn't give in, however, but crowded a whole biscuit down and pretended to enjoy it.

"I wouldn't eat any of that steak, Mr. Bowser," I said, as he eyed it suspiciously.

"Wouldn't you? Perhaps you want it all yourself."

"I don't think it is properly cooked."

"Well, I do. If that isn't a nice steak then we have never had one in this house."

He ate at least a quarter of a pound, though every morsel choked him. I offered to wash up [illegible] put me out of [illegible] ahead.

gether in the flour-pan, wiped them on whatever he could find loose, and it was a week before we got the pantry in order again. That night, after bragging of what a breakfast he was going to get, Mr. Bowser was taken with chills and colic, and when the doctor came and I showed him the beef and the biscuit he said:

"Mr. Bowser, if you hadn't the stomach of a shark you'd have been dead an hour ago. You'd better quit this sort of nonsense if you want to live the year out."

And as soon as we were alone Mr. Bowser turned on me with:

"Don't expect me to shield you again! Your jealousy prompted you to put poison into that flour while I was down cellar! If this thing occurs again I will send you to the gallows!" Detroit Free Press.

A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

Extracts From a Remarkable Lecture Delivered by Dr. E. E. Hammond, Before the National Scientist's Conventions.

"We are startled constantly by the sudden death of some man who seemed the picture of health. He thought he was well. He had felt strange pains shooting through his body, but as they did not remain, he forgot them. His head pained him periodically, he was somewhat paler than common and unaccountably tired, but he felt comparatively well and vigorous. And yet, he suddenly died! It is a shame to our boasted civilization."

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and why is it? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the most terrible of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful, sudden strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural laws. The solemn and terrible fact is, that men and women drag along, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the cause lay far back of all these things. The truth is that weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' I have seen numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where the preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been almost remarkable in its results. I use it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

A Kiss.

Something made of nothing, tasting very sweet,
A most delicious compound, with ingredients complete;
But if, as on occasion, the heart and mind are sour,
It has no great significance; it loses half its power.

Something made of nothing, and never twice the same,
Though 'tis known in every country where love has had a name;
It is clearly meant for giving, though 'tis sometimes bought and sold,
And, like coffee and potatoes, is not so good when cold.

It oft appeases discord, when words have failed to please,
Whether bestowed carelessly or given just to tease;
For a laugh will often save one from doing something worse,
And the lips that taste this sweetness are seldom heard to curse.

'Tis the strangest, oddest mixture, this something made of naught,
Which is never seen nor handled, although its often caught;
Which will last spoilt in keeping, whatever be the clime,
For this something made of nothing will stand the test of time.

—Mary E. Buell, in Milwaukee Sentinel.

GOOD FOR EVIL.

There were about twenty accountants in the large ante-room connected with one of the Government bureaus, each one working busily and silently; but my story has to do with three only—Græme Douglass the head-clerk, Miss Brown, and old Mr. Stickney.

Græme Douglass was a man of perhaps forty, with a grave dark face, framed in iron-grey hair, firm but full and well-cut lips, and a massive chin.

Miss Brown had worked at the adjoining desk for nearly three years. Regularly at the appointed hour her slight neat figure would be in its place, and her small but firm fingers, pen in hand, would begin their work. In all this time the only advance towards acquaintance had been a bow at entering and the same at her departure.

Her features might have been cut from marble, so perfect were they in outline from the round dimple-cleft chin, the full but delicate lips, the straight Grecian nose, to the high, broad forehead, and as expressionless!

Græme Douglass was not much given to speculations about womankind; but he often found himself wondering at Miss Brown—so young, and with such capacities of beauty slumbering in that exquisite but icy-cold face.

The third person of whom our story treats was Seaforth Stickney, a frail-looking, care-worn old man, whose desk stood next to that of Miss Brown. He was often absent from his post through illness. Then Miss Brown would hurry through her allotted work, and make up his books for him, watchful that his books did not run behind, as in that case the remedy was sure to be a prompt and decisive one—dismissal.

One morning he was absent as one of the heads of the department came in to confer with Græme Douglass about a proposed cutting down of expenses in his corps of clerks.

"I notice Stickney seems breaking down lately; he's away so often. Does he attend to his work?"

"His books are always in order," said Græme, but he did not add, "through Miss Brown's kindness."

"Then, of course it's all right. But things must be cut down, as I said before. Now, who shall it be? Whose salary will best bear slicing?"

Græme Douglass had not occupied his position all these years without learning to feel an interest in his fellow-workers, and it was a difficult question to answer. After a moment's hesitation he said:

"I don't know that I can single one out over the other. I hardly think any clerk here has more than he needs. You must make your own selection of the"—"victims," he was about to say, but checked himself and added "names."

"Well, I'll say Stickney for one. He's old and must have raised his family by this time, if he has one. Then, Miss May is young, and I know Curtiss is a bachelor. From the end of this month the salaries will be cut down, say three hundred a year."

"That would leave May and Curtiss barely six hundred. Could they live on that?"

"Well, take one hundred and fifty from them. Stickney has fourteen hundred. He can stand the reduction, I know. That's a good sum of money, Douglass."

Douglass bowed. Nothing more was expected of him than ready acquiescence. Mr. —— was high in authority, and could, had he chosen to do so, have put someone else in his place. She kept silent.

One by one the clerks had gone their various ways until only Græme Douglass and Miss Brown remained.

He was about leaving the room, when, to his great surprise, he heard a low hesitating voice at his side.

"May I speak with you a moment, Mr. Douglass?"

"I am at your service for any number of moments, Miss Brown," he was answered, drawing a chair forward for her to sit down.

She remained standing, however, and as she raised her eyes to Græme's face he saw for the first time what capacities of expression their lustrous depths held.

"I could not help hearing Mr. —'s remarks about the reduction of expenses this morning. I have no one but myself to care for. Will you be so kind as to see that my salary suffers instead of that poor old man's?"

"But, Miss Brown——"

"It will be all the same to the Government, and I wish it."

"Your request shall be granted then. I will see to it myself."

"Thank you." The slight color had deepened to crimson by this time, and the perfect lips absolutely parted into a smile, displaying teeth of pearly whiteness, which lighted her face like a gleam of sunshine.

"All these years I have stood side-by-side with that young woman, and have been blind—blind as a bat to her beauty! She's the most perfect creature my eyes have ever rested upon, without exception! But what crotchet has she taken about that uninteresting old Stickney? It isn't everyone who'd give a clean three hundred a year to a perfect stranger, for I never saw her speak to him. By George! it's an interesting study, and I'll give a little attention to it."

When Miss Brown appeared next morning she found a small cluster of rarely beautiful flowers upon her desk. She looked at them and then at her neighbor, Mr. Douglass, but he was busy with an engrossing column of figures. He looked, too, sterner than his wont. What folly to connect them with him! It must have been the janitor's little boy, who was often around the place with his father.

She did not take them up and admire them as most girls would have done—girls whose heart-fountains had not been turned to gall and bitterness in their springtime, as had happened to her; but all through the long day they carried their silent messages of sympathy in their wafts of subtle fragrance, and when she left the soothing influence went with her.

After this her desk was never without a tiny bouquet, placed there by the same invisible hand. The girl refrained from asking questions. If the donor wished to do her kindness and unknown, she would accept it in the same spirit.

The keen eyes watching, all unknown to her, at the next desk, brightened with an exultant flash when once, as it were unconsciously, the slender figure dislodged a pansy from among its velvet sisters and placed it in her hair.

All this time a gradual change was taking place. She was not one bit the less reserved, but she did not remind one of the fabled ice-maiden any longer. A light had come into the perfect face which made it very attractive.

She had requested that Mr. Stickney should be kept in ignorance of her kind action, but after a time it came to his ears, and he waited for an opportunity to thank his benefactress. It came at last.

"Miss Brown," he said, "I have become aware of your kind interference in my behalf. My daughter and her invalid husband comprise my family, and I bring you an invitation from Mrs. Delmontaine (my daughter) to take tea with us to-night. We want to thank you with our whole hearts."

"You are not indebted to me in the least, Mr. Stickney. What I have been the means of doing has brought its own reward. My heart is purged of a bitterness that poisoned its very fountains. Tell your daughter, however, I cannot accept her invitation. She will understand why when you tell her I am Sidney Brown, her old schoolmate."

The next day a note came to Sidney from Clarice Delmontaine. It was hurriedly written and blotted as though with tears:

"Oh, Sidney, forgive! My sin has found me out! Eugene was thrown from his horse six years ago, and has been a hopeless paralytic since that time. So you see God has punished us both for our broken faith to you. Come to us. Eugene may pass away at any moment, and it would ease his departing soul to receive your forgiveness.—Your faithful but repentant Clarice."

Græme Douglass watched Sidney's face curiously as she read the note. What meant the change of expression as she mastered its contents? At first intense scorn, then intense pity, then tears!

Sidney looked up and met his eyes.

"Have you bad news, Miss Brown?"

There was no mistaking his deep interest, and Sidney answered him unconsciously, as though acknowledging his right to know.

"I can hardly tell," she said simply. "It is news of trial to others; but I feel like one who has gained a victory over myself. I pity instead of hate. Oh, sir, it is a fearful thing to hate one's kind, and all for one person's sin."

"It is indeed," said Græme gravely.

The key to that strange nature was in his hand at last.

Sidney and Clarice had been schoolfriends. Clarice had won Sidney's lover from his allegiance, and had eloped with him on the eve of what was to have been Sidney's wedding-day, and from that time the girl's heart had been filled with bitter distrust toward all mankind.

She had recognized Mr. Stickney as her faithless friend's father, and had interposed in his behalf with a feeling that to return good for evil might bring the blessing of content to herself. It had been from a purely selfish motive. Now, however, the heart sang pæans.

There is no delight so pure as to be able to forgive, as Sidney felt when standing by the wasted form she had loved so dearly, and who had so darkened her life's horizon with his faithlessness. No bitter feeling was mingled with her kindly words to the dying man or to his broken-hearted wife; she it was who received Clarice into her arms with silent sympathy when the fleeting breath had left the body of the husband she had loved so well.

A new joy had come into Sidney's life. While fighting a battle with herself the live coals she had fanned into a blaze for a forgiven enemy's head had lit a spark in a true and faithful heart which time itself could not extinguish, so bright and pure was the flame. When Græme Douglass told her of his love, Sidney looked up into his face with her frank eyes, and said:

"I have been engaged before, and when he whom I loved proved false, the earth and heaven alike were darkened. Do you believe in second love?"

"Truth cannot love falsehood; so it would not be second love. The first feeling was for a phantom, and vanished with it like a dream of the night. Sidney, do I judge aright those blushes? Ah, dearest, you love me—you love me!"

When a grave, dignified man like Græme Douglass bends beneath love's power, it is irresistible, and carries all before it. At least so Sidney found it when, caught to his heart, he kissed her blushing face again and again, not waiting for an answer. And indeed there was none needed. Sidney's happiness was written too legibly upon her face for him to doubt how dear a gift was his love to her defrauded life.

The British Army.

It appears that the British army is not only the dearest in Europe but the worst fed, so far as the rank and file are concerned. The bread ration is the lowest in Europe, being one pound per day. The allowance of meat is three-quarters of a pound, including bone, whereas continental soldiers are given a full pound of solid meat. The bread and meat are both apt to be of poor quality, while the fuel supplied is insufficient. It is also complained that the soldiers' rations are too monotonous. More variety is needed. The matter has been brought to the attention of parliament, and steps are being taken to remedy the deficiencies.

Fills a Long-Felt Want.

The latest invention to hand in the family dining-room is the jam board. It is a neat little circular board, decorated or plain, fastened to the wall. The name of each of the family is painted on the circumference, and marks the spot where the gum is left until wanted. This saves carrying the gum to bed and getting it in one's hair or swallowing it in the night. It is obvious that the gum board supplies a long-felt want, and he who invented the new fad will have the best wishes of the young ladies.—Ogle County Reporter.

PUNCTUATION.

It is often asked, "When should punctuation be taught?" I believe it can be taught just as soon as a child begins to read and write, which,—thanks to the abolishment of the old alphabet and printing methods!—are now simultaneous achievements.

I have been asked still oftener, "How soon, and how, and why would you use the printers' marks?" As I have not found many teachers who do use them, an experience may prove interesting, and in relating it I hope to answer these questions. A class was sent to me from a lower room, composed of scholars ranging from nine to twelve years of age, the majority of whom were well versed in the use of the period and comma, so it was easy to carry them farther on this road. But writing compositions was still a cross to them, borne with varying degrees of patience or rebelliousness, according to the disposition of each pupil. I had long held a theory as to the use of the printers' marks in correcting compositions, and as these were the youngest pupils I had ever taught, it seemed a good time to begin. Not a scholar knew any of them except the caret and the sign for italics, so I had virgin soil in which to work.

One day the simpler marks were placed on the board,—the two lines for small capitals, the ¶ for paragraph, the tr. and line around words to indicate transposition, and " for omitted quotation marks (one comma being used to indicate an omitted apostrophe),—as these were the marks that would most easily indicate their most common errors.

The pupils used no books, their work consisting of written work on blackboard or paper, and object language lessons. All had notebooks, into which the signs given them were copied, and in a few days all had learned them. They were accustomed to writing impromptu exercises, and that day were requested to use extra care in preparing them, as their papers would be first corrected by members of the class, and afterwards by the teacher, who would mark each scholar, both for the mistakes he made in his own exercise, and for the mistakes he made in using the marks for correction. The marks were to be used in the inch margins, which they always left all around their exercises, to indicate the mistakes made, but no corrections were to be made in the body of the exercise.

Fifteen minutes were used in writing, then the papers were folded lengthwise and exchanged. The mistakes on the left of the fold in paper were to be corrected in the left-hand margin, etc. At first I let the corrector draw a line through the word that was wrong, but we soon did away with that, merely placing the mark on the same line where the mistake occurred, and leaving the scholar to whom the exercise belonged to find out what the mistake was, and correct it in copying his exercise for final approval.

Some were troubled at first, by finding several errors in one line, both at left and right of the fold, but a little miss immediately solved the difficulty by saying, in a scornful tone that was vastly amusing, "Why, put all the marks for one line in a row, of course, and take them as they come."

The papers were then returned to their writers, and each, as called upon, told the marks in the margin, what they indicated, and made the corrections orally.

I was agreeably surprised at the result. A few of the class failed utterly, as is generally the case when new methods are tried on short notice, but nearly all made the marks neatly, learned their meaning readily, corrected their mistakes quickly, and were delighted with "the cute little things," as one girl called them.

This trial convinced me that it is never too soon to begin to teach a new thing, if it is good, and answers the first part of that question, while the "how" is already explained. I began at once to use it in my older composition classes, and was always surprised at the new interest it infused into the formerly dreaded task of essay writing.

If this method is used soon enough, and followed in all the different grades, the graduates will have a thorough, practical, and lasting knowledge of the principal signs used by compositors and proof-readers, and of all the grammatical and diacritical points. (A large card on which the diacritical points were printed with a marking pen" was hung in the recitation room, and the pupil soon learned them without making any especial effort to memorize them.) Adeline Anderson in Journal of Education.

New Japan.

The young Mikado, Sutsuhito, the 123d Emperor of the nameless dynasty, was the first of his line to take oath as a ruler.

On the 12th of April, 1868, he made oath before gods and men that "a deliberative assembly should be formed; all measures should be decided by public opinion; . . . and that intellect and learning should be sought for throughout the world, in order to establish the foundations of the empire."

This oath was reaffirmed October 12, 1881, and the year 1890 is fixed as the time for limiting the imperial prerogative, forming two houses of parliament, and transforming the government into a constitutional monarchy.

The Emperor's capital was changed from Kioto to Yeddo, which was renamed, and called Tokio.

Feudalism, or the holding of fiefs by the daimio, came to an end in 1871, by imperial edict, and the whole of great Japan was again directly under the Mikado's rule.

The title of kuge and daimio were also abolished, both being re-named simply Kuasoku (Koo-as-o-koo), or noble families. The distinctinction between the lower orders of people were scattered to the winds, and even the despised outcasts were made citizens, protected by law.

The degrees in rank among the Japanese are now as follows:

First. The Emperor and the royal families.

Second. The Kuasoku, the noble families.

Third. The Shizoku, the gentry.

Fourth. The Heimin, the citizens in general.—Ida C. Hodnett, in St. Nicholas.

MUSIC HALL.

The Baker Moulton-Bennett Opera Co. gave a most pleasing presentation of the Mikado on Wednesday afternoon to a much smaller audience than was deserved. In the evening a good audience attended the performance of the Chimes of Normandy, which was as satisfactorily rendered as are all the operas presented by this meritorious company. Tonight the attraction will be a military comic musical drama, the Merry War.

KING JOLLY BOY.

We have had a peep at the inside preparations which are being made for the production of the "Court of King Jolly Boy", which occurs on the evenings of Tuesday and Wednesday, January 1st and 2d, at Music hall, and to which we referred in our issue of Nov. 28th. We can give but a faint idea of the rich and happy surprise that is in store for those who will witness this fascinating operetta, and we predict its enthusiastic and flattering reception by our theatre goers. The production itself merits success, and the Cadets deserve reward for their previous services in behalf of local charities.

The entertainment will consist of three acts of the "Court of King Jolly Boy", and one reconstructed act of the "Cadets Picnic." The chorus girls in the first three acts will appear in costumes designed from the plates of the London production of "Princess Ida," and those of the principal parts are after drawings by Gordon Browne. They are all of beautiful colors and rich materials procured in Boston and New York, and a due regard of the blending of colors in the whole effect has been exercised, as well as paying particular attention to its effect on the individual wearer.

Each act has been set with minute care and consideration of every detail, the second and third being specially elaborate, while novelty and originality distinctly mark the third. The special features will be the "Cadets' drill and dress parade," "cat ballet," "gavatte dance," the "grand original march," which is really fine, "the three police," the club swinging by Jacobs and Ross, the "owls courtship," and others. Dudley Carpenter is expected to assist, assuming his former role in the "Picnic." King Jolly Boy will be personated by Eddie Kimball, and the Queen by Miss Nettie Eldredge, while Miss Cora Barnabee will appear in a prominent part, with selected solos.

Mrs. Frank Williams is superintending the musical instruction, and Capt. Frank Williams is acting as drill master, and thus it is a foregone conclusion that these features will be as near perfection as possible. The whole production is being guided by the earnest and accomplished hand of Mr. Frank S. Preston, who is earning an enviable reputation as a manager in such matters. The full cast will be announced later.

MASONIC ELECTION.

The annual communication of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., was held on Wednesday evening of this week at their lodge room, and the following officers elected for the ensuing year:

Albert R. Junkins, W. M.;
Fred H. Ward, S. W.;
John D. Randall, J. W.;
Benjamin F. Webster, treasurer;
John H. Cheever, secretary;
Robert King, representative to grand lodge;
William G. Billings, Thomas J. Mitchell, standing committee.

THE HIGH TIDE.

The tide-gauge at the navy yard showed that the rise on Tuesday, the 4th inst., was eleven feet two inches, the water at its highest point being nearly four feet above the mean high-water mark. The average rise of the tide here is about eight feet, and no explanation has yet been given to account for this unusually high tidal flow, which appears to have that can be said about it.

MATTERS IN YORK.

YORK, ME., Dec. 4th.

Twenty persons met at the Sea View house, Long sands, on the 24th ult., and formed a club for social enjoyment during the winter season. They are to meet at the houses of members, where entertainments will be given. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins served a fine supper at the first meeting, and Albert Walker and Charles Parshley rendered fine vocal and instrumental music. Hayden Smith, proprietor of the Casino Novelty store, and wife, gave a comic performance, and the club thought Mr. Smith surpassed "That Comical Brown." The following are the officers elected: C. A. Grant of the Sea Cottage, president; S. G. Donnell of the Donnell house, vice president; B. G. Donnell, secretary; committee of arrangements, Marcellus Perkins of the Sea View house, W. H. Wentworth of Wentworths' cafe, and Charles Parshley.

A board fence six feet high is being built by the railroad along the border of the farm of Andrew P. Moody, to prevent the incursions of cattle.

The cars between Portsmouth and York are very well occupied, but the patrons of the road think that sixty-five cents is high fare for a distance of only eleven miles.

John E. Bridges went to the Nubble a few days ago and slaughtered a fine hog belonging to Bracket Lewis, keeper of the Nubble light. It is said to have been the first swine ever raised there. Mr. Lewis undertook the raising of poultry, but the fowls swallowed the shot which has been scattered about by the gunners for so many years, like gravel, and died from lead poisoning.

Painters are engaged in enlivening the Hotel Bartlett by two coats of paint inside and out. The work, which will last all winter is being done by Charles Stacy of Union Bluff and the material is furnished by a Portsmouth firm. The colors of the exterior will be straw for the body of the house, and green for the trimmings.

Hon. E. C. Moody is hauling sea weed from the beach, with a Harrison hat on his head. The neighbors think he ought to be successful in raising potatoes, if he works while dressed in such a costume.

Upon a rough calculation it is estimated that forty new buildings have been erected this year along the line of the watering places of the York coast. It is anticipated that many more improvements will be made in the year 1889.

The washout on the shore road at Long sands, near the Donnell house, caused by the late storm, was ten feet deep and forty feet wide. It will be bridged over for the convenience of travellers. To prevent accidents a light is put there every night by Landlord Donnell.

The Donnell house now contains forty rooms; it was enlarged last season, but was still crowded, and the landlord says he needs fifteen more rooms, and requires an addition as much as he has ever needed one. The popularity of the establishment is much increased by the services of the clerk, Mr. Benjamin Donnell.

It is estimated that 3000 loads of seaweed were washed up on Long sands during the late storm. About 2000 loads still remain ashore, awaiting gathering by the farmers, one thousand loads having been hauled off. J. P. Norton, of Norton's brick yard, with his force of French Canadians, has hauled away about 600 loads to be deposited on his extensive farm. He had at one time a dozen teams on the beach.

Many lobsters and about 200 bushels of clams were thrown up on Long sands near the Hotel Bartlett. The bottom of an almost new vessel of considerable size drifted ashore at the light station. From her material and build she was judged to belong to Nova Scotia, or some other of the British provinces. VIATOR.

Pleasant for Prof. Horsford.

The importance of the character of baking powders to be used, is shown by the fact that many eminent scientists have given their best thoughts to the question. A notable example is the very thorough and exhaustive experiments made by Baron Liebig, one of the most eminent chemists of his time, who became greatly interested in Prof. Horsford's invention. In his published report Liebig says: "I have, through a great series of experiments, satisfied myself of the purity and excellence of the baking preparation of Prof. Horsford. The bread has no acid, is easily digested, and of the best taste. I consider this invention as one of the most useful gifts which science has made to mankind. It is certain that the nutritive value of the flour will be increased ten per cent by this phosphatic preparation."

Certainly high words of commendation for an American inventor.

One of the notable institutions of Portsmouth, intensely local, interesting beyond comparison to every lover of the old Portsmouth which was the home of his childhood or to which he has become attached by years of adopted sonship, is Brewster's Rambles about Portsmouth. The chapters are all delightfully-told stories, perused with like interest by young and old, containing facts that had been extensely quoted by historians and some in poetic verse by such poets as Longfellow, Aldrich and Laighton. Our neighbor, L. W. Brewster of the Journal, who is the publisher of the book, has it for sale at his office. It is just the thing for a holiday present.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

It has been the fashion to [illegible] a strong indifference toward strangers, even if one does not feel it, says the Springfield Union, and not only toward strangers is this manifested, but toward those who are associated together in business, and the ones whom one meets every day. It is not necessary for two people to fall upon each other's neck every time that they meet in order to be civil, but in the short life that we live here why not give and receive all the good that we can. Strangers upon settling in a new place feel this stony and hard exterior, and when the cheery-faced, really Christian man or woman is met with, what a blessing, and how one loves to remember the meeting and the kindly look. It is like a perfect June day, or the bursting out of the sun after days of cloud and storm.

A woman who was assistant in a large school one day said to the principal, who was a man, that the manners of the boys in the school were not such as they should be. The man who was very dark naturally, turned a good deal darker and lost his temper Then he burst out into a tirade against manners. He said that he did not believe in any such thing (all of the time growing blacker) and finally brought his foot down on the platform with a great jar, saying: "Some of the greatest rogues that ever lived had the most polished manners." That seems to be a poor reason, or no reason at all, why we should not cultivate pleasing and kindly manners toward each other. Not that the books on etiquette should be swallowed whole—for more than one of them has unreasonable and silly ideas—but there is a manner that is respectful, kind and right, and it is born of the kind, true heart every time. Its name is politeness.

A young girl was going from her home in Connecticut to a school in Massachusetts, a distance of 100 miles, and was obliged to go alone. She waited a weary time in Boston and finally took her train on the Old Colonial Road, every face being a strange one. After a few miles' travel she noticed that an old gentleman was regarding her, and his very kindly look reassured her. After a while he came to her and asked her if she was traveling alone, and upon being told that she was he sat in the seat in front of her and talked very kindly and pleasantly, and before she left the car he gave her his card and attended her to the door of the car and carried her sachel. Upon looking at the card she found that the old gentleman was President Elder Ela, and his "Peace be with you," as he left her, was a benediction that can never be forgotten.

It was a very exacting waitress who, when sent to wait upon a guest at a hotel, hesitated and said that she did not like to wait upon him because she had never been introduced. That seems quite far-fetched, but it is as consistent as the stony manners of the would-be lofty minded people whom we meet. A young woman went to reside in a city where she was a total stranger, and in taking a morning walk always met a man who bowed and said "Good morning." The first morning she concluded that he had mistaken her for some acquaintance, but as he continued to greet her each morning in the same respectful manner, she knew that it must be his practice to so salute the people whom he met. Upon attending one of the churches there she discovered that it was the minister of the church, a highly educated man, who had traveled much abroad, and was eminent in his profession.

When the great gun which has thrown a ball eleven miles happens to be aimed north, a lateral deviation of two hundred feet must be taken into account for the difference in rotating speed between the spot where it is fired and the spot where the missile will strike.

The recent "slump" in railroad securities is another proof to those who continue to invest their funds in Western securities, through good agents, of the wisdom of their choice. Those parties who have based their judgement on receiving a fixed and safe rate of interest, have reason to congratulate themselves. History shows beyond question, that interest is by far more successful than speculation, and is void of the anxiety which characterizes those of speculative ideas. CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—A communication from the secretary of state with a certified copy of the final ascertainment of presidential electors in Kansas was presented. The presiding officer asked the opinion of the Senate, this being an entirely new proceeding, as to the disposition to be made of the papers—whether they should be placed on the journal or placed in the archives of the Senate. He added that similar certificates from the states of Maryland, North Carolina and Georgia had been also transmitted by the secretary of state.

After some suggestions, the provision of the law of February, 1887, was read and found to require the secretary of state to transmit copies of such certificates to the two houses of Congress. The letters of transmittal and the copies of the certificates were referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Numerous bills were introduced, and referred.

The Senate, at 10:05, resumed the consideration of the tariff bill. After some partizan debate on the iron schedule the bill was laid aside, the progress for the day being about eight pages.

Senator Butler introduced a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment enlarging the presidential term of office to six years, which was laid on the table.

Senator Reagan introduced a bill for the free coinage of silver. It provides that all holders of silver shall be entitled to have it coined into standard silver dollars of 412 1-2 grains Troy to the dollar, upon the same terms and conditions as gold is now coined for private holders. The Senate then at six P. M. adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The speaker stated that he had received a communication from Hon. Perry Belmont, informing him that he had sent to the governor of New York his resignation as member of Congress from the first congressional district of New York. The clerk was directed to drop Mr. Belmont's name from the roll of the House.

The order relative to the consideration of the direct tax bill was so modified as to make the measure a special order for today, Tuesday and Wednesday next, it being the desire of many members that an adjournment be taken over Saturday.

A long debate occurred on the direct tax bill, the House being in committee of the whole. The committee rose, and Clements of Georgia from the committee on appropriations reported the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the committee of the whole. House then adjourned at 3:30.

An Extra Session of Congress Regarded as Probable.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—A thorough canvass of the House and Senate shows a very decided majority of the republicans to favor an extra session of Congress to take action upon the tariff bill, if the House democrats will not permit the Senate bill to pass, and on the question of admitting Dakota and other territories into the Union as states.

Senator Blair Wants Bureaus of Information Established All Over the Country.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Senator Blair introduced a bill today providing that there shall be established by the president on the recommendation of the commission of labor, throughout the United States, in geographical sections which shall include a population not less than 100,000 nor more than 200,000 inhabitants, bureaus of information to gather the most complete and reliable information relative to the people, wages, homes, opportunities for employment, quality of lands, climate and sociologic conditions, transportation facilities, and in general, everything relating to, or that may be of interest to the working people. Free extracts are to be published at least once a month, giving information collected, and giving any information specifically asked for by any citizen. It will also be the duty of the chiefs of bureas to make known instances of extreme poverty, hardship., and distress without the needless exposure of names, also to report the same to the commissioner of labor, who shall report such information briefly to Congress with a recommendation of such means of relief as may seem wise and necessary. The bureas are to make special enquiry relative to the condition, wants and necessities of women and children. The President and heads of departments are required by the bill to give employment on public works only to American citizens.

A Runaway Marriage.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Dec. 6.—Miss Orillis Vanwart of Woodstock left home Tuesday evening unknown to her parents, and at one A. M. today was married to James W. Stinson of Boston at Vanceboro, Maine. Stinson was formerly employed by her father, J. W. Vanwart, one of the leading merchants of Woodstock. The elopement was not discovered until today.

Will the Police Allow It?

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—Johnny Reagan and Charley Norton have signed for a six round Queensbury fight in Brooklyn within four weeks.

A Governor's Curious Mistake.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BALTIMORE, MD., Dec. 6.—Gov. Jackson last night made a curious mistake. In fixing the date of the hanging of Isaac Keenan, convicted of the murder of John Holly last July, he first thought of Feb. 22, but that being Washington's birthday he decided to make it a week later. At the time he had a calendar of 1888 before him, and running his finger down the column fixed upon Feb. 29. Eighteen hundred and eighty-nine not being leap year there is no Feb. 29, and some legal complications may ensue. The date as sent last night was changed to March 1st.

Banqueting a Campaigner.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BALTIMORE, MD., Dec. 6.—About 160 persons were present at a banquet given tonight by republican friends of Gen. Adam E. King, in recognition of his services in the recent campaign.

Rockland, Rockport & Camden Railroad.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PORTLAND, ME., Dec. 6.—At the annual meeting of the Rockland, Rockport & Camden railway today, the following directors were chosen: P. J. Carlton, Fred E. Richards, A. F. Crockett, Henry B. Cleaves, S. E. Shepherd, T. A. Hunt, S. M. Bird, S. D. Carlton, and H. L. Shepherd. A large amount of stock has been subscribed, and a strong sentiment was manifest in favor of the construction of the road. It will extend from Camden or Rockport to Rockland, connecting there with the Knox & Lincoln railroad.

Had a Good Time.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 6.—Gen. Harrison arrived home today from his quail-shooting trip, with a couple dozen birds as his share. He enjoyed himself so well that he thinks of taking another such excursion soon. He expects Vice President-elect Morton and wife as his guests next Wednesday.

The Winslow Packing Co.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

PORTLAND, ME., Dec. 6.—At a meeting of the bond holders of the Winslow Packing company here today, $76,000 in bonds were represented. It was voted to sell to the Portland Packing company two factories and to release Gen. Mattocks and the Winslow Packing Co. on the note for which the bonds are given as collateral. It was voted that the trustees be authorized to dispose of the property as a whole or in parcel, or to lease the same for a year or term of years, with option in the lessee to purchase the property. It was also voted that the old committee be continued and act with the trustees.

Good News from Jacksonville.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Dec. 6.—No new cases, no deaths. Total cases, 4704; total deaths, 412.

Assault on a Great Falls Woman.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

GREAT FALLS, N. H., Dec. 6.—Mrs. J. A. Pray keeps a boarding house here. Yesterday afternoon Edward Collins, a boarder, came into the house intoxicated and asked her to get him something to eat. She complied, and set a lunch before him which he quickly ate. He then asked for more, and she being very busy, asked him pleasantly to wait until supper time, whereupon he struck her with his fist and then violently threw her to the floor, breaking her hip and otherwise injuring her. Mrs. Pray is 67 years old, is not very strong, and is in a critical condition.

Funeral of Gen. Ayres.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—The funeral of the late Brevet Brig. General Romayn B. Ayers, was held at Fort Hamilton in St. John's M. E. church this afternoon. The body will be transported to Washington tomorrow.

Eighty-One Millions for Pensioners.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The pension appropriation bill as completed by the House sub-appropriation committee today, and will be reported to the full committee tomorrow, appropriates $81,767,500.

Robbery in the Treasury.

Special Despatch to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Ten sheets of paper, each containing four notes of denomination of $5, representing $200 in all have been stolen while in transmission from the treasury to the sealing division for completion, and were probably abstracted by some one thoroughly familiar with the method of handling them. The notes will readily pass for money, for they lack only the treasury seal to be legal tender.

Annual Meeting of York County Grangers.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

BIDDEFORD, ME., Dec. 6.—The York County Grangers held their annual meeting here today. There was a large attendance from the various granges in the county. "How shall we manage our farms so as to sell more and buy less?" was the discussion this afternoon. The following officers were elected: Master, Seth Sennott of Saco; governor, Prentiss Day of Kennebunk; lecturer, Collins Emmons of Kennebunk; chaplain, Rev. O. J. Hancock of Saco; assistant steward, Orville G. Noyes of Saco; steward, G. W. Douglas of Cornish.

FOREIGN.

Parnell's Agents not to be Interfered With; A Sharp Debate.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—In the House of Commons tonight, in answer to Edward Harrington, Balfour guaranteed that persons collecting evidence in Ireland for the Parnell commission, would not be interfered with by the police.

Labouchere moved an adjournment to discuss the bad state of public business. It was a disgrace, he maintained, that Parliament was still debating estimates. He denied it had been due to obstruction, for there had been none.

Henry Chaplin, conservative, said it was not surprising that Labouchere felt it necessary to revert to the matter of blocking public business. The real cause of the block was the fact that certain members insisted upon talking to such extent, that if all availed themselves of the same right it would render business impossible. Five members of the opposition had within 23 working days of the session made 184 speeches. Labouchere himself had made 43 speeches, and those illustrious members, Conybeare and Tanney, had made 30 and 38 respectively. (Hear, hear.)

Smith declared that the discussion on estimates exceed all previous experience, and the government would be compelled to make arrangements to bring up the estimates earlier in the session. The motion was withdrawn.

Another Murder in Ireland.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

DUBLIN, Dec. 6.—A farmer named Cunningham was murdered today near Banbridge, county Down. The crime resulted from agrarian troubles. Three men have been arrested.

The Strike in Belgium.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 6.—The strike movement is increasing, and the strikers are everywhere becoming reckless. Attempts were made today to wreck a train, and blow up a manufactory at Morelanwel, but fortunately the dynamite cartridges were discovered in time to prevent disasters.

A Pleasant Street-Car Party.

A party of four—one fat old lady, her unmarried daughter, her married daughter, and the latter's 3-year-old son—climbed into a Chestnut street car recently. They began staring at men in a way calculated to make them pop up, surrender their seats, and kick themselves on receiving no thanks. A simple-minded young man, with a smart new fall suit, sat close to where they stood and busied himself looking after their welfare. He pointed out to the old lady and one daughter where two seats could be had in the forward part of the car by making some men squeeze up a little. The women did not thank him. The men glared at him. Then the smart young man compressed himself narrowly and so discovered one more seat, to which he mentioned the mother of the boy. Did they thank him and sit down? No. She stared at him in a stony fashion and then carefully lifted the boy into the seat so that he knelt at the window, ostensibly to look out at Chestnut street's stirring sights. The boy's shoes were full of rich, black mud from the crossing. He had been put there to act as a petard on the young man. He wriggled about on his knees, and the grimy feet waved perilously near the smart fall suit of the too thoughtful young man. In less than fifteen seconds the young man bolted. He fled to the front platform completely crushed. The scheme is one that clever mothers have frequently worked of late on crowded cars, and it is generally successful.—Philadelphia Press.

Rang for the Apple Boy.

A Brunswick and Western man said; I recollect an amusing incident. A very verdant looking kind of fellow got on a train at Albany. He was solicited by the train boy several times to buy apples, candy, &c., but was evidently too close fisted.

He suddenly, however, got it into his head that he would like to have some apples, and asked a drummer when the boy would be around again. The drummer told him that if he would pull the bell cord it would fetch the boy. Without a moment's hesitation hayseed gave it two violent jerks. The train was running full speed, but the engineer, hearing the danger signal, downed brakes and stopped.

I was at a loss, and so were the passengers, to account for the sudden stoppage of the train, and rushed forward to see the engineer. On my way I passed through the car in which hayseed was and he stopped me with, "Mister, how long will it be before the apple boy is around There was a titter in the car, and I smelt a mouse. "Who pulled that cord?" I asked. "I did," rejoined hayseed; "I wanted to call the apple boy."

FRIDAY, DEC. 7, 1888.

If Mr. Blaine will only say whether he desires to enter the Cabinet of Gen. Harrison as Secretary of State, or not, he will greatly relieve the minds of many editors, who entertain opinions widely different. We have no opinion ourselves to express upon the matter, for the simple reason that we have no knowledge to found it upon. If Mr. Blaine desires to know our best judgement as to the advisability of his accepting the place, if tendered by Gen. Harrison, we should unhesitatingly say, do not do it. He is immeasurably stronger before the country now than he could expect to be as Secretary of State. He could not become a member of Gen. Harrison's official family without entertaining a hope at least of shaping the policy of the new administration, and our knowledge of the President-elect is such as to justify the firm belief that no one man is going to direct the line to be pursued during the next four years, except it be Gen. Harrison himself. Mr. Blaine will make a serious mistake if enters the new cabinet. He declined to allow his name to go before the Chicago convention as a candidate for the nomination to the presidency, on the ground that he desired to remain in private life, and to look after his health. This reason certainly exists with as much force now as it did six months ago, when Mr. Blaine could unquestionably have had the nomination had he but said the word.

The fact that Cleveland has a plurality of the votes returned as cast at the late election, has led to a demand on the part of some of the leading democrats that our elective system shall be so changed as to provide for the election of a president by the direct vote of the people. This would no doubt be an excellent thing for the democratic party so long as the South can be controlled and a half million more or less colored voters deprived of their suffrages, but with a federal election law which would guarantee to every legal voter north and south the right to cast his vote and to have that vote counted, we do not believe our democratic friends would derive quite so much satisfaction out of the result as they now imagine they would. With an honest election law the republican party would have nothing to fear by electing the president by a popular vote, but at the same time any change from the present system is likely not only to prove cumbersome but be attended with some dangerous complications. On the whole therefore it is not probable that the advocates of a popular vote will bring about a change. It is probable, however, that the next Congress will take up the question of fair elections in some of the southern states, and remedy the evils now existing.

The Laconia Democrat remarks that "It is laughable to see republican editors quote the New York Sun as 'a staunch democratic paper.' That would do perhaps just before election when all sorts of campaign tactics are restored to, but there is no excuse for it now. The New York Sun is the same kind of staunch democratic paper that Foster's Dover Democrat is, and is entitled to about as much confidence." The outspoken editor at the head of navigation on the Piscataqua remarks in reply that he don't see how his Laconia brother can jump the Sun and the Democrat together, as the Sun certainly supported Cleveland in the late campaign to the extent of its great ability, and the Democrat as certainly opposed him, and is proud of it and glad of his defeat. If the papers which supported Cleveland and those which opposed him are neither of them democratic, the Dover editor would like to know where a democratic paper can be found. The Democrat of Dover also takes occasion to remind the Democrat of Laconia that at the late election the county of Belknap and the town of Laconia for the first time in their history gave good round majorities for the republican candidates for president and congressman. The Dover editor seems to have rather the best of the controversy, so far, and wishes it to be distinctly understood that not only has he no apologies to offer for his course during the late campaign, but glories in it.

A Number of Reasons for their Not Entering into the Bonds of Wedlock.

This is rapidly becoming one of the great social questions of the day. The best organized society is that where the marriage relation is most carefully adjusted. Statistics show that the per cent. of marriages is decreasing, while the per cent. of divorces is increasing. Perhaps it is not fair to apply this rule to all localities, says the Detroit Free Press. There are always exceptions. But that this is the case in general there does not seem to be much doubt. Unless some sudden check is put upon this inclination to live alone on the part of the male sex, there is no telling where it will end and what society will come to.

There is naturally a variety of opinion on this topic. Ask a young lady who is yearning for her own vine and fig tree, and a husband, by way of an adjunct, why it is that the men are so loth to take unto themselves partners for better or for worse, and she will reply: "Oh! the men are selfish. They want to spend all their money on themselves. They like the luxuries of celibacy. They like their club life with all its comforts. They want to provide themselves with everything that is calculated to make a man satisfied with himself and the world at large." This is the reply that the interrogator will get in most cases. There may be varieties of expression, according to the individual, but the tenor of the answer is not far removed from this.

Ask the young man who is a fit subject for the matrimonial market why it is that the men do not marry, and he will say: "Oh, the women are so foolish. They want to enjoy themselves. They want to wear fine clothes, keep up with all the fashions, have servants to do the work for them, and live like the wives of millionaires. If the women were not so foolish more men would get married. If they were less capricious there would be less anxiety felt about the married state. As it is, the young man with a moderate income is afraid to plunge in the vortex of matrimony for fear that financial bankruptcy may be the outcome." This will be the reply in nine cases out of ten.

Here we are between two grindstones. But when one investigates the question in a careful way, the conclusion is inevitable that there is ground for complaint on both sides. The young man is certainly selfish. He forms habits in his bachelor days which certainly would not become him as a married man. He has his club, and the club claims a good deal of his time and thought. He does not as a general thing take his wife to the club with him. Therefore she naturally objects to clubs that thinks that they are horrid. If the young benedict would make his home his club-house and his wife his club-fellow, there would be much less ground for complaint than there now is. But to most young men, who even in a married state pine for a little bit of freedom, club life of this kind would be too monotonous. Again, there is some ground for the complaint that the young man is too fond of his own comfort. That is undoubtedly true. But man is very largely a creature of habit. He forms tastes and habits in celibacy which he can not shake off. Too often when he has a wife he gratifies those tastes even if to do so he is compelled to sacrifice his wife's comfort. This is not right. A woman when she marries takes the step in some cases for the want of congenial companionship; in others to better her condition. But, leaving the material aspect of the matter out of sight, a woman who marries does not at once like to begin a life of denial and self-abnegation.

The young man has a good deal to complain about, too. The education of a young woman is often far too superficial, and therefore useless. It does not fit her to be the true helpmate of a man. It is calculated to make her an ornament, not a useful being. The average society woman is well defined by the philosopher Thomas Carlyle in his "Sartor Resartus" as a piece of celestial art which he glories to survey in galleries, but which he has lost hope of purchasing. The young woman too often is educated to be a parlor ornament, to dress well, to pose effectively, to play the piano a little and to have a smattering in those branches of education which are purely ornamental. A wife of this kind is not what the young man wants who is just starting out upon his career. He must have someone to help him save. In order to do this the wife must know how to work and must not be afraid to work. That they do not is, perhaps, not so much their fault as it is the fault of society and its standards.

Women like to share the burdens of those they love. They are willing to put up with very much of inconvenience, withstand any tribulation, providing it will help along the one that is loved and cause him to feel happy. When it comes to a question of sacrifice, or moral or even physical courage, the woman in three cases out of five is superior to the man. She will bear more pain uncomplainingly and complacently battle with annoyances that would almost drive a man crazy. Most women would be true helpmeets if they had a chance. But from their childhood's days they are taught to have a wrong view of life and to ignore the substantial in favor of the artificial.

This is wholly wrong. Men and women were created to be joined in matrimony. It is wrong to keep them apart. It is not only wrong to the individuals of the two sexes, but it is fraught with danger to society. Where there are the most happy marriages there the standard of purity will be the highest. Where there are the least marriages the standard of impurity will be the highest. Where there are no marriages at all—but who can imagine the state of society that would follow this? It is the duty of young men and young women to marry. Physical and moral reasons both demand this union of the sexes. But a young woman can not put a revolver to a man's temple and say: "I love you better than life itself. Promise to make me your own beloved wife, or I will blow out your brains." That would hardly do. Even in leap-year a practice of that kind would not be tolerated. The young woman must wait. Perhaps she will pine, like Tennyson's Mariana in the moated grange:

He cometh not, she said.
I am weary and wish that I were dead.

The young man must take the aggressive. It is his duty. But the young woman ought to show him that matrimony has no quicksands, and that it is perfectly safe as a business transaction. Let there be no liming of twigs to catch the unwary little bird, but legitimate, substantial acquirements, as well as accomplishments. If the girls would cultivate these there would be less fear of dis- of the young men.

Not So Very Dumb.

One of Somerville's most charitable ladies was sitting in her library one day this week when the door-bell rang, and the servant brought in a scrap of paper on which was written: Please give a poor woman something to eat. I am dume.

"Of course," was the reply. "I never want anybody to go away from my door hungry, and a poor dumb woman least of all."

The pantry was visited and a quantity of bread and butter, cake and cookies was put up together and taken to the door by the lady herself. The mendicant stood on the steps with a big basket on her arm. She took the food that was offered her and put it in the basket which, when the cover was lifted was seen to be filled almost to the brim with cakes, pies, sandwiches and other eatables. To say that the charitable doner was surprised at this discovery is to put it mildly but the next instant she was surprised still more, for the "dume" woman as she walked off said sweetly:

"Thank you!"—Somerville Journal.

The Newest High Explosive.

W. T. Chamberlain, an American engineer residing in London, paid a visit to Woolwich in connection with a new explosive which he is introducing to the war department. He is the inventor of the newest and most powerful explosive known—namely, chlorine of nitrogen, whose destructive effects are terrible in the extreme, a very small quantity doing infinitely more damage than a much larger amount of any other explosive in use. It is very sensitive, a very slight concussion causing it to explode. He has more than once been injured and in danger of being blown to pieces, but kept at it, determined to conquer or die in the attempt. He had completed a method of charging or filling shells and projectiles with chlorine nitrogen so that they may be fired from a gun using powder with perfect safety. Military men competent to judge in regard to the invention declare it to be one of the most remarkable inventions of the age, and are of the opinion that if any country had the monopoly of this invention they could defy the whole world. The invention, it is thought, will cause a complete change or revolution in warfare, while for blasting or mining purposes it will probably never be equaled. Mr. Chamberlain has had offers from parties on the continent which he will probably accept in the event of not coming to terms with our own government.—Woolwich (Eng.) Gazette.

The Step-Mother Was "Papa's Girl."

A Pennsylvania widower, lately remarried, has a bright little girl of 4 or thereabouts. He was anxious to induce the child to call his new wife mother. As a means to that end the lady bought the baby a magnificent doll, and asked of all visiting friends to inquire of the little lass: "Who gave you that doll?" Alas! for expectation; the little tot was too sharp for her elders, and said, with the most innocent air possible: "My papa's girl gave it to me."—New York Commercial.

POSITIVELY CLOSING WEEKS

GRAND CYCLORAMA

BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG,

541 Tremont St., Boston.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush on the druggists still continues and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to give entire satisfaction. Price 50c. and $1. Trial size free. deod3

"He will be here tonight and my hands are chapped; however I have a bottle of Salvation Oil."

Old remedies under new names are being constantly introduced to the public, but Dr Bull's Cough Syrup still maintains its pre-eminence.

Cyrus Dunn, a well known business man of Manchester, died of heart failure on Wednesday, aged 72 years.

As a purifier, Ayer's Sarsaparilla acts directly and promptly. A single bottle will prove its merits. Many thousands of people are yearly saved from dangerous fevers by the exercise of a little timely care in cleansing the system by the use of this remedy.

Avoid the harsh, irritating, griping compounds so often sold as purgative medicines, and correct the irregularities of the bowels by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills, which are gentle, yet searching, in their action.

Hundreds of letters from those using Hall's Hair Vigor attest its value as a restorer of gray hair to its natural color. As a stimulant and tonic, preventing and curing baldness, and cleansing the scalp, its use cannot be too strongly recommended.

Happy and Hungry.

For over five years I was a constant sufferer with that most terrible and annoying disease, dyspepsia. After paying out hundreds of dollars, the only medicine I found that would do me any good was Sulphur Bitters. Six bottles cured me. Now I can eat will and am happy and hungry.—Editor.

The republican club of Concord has been put on an assured basis for the ensuing year.

Be Your Own Doctor.

It won't cost you half as much. Do not delay. Send three 2-cent stamps for postage, and we will send you Dr. Kaufmann's great work, fine colored plates from life, on disease, its causes, and home cure. Address A. P. Ordway, & Co., Boston, Mass.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. mon.wed.fri.eod1f

Precocity.

"Well, Johnny, have you learned your A B C's yet?" said his father, after the lad's first week in school. "Yes, sir," replied the young hopeful. "A. B. C. B. means Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam." Johnny remembered how quickly his last cold had been cured.

A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

Extracts From a Remarkable Lecture Delivered by Dr. R. B. Hammond, Before the National Scientist's Convention.

"We are startled constantly by the sudden death of some man who seemed the picture of health. He thought he was well. He had felt strange pains shooting through his body but they did not remain, he forgot them. His head pained him periodically. He was somewhat paler than common and unaccountably tired, but he felt comparatively well and vigorous. And yet, he suddenly died! It is a shame to our boasted civilization."

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and why is it? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the most terrible of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful, sudden strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural laws. The solemn and terrible fact is, that men and women are going, going, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the cause lay far back of all these things. And that what weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' I have seen numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where the preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been almost remarkable in its results. I use it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

SULPHUR BITTERS

All silent, with their stately heads upraised in serried lines,
Their music hushed, as though they wait a message from on high,
They stand, like sentinels of God, against the crimson sky.

The glowing sun is sinking, all aflame the purpling west,
Gilding the fitting messengers that cry the hour of rest,
While dark against the afterglow the pines stand one by one,

So still they stand as daylight dies and twilight beckons night,
That e'en the passing buzzards pause, and fingering, alight,
While midst the shadowed canopies of never fading green

Ah, many a dream, ye drifting winds among the fragrant boughs,
Your heaven-pervaded harmonies within our hearts arouse;
Such dreams shall, like the stalwart pines that rear their heads on high,
Uplift us on their winged flight toward the ambient sky.

PENELOPE'S AUNT.

One night Penelope Barber, who had been her maiden aunt's slave ever since she could remember, awakened to see an apparition all in white standing at the foot of the bed, whereupon she shrieked and covered her head with the counterpane.

"No need of screeching," said a voice she knew well. "I ain't a ghost."

"Oh, it is you, is it, Aunt Martha?" said Penelope. "You most skeered me to death."

"Guilty conscience!" said Aunt Martha. "You thankless wretch!"

"I ain't no such a thing," said Penelope.

"You've gone and engaged yourself," said Aunt Martha.

"Yes," sobbed Penelope. "But I like him so. It's Simon Jones."

"You thankless wretch!" cried Aunt Martha. "You good-for-nothing piece of ingratitude! I should think the victuals you've eaten would choke you, and that coral necklace I gave you turn to a hempen rope about your neck. I've given you everything you've had for twenty years, and now you'll leave me to keep hired help. I am sick and disgusted. Never—never will I do anything for nobody again—never! Well, I won't live long, and then you'll repent."

"Oh, dear, dear, dear!" sobbed Penelope, who was very tender-hearted. "I did think of all that, and the maroon-colored merino you gave me off your very back after wearing it only two years. I couldn't have been better treated—I could not, indeed; but Simon coaxed me so, and he is nice."

"Well, perhaps it is but natural," said Aunt Martha, a little mollified; "but you are both young, and I shan't live more than twenty years more. You'd only be forty then—a good age to marry. Tell Simon Jones I'll leave you something handsome if you'll wait until I'm gone."

"Something handsome," said Simon Jones. "That means her whole fortune, my dear—she has no one else to leave it to. They say she has bags of gold. Let's wait. It's a sort of lottery, and she'll probably not live long."

At that Penelope wept again, and was scarcely to be consoled; but the waiting began.

Simon was very constant in his attentions, and everything went smoothly. The young couple sat in the parlour on Sunday evenings in winter, and wandered about in the moonlight in summer.

Simon thought a good deal about the old lady's money, and it grew in his mind from thousands to millions before the day on which Aunt Martha, going up a step-ladder to get a big bundle of old clothes from a high shelf, fell and so injured herself that it was soon known that she must die.

She knew it herself, and she lay upon her death-bed and called her friends about her.

"I want you all to hear me," she said. "My niece, Penelope Barber, has been a devoted girl to me. She even postponed her marriage to stay with me while I live. I am going to give her something handsome to remember me by."

Simon looked deeply interested.

Penelope sobbed:

"Oh, don't talk of it, auntie."

"I've got to," said Aunt Martha. "I haven't made any will, and my brother, John Hopkinson, will come down the minute he hears I'm gone, to grab things. I'm going to leave my niece Penelope the big china vases on the parlor mantelpiece. They are the handsomest things I've got, and they'll help her fill up when she goes to housekeeping."

These were poor Miss Martha's last words. Shortly she died; and, as she predicted, her brother arrived on the spot in time for the funeral.

As next-of-kin, he swooped down on the little brown house, the garden, with its vegetable beds, the cow, the pigs, and all the portable property.

It was only through sheer shame that he permitted Penelope to carry away her legacy.

Simon Jones, though dreadfully disappointed, talked contemptuously about filthy lucre, and uttered fine sentiments about united heart needing no golden bonds.

He declared, however, that he felt that they had waited long enough, and the two were married very quietly.

Penelope was as mild as she was pretty, and not a bad manager, if only she had anything to manage. But Simon was a Jack-of-all-trades, master of none. He tried a thousand things, and failed in all he undertook.

In a few years the house was full of children, and he had made an invention. For eating up everything they possessed, the invention was worse than the children—very much worse. There were patents and applications for patents, and quarrels which had to be settled by lawyers, and still no results.

The family grew shabby; the house went to rack and ruin; and every Saturday night Simon pawned Aunt Martha's legacy for money enough to buy the Sunday's roast beef. They were very rare specimens of china, brought from Japan years before by a sea-captain of the family, and worth twenty pounds a piece, and this the pawnbroker knew well; and so at last the time came when they fell into his clutches.

In vain Penelope besought him for a little time just a little time. In vain she told Mr. Lazarus that they were the gift of a beloved aunt now dead. Mr. Lazarus replied:

"Dot vos a pity. No doubt it was a very respectable old lady. If you pay me vot vos due, all right."

"I haven't got a shilling," poor Penelope explained. "But as soon as Mr. Jones gets his invention before the public he will settle."

were the gift of the one blood-relation she could remember.

"If I only could have kept them!" she sighed. They seemed to her to have some strange value beyond that for which the pawnbroker desired to possess them. "Oh, Aunt Martha!" she sighed, "if only spirits could return you would do something to save these for me."

As she spoke, she stepped back suddenly, and somehow pulled the vases from the counter to the floor.

There was a crash; the blue china lay in twenty pieces. Mr. Lazarus rushed to the spot. His family appeared. Shrieks filled the air. An old woman, who was pawning a clothes-wringer, stood aghast. A man who had just redeemed his Sunday-coat expressed his horror.

"You wicked woman, you destroy my property!" cried the pawnbroker.

"I never touched it! A ghost did it!" sobbed Penelope; then, with a shriek, stooped and grabbed a folded paper, tied with red tape, that lay amongst the fragments, and flew wildly out of the shop before anyone could stop her.

Her eye had caught the words written upon its yellow back, and she knew that she held in her hand the last will and testament of Miss Martha Hopkinson.

At home she read it. It was in her favor, and the amount exceeded all Simon's old dreams of possibilities. It was wisely put at interest, too, and not hidden in any odd corners. A note which it enclosed explained why this was done.

"MY DEAR NIECE," it ran,—"You will find this will of mine the first time you remove the cover. Meanwhile I want John Hopkinson to seize the little brown house, dig the cellar up, root under the old pear-tree, pull down the chimney, and bore in the walls to his heart's content; he will find nothing. I am not what he calls me—a miser—but I've been economical and lucky, and you shall have the reward of patience. Meanwhile, I like my little joke, and I am so sure that spirits return to earth that I know I shall be around to enjoy it. I'll give you proof of it some day.—Your loving aunt, MARTHA HOPKINSON."

And Penelope always believed it was the ghost of her aunt that threw the blue china vases on the floor.

Naval Architecture.

The navies of the world have been for years past in a transition state—in fact, ever since the introduction of armor-plating for ships of war, which necessitated the manufacture and use on board ship of heavier guns, which have since been competing with the thickness of armor until it seems probable that the extreme limit has been well-night reached in either case, the ideal man-of-war has been sought for the continual change and improvement; but on looking into the future, nothing but further change can be seen ahead. It is therefore essential to find out, as far as possible, which of our various types of ships best fulfills the requirements expected of them, says a writer in Blackwood's Magazine. The true solution of this question, and of many others waiting to be solved, conspicuous among them being the question, "What is the value of the torpedo as an offensive and defensive weapon?" will have to stand over till after the next naval war. The wars of late years have not helped us much. The American civil war developed the defensive torpedo to a stage beyond which it has not since made any advance; but from the Franco-German and Russo-Turkish wars but little was learned, beyond the undoubtedly great value of torpedoes for purposes of defense, in each case the stronger fleet being rendered innocuous by their use. But such questions as "the best way to defend a large ocean trade from attack by cruisers," which to England is of vital importance, remain as obscure as ever.

Alpine Avalanches.

We were now arrived in the country of these ice seas, writes a New York Times correspondent from Portresima. As far as my vision extended there was nothing in sight but ice and snow, and the snow was exceedingly white, as I assure you. The driven snow you have in towns and plains is a decided brown compared with the dazzling snow we saw up there at the tops of Swiss mountains. Forever and forever this virgin gown lies on all the peaks, as it also covers the lower valleys in winter. It has the soft look of a dove's breast, it rests on rocks a thing of beauty, and often it is dangerous. It falls in soft, pure flakes, clings to all the projections, covers rocks with charming traceries, and spreads itself like a sheet of white satin over the upper vales. But the touch of a passing eagle's wing, the light weight of a chamois, or the careful step of an expert climber will detatch it from its crest and send it down. Then it goes sliding, rumbling along, breaking and reforming as it falls, ever increasing in volume and velocity, and, pursuing its way, becomes a devastating, terrible avalanche that bends and breaks trees, gathers up earths and stones, and rolls into the Engadine with an awful sound, spreading destruction and dismay in its path. They call these sort of thing staublawinen, or dust avalanches, because they consist at the start of cold, dry, powdery snow only, and they are often far more powerful than a raging hurricane. But the avalanches usually seen flying in high Alpine valleys, covered with the dust, earth, and stones, and great trunks of trees, are known as grundlawinen or compact avalanches.

A Famous Horse.

Few descendants of Eclipse have been more renowned than Touchstone, and most of the best horses in training have more than one strain of his blood. Herring's picture does not make him by any means the best-looking horse in the book, nor was he exactly what would be called a very handsome horse. His head was all very well, although his ears were coarse. His neck was strong and his shoulders were fair, but not remarkable. There was, however, plenty of depth below them. It was behind the saddle that he possessed his extraordinary power. Indeed, we do not think that Herring quite did justice to his second thighs, which, as the writer of this article has reason to know from a personal acquaintance with the splendid old horse, were developed to an almost preternatural extent. His picture could not show his curious habit of turning out his hooks, and galloping very wide behind, or how desperately he pulled. He lived to be 30, dying in 1861, whereas Birdcatcher, with whose descendants his stock has been so much crossed, died at the age of 27 in the previous year. There are two pictures of Touchstone's son Cotherstone. He looks a powerful and remarkably well-shaped horse, but rather long in the leg, and without much bone below the knee.—The Saturday Review.

THE DANGER OF TIMBER FAMINE.

A Few Figures Showing the Enormous Destruction Going on in American Forests.

If any one doubts the danger of a timber famine in the United States at some future day let him look at the destruction of trees in his own neighborhood, says Gen. Brisbin in Trees and Tree-Planting. Where are the forests that sheltered our youth? Gone, and all the game with them. I remember the furnaces of my own county, Center, in Pennsylvania, how they never ceased until all the big woods were cut down and burned up into charcoal to make iron.

A few years ago, in the towns of Canaan, Salisbury, Norfolk, Sharon, Cornwall, and Goshen, comprising the northwestern part of Litchfield county, Connecticut, and a small portion of Dutchess county, New York, and Berkshire county, Massachusetts, were no less than twelve iron furnaces for the manufacture of charcoal pig-iron, from iron dug within these districts. These furnaces made about 3,500 tons of pig-iron each per year. To run these furnaces one year it required that between 400 and 500 acres of land should be stripped of the wood, or a total of between 5,000 and 6,000 acres cut every year.

As everyone knows it takes about twenty years there to make a crop of wood, the whole amount of land stripped bare would be in the neighborhood of 100,000 acres, or nearly the whole of the woodland in the section above named. But not only in one or two states, but in all the states the destruction goes steadily on. Take for the purpose of illustration the record of the amount of logs rafted out of the great lumber-producing streams of the Saginaw districts for a number of years. In round numbers the Tittabawassee rafted out 228,000,000 feet of logs in 1871, 316,000,000 feet in 1872, and 269,000,000 feet in 1873, and had left each year from 200,000,000 to 300,000,000 feet. In 1873 the amount left over was stated at 258,000,000 feet. Taking the amount rafted out and the amount left over in 1873, we should have 519,000,000 feet as the total product of the Tittabawassee lumbering; that year. Up to August, 1874, there has been rafted out of the Tittabawassee 1,202,371 pieces or about 215,000,000 feet, making a total for the year of, say, 315,000,000 feet for 1874, against 519,000,000 feet for 1873.

Let us take the Cass river, the largest lumber-producing stream of this region, except the Tittabawassee. In 1871 there were rafted out of the Cass river 55,841,618 feet of logs; in 1872 there were 99,913,933 feet; in 1873 there were 109,450,140 feet, and in 1874 all the logs being now out, there have been but 52,260,800 feet, and there are no logs left.

We might continue these illustrations by exhibiting the figures for the other streams in this section, and by giving the facts concerning the immense waste of forests, but these will do for one region.

A Virginia City (Nevada) paper says that an immense destruction of the forests is taking place in that vicinity, and in a short time the lumbermen have advanced from the base to the summit of the Sierras, and soon they will go over the crest; consequently it is predicted that, when timber is all gone, the snow will melt early in summer, leaving the streams from which they irrigate dry, and cold and fierce winds will have an uninterrupted and unobstructed sweep, making the country uninhabitable.

The Prosperous Flannel Shirt.

The flannel shirt has come to stay. This season has settled that fact beyond question. Never before has there been so many goods sold by the manufacturer to the retailer; never before has the retailer sold out so thoroughly; never before has the public bought flannels so readily, so expensively, or used them for such a variety of purposes. Their comfort, convenience, and fitness as hot-weather garments has become so fairly fixed that to question it is idle.

A year ago manufacturers went into flannels with a good deal of confidence on their own behalf, but there was a good deal of quiet questioning whether or not the retailers would be able to "clear up" all their purchases. Some thought they would not, that the demand for flannel shirts was a temporary thing, and that retailers would suffer. There is no such belief this year, and manufacturers are making purchases of flannels for next season which indicate an entire freedom from timidity.

The apparently high cost of flannel shirts, as it appears to the consumer, is easily explained away. It does seem somewhat expensive to the man who pays the bill; to pay from $3 to $4 for a shirt which bad washing causes to shrink out of use in one season.

"Well," says the dealer, "you actually save money on your flannel shirts. Suppose you do pay twice as much for a flannel as for a white shirt, and that the former lasts only half as long. To begin with, you only require one-third as many flannels as white, so that your investment is not as much, even if you wear the flannels only one season, and during that season you will save about 50 cents a week on your laundry bill, so that you will actually make money. But there is no reason why your flannel shirts need last only one season. It is only a question of washing them properly, and they will last as long as you want to wear them."

This feature of washing so as not to shrink flannels is an important one. Some laundries have learned how to do it, and guarantee not to shrink flannels. To aid in making the knowledge general, some manufacturers have printed instructions accompanying each garment; and those who do not send out such instructions should do it.—The Haberdasher.

M. Chevreul.

At 103 years old M. Chevreul's general health is excellent, he eats and drinks heartily and sleeps soundly. His legs, however, begin to show signs of weakness, and it is for that reason only that he has ceased to attend the Monday meetings of the Academy of Sciences. His habits are very regular. He rises early and takes a plate of soup. He goes to bed again and sleeps till noon. He then has breakfast, which consists of two eggs and some minced meat. This repast over he drives out for two or three hours. On his return he reads scientific and literary works, following with interest the recent proceeding of various scientific bodies and the accounts given of recent discoveries in many departments of science. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon he takes a bowl of milk with two biscuits. He lies down again for two hours, after which he has another plate of soup, and goes to bed for the night.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

Petition of J. S. Harrington for the renewal of the gaslight at the corner of Pearl and Hanover streets was referred to the committee on street lights, with power.

Request of J. C. W. Coleman for leave to encumber South street for building purposes, was granted.

Request of Dr. H. F. Clark for increase of light on Middle street, between State and Congress streets, was referred to the committee on street lights, with power to make any alterations they may deem necessary.

Ald. Urch's absence from the city for some time being announced, he was given indefinite leave of absence.

The committee on accounts reported approved bills to the amount of $1300, which were ordered to be paid.

Adjourned for two weeks.

SLIGHT FIRE.

The alarm of fire shortly before eleven o'clock Thursday forenoon was caused by the igniting of some clothing which Mrs. Benjamin F. Gross of No. 30 Water street had hung up over the stove to dry, on a string which broke. There was much smoke, but no more fire than a bucket of water sufficed to extinguish, and although the fire department turned out in a hurry, their services were not needed. Damage immaterial. The giving of the alarm was needless.

PISTOL PRACTICE IN YORK, ME.

A shooting affair in which, fortunately, no one was shot, is the topic of conversation in York. A young man named Edward S. Thompson, returning home after seeing a young lady to her residence near Sewall's bridge, was chased by three men, as yet unknown, and several shots were fired at him, one bullet passing through his coat. He succeeded in keeping ahead of his pursuers until he reached the house of Charles Grant, where he remained until morning. This occurred on Monday night of this week. The attacking party probably assailed the wrong man, as no reason is breathed why Thompson should receive attention of this nature.

CORPORATION MEETING.

The first annual meeting for the organization of the incorporators of the Beacon Electric Co. was held at the Rockingham house in this city recently, and the following board of directors chosen to serve for the ensuing year:

John A. Enos, John H. Manning, Francis B. Copeland, and George L. Wentworth.

John A. Enos, president;
George L. Wentworth, vice president;
Francis B. Copeland, treasurer;
Herman A. Tarlton, secretary;
John H. Manning, clerk to the board of directors.

WILL TAKE A REST.

Mr. John L. Allen of Kittery Point, for the past dozen years steward and turnkey of the Portsmouth jail, retired from that position on Thursday. Mr. performed the duties developing upon him in such manner as to serve the best interests of the county, and win commendation from its officials. It is to be hoped that a long-needed rest will bring with it a return of good health. He is succeeded by Mr. J. S. Hubley of this city.

TOWN MEETING AT YORK.

A special town meeting was held in York, Me., on Monday of this week, to see if the town would vote to build a sewer at Union Bluff.

L. W. Junkins was chosen moderator.

Dr. W. L. Hawkes read several communications from members of the Maine state board of health on the subject, and the matter was discussed with a good deal of animation by Col. Hildreth, Chas. W. Junkins, C. C. Barrell and others.

Finally on motion of Hon. Edward C. Moody the matter was referred to a committee of three, with power to investigate, and report at the regular annual meeting in March, 1889.

The committee appointed consists of Messrs. Charles W. Junkins, C. B. Hildreth and George W. S. Putnam, Mr. Moody positively declining to serve as a member.

PERSONAL.

--Mr. Chas. H. Kingsbury has pained a host of friends here by his temporary absence from the city, but they are equally glad to learn that he is achieving success and renown of a high order, as a vocalist. At a concert given in South Boston on Wednesday evening of this week, Mr. Kingsbury rendered several selections in a manner that won great favor.

—Mr. Charles C. Bedlow, assistant superintendent of the New England division of the Western Union telegraph, was in this city on Thursday.

—Conductor Herman Barney is running the 8:20 A. M. train from this city to Boston while Conductor Nat. E. Winn is enjoying a week's vacation.

--George N. Jones, engineer of steam fire engine Kearsarge, was thrown from the machine as it was on its hurried way to the Water street smoke on Thursday, but escaped serious injury.

—Herman W. Oxford has taken a position at the Suncook station of the Concord railroad, and will this week remove his family to that town to reside.

—Mrs. Isaac Dow and Miss Lizzie Dow, who have been visiting in Massachusetts, have returned to their home in this city.

—Miss Etta Twombly is very ill at her home at the Plains; she is attended by Dr. Junkins of Greenland.

LITERARY NOTE.

The December number (No. 39) of the Riverside Liturature Series (published monthly at fifteen cents a number by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston,) contains four carefully annotated papers by James Russell Lowell, "Books and Libraries," "Emerson, the Lecturer," "Keats," and "Don Quixote."

"Books and Libraries" is an address delivered in 1885 at the opening of a free public library. It is of especial value to book-lovers, and a most valuable aid to those interested in collecting books for private or public use.

"Emerson, the Lecturer," a delightful paper on the sage of Concord, is of great interest to lovers of Emerson, and for us a most helpful introduction to his works.

The chapter on Keats is a charming biographical and critical sketch of one poet by another.

"Don Quixote," a paper read before a workingmen's college at London, is a very entertaining essay on the worth and place of imaginative works in literature.

This number of the Riverside Literature Series places within the reach of all a choice collection of complete selections from the works of a master of English prose; it is especially suitable for use in high schools and academies.

Enormous Demand for Eggs.

An egg merchant, who goes from house to house buying eggs, told us a few days since, that he expected to have to pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs before Christmas.

"This is remarkable, when we reflect that the poultry industry of this country last year amounted to nearly seven hundred million dollars; and even then, we had to import several million dollars worth of foreign eggs. Our own egg-raisers ought to have this money. The demand for fresh eggs for food alone far exceeds the supply. At fifty cents per dozen eggs are as cheap as beefsteak for food. Many persons who keep hens will probably not have an egg to sell when they reach fifty cents. Some one may ask, "what can a body do, when the pesky old hens stop laying, and the pullets refuse to begin until spring?" Why! do as Wm. H. Yeomans, of Columbia, Conn., editor of the Germantown Telegraph did last winter. He says: "Last fall I made an experiment worth giving our readers. Until about Dec. 1st, I was getting from twenty common hens, only one or two eggs a day. I decided to try Sheridan's Condition Powder. I confess I had but little faith in its value to make hens lay. Commenced feeding, and for nine days saw very little effect. Then the hens began laying and in three months laid 858 eggs. Part of the time the thermometer was 12 degrees below zero, and my hens were laying a dozen eggs a day, while my neighbors (who did not use the powder) were getting none. I now, without hesitation, believe it is a valuable aid to farmers for eggs nearly 72 dozen eggs, in three months, from twenty common hens, with eggs worth 50 cents, is worth having. I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., (the only makers of Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay,) will send, postpaid to any person, two 25 cent packs of powder, and a new Poultry Raising Guide, for 60 cents. The book alone costs 25 cents. For $1.00 five packs of powder and a book; for $1.20 a large 2 1-4 pound can and book; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send stamps or cash. Interesting testimonals sent free.

The service at St. John's church, Portsmouth, on All Saints' day was especially interesting. In a brief and touching address the rector, Rev. Henry E. Hovey, referred to the early incumbents of the parish, now in Paradise, to the memorials with which the church and its records are enriched, and to the fact that the chalice to be used on this day at the Holy Communion, and long stored among the parish treasures, was the gift in 1736 of Christopher Rymes, a descendant of whom is numbered among those who have departed this life in this parish since last All Saints' day. Mr. Hovey also stated that he was about to place on the altar a gift of $1,000 just received by him from Mrs. Fox of Washington, widow of secretary Gustavas V. Fox, and daughter of the late Gov. Levi Woodbury of Portsmouth, to be applied to the permanent fund of the Cottage Hospital. Besides this noble sum, another lady, Mrs. Robert C. Peirce, whose repeated benefactions have greatly aided the rector in this branch of the work, made an offering of $100 for the same purpose. It may be added, in connection with this account, that two or three years ago the rector had the parish records indexed, and among them is the entry of the marriage of Governor Wentwor h and Martha Hilton, in 1763, an event which Longfellow celebrated in one of his most charming ballads. They were married at the governor's mansion which is still standing in the suburbs of Portsmouth, known as Little Harbor, by Rev. Arthur Brown. The Wentworth mansion is of much historic interest. It has recently been put in fine order by the present owners.

The entertainment given by the Universalist Social Circle at their vestry on Thursday evening passed off very pleasantly, a large company being in attendance. Each number on the programme was greeted with applause, and the occasion called vividly to mind the sociables this congregation used to enjoy a few years ago. Mrs. Fisher of College Hill read several selections with fine effect.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

The Meanest Man.

The meanest man in the world is the proprietor of a store in this city, says the Philadelphia Record. He has just posted up a notice to all the saleswomen in his establishment to the effect that they must wear button shoes hereafter. When asked his reason for this order he said that he lost money on the girls who wore laced shoes. "I have in my store about one hundred girls," said he, "and they all wear lace shoes. These shoes become untied about five times every day, and it takes two minutes to tie them again. At that rate each girl loses 10 minutes a day, and 100 girls loose 1,000 minutes in the same time. That makes about 16 hours per day, or two days' work. I pay my girls $1.50 per day, and the loss consequently means $3 per day, or about $1,000 per year. That much money will keep my boy and girl in school very nicely, or will pay my gas bills, and I propose to save it."

New Way — Old Way

Don't rub the dirt out of your clothes because your ancestors did. Keep up with the times. Try modern ideas for saving labor. James Pyle's PEARLINE leads all of those which pertain to cleanliness.

What is it that frays your collars, cuffs and skirts and pulls off the buttons and strings? What is it that ruins your paint? It's the old-fashioned way of rub, rub, rub, to make clean. PEARLINE does away with most of the rubbing, so it saves the worst of the wear.

You don't want an imitation, do you? Beware of them. PEARLINE is manufactured only by James Pyle, New York, notwithstanding the plausible stories told by peddlers and some grocers to the contrary.

Among the Holiday Novelties at Preston's Store, you will find a most attractive line of Japanese Bronze Goods, consisting of Plaques, Trays, Boxes, etc.—Lovers of artistic novelties will appreciate these.—We might also mention the line of Bonbonieres of Silver and Bohemian Ware, and a lot of elegant Vinaigrettes,—the finest ever in our store.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The Senate was not in session today.

HOUSE

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—It was ordered that when the House adjourn today, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. Dunn of Arkansas, from the committee on merchant marine and fisheries, reported back and the House adopted a resolution calling as to what relief can be furnished by the revenue cutter service and lifesaving service to American whaling and fishing vessels wrecked in Behrings sea or the Arctic ocean.

Mr. Foran of Ohio reported the invalid pensions appropriation bill.

Mr. Crisp of Georgia, from the committee on elections, submitted the report in the South Carolina contested election case of Smalls against Elliott, in favor of the contestee, Elliott, (dem.) The minority resolution, presented by Mr. Rowell of Illinois, provides for the seating of Smalls.

The House went into committee of the whole, Mr. McMillin of Tennessee in the chair, on the private calendar, the pending business being the Senate bill to incorporate the Nicaragua Canal company.

Mr. Spinola of New York offered an amendment striking out the clause which authorizes the company to exercise such powers as have been conferred upon it by the government of Nicaraugua. If this was to be a stock jobbing affair he said the sooner it was known the better. He thought the amendment ought to prevail for the protection of those who expected to invest their dollars in the enterprise.

Mr. Cox of New York made a brief constitutional argument in support of the measure, and was followed by Farquhar, Weaver, Adams, Reed, Raynor, Kerr, McAdoo and Davis, in favor of the bill.

Mr. Spinola's amendment was rejected.

On motion of Maish of Pennsylvania, an amendment was adopted requiring construction of the canal to be begun within three years. An amendment requiring the canal to be completed within ten years was voted down. On motion of Mr. Wilson of Minnesota an amendment was adopted providing that no certificates of stock be issued, until at least ten per cent of same shall be fully paid for in money at par value of the stock.

Pending vote on amendments, committee rose and House at 4:30 took recess until 7:30. At the evening session ten pension bills were passed.

THE HAYTIEN REPUBLIC.

Dilatory Tactics of Haytien Government Demands Presence of Our Ships.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—It was learned this afternoon that the action of Secretary Whitney, in ordering the fleet to prepare for an expedition to Hayti is due, not so much to the absolute refusal on the part of that government to comply with our request for the release of the seized American vessel, as to dilatory tactics adopted by the Haytien authorities in dealing with the question. The position taken by this government is understood to be, that as Haytien authorities deferred arbitration of case to this government they are virtually bound by its decision, and when they were informed by this government that they had no legal defense for the seizure of the "Haytien Republic", they should have accepted the situation and released the vessel. While they have not refused to do this, they are, it is said, acting in such a protrastinating way as to indicate a strong disinclination to accept the judgment against them.

The Attempt to Indict Gen. Dudley. He Takes the Matter Coolly.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 7.—The Evening News says: "A telegram from Washington shows Col. Dudley in a quiet frame of mind over blocks-of-fives business, and anticipated investigation by the federal grand jury in this city. He is quoted as saying with reference to the famous letter, "When that letter first came out I said it was a forgery as published, and I do not propose to make any further statements out of court." Col. Dudley also said if he had any business in Indiana he would not hesitate to come to this State, and he intimated that Marshall Hawkins would be given an opportunity to place him under arrest within a few days.

Disastrous Fire on Harlem River.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—Transfer boat Maryland, of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, one of the largest side-wheel steamers afloat, was burned to the waters edge soon after midnight on Harlem River, with two Pullman cars, two ordinary coaches and an "accommodation" car. There were 24 passengers in the cars at the time of the fire, but they were rescued, as well as the boat and train hands, without mishap, by a tugboat.

Big Customs Seizure at San Francisco.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Dec. 7.—Collector J. P. Hazen today seized the steamer Westmeath and her cargo of sugar, which arrived here from Java last Monday, consigned to the American sugar refinery of this city. Duties amounting to $150,000 were paid on cargo, which is valued at $400,000. The reason for the seizure is stated to be that the quality of the sugar had been underestimated and that the government had been defrauded of about $100,000 duty on the cargo. The warehouse of the company, where some of the sugar had been stored, was also seized.

CURED BY PRAYER.

A Remarkable Case Reported from the Town of Lady Lake, Florida.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LEESBURG, FLA., Dec. 7. — S. B. Thompson, a well known citizen of Lady Lake, and a man of family, has been a helpless cripple for four years. A spinal disease, that had been pronounced by all the doctors as incurable, was the cause of his helpless condition. On Wednesday night, a week ago, he dreamed that God told him to go to church next day, go to the altar and pray, and get the congregation to pray for him, and he would be cured. Accordingly, without telling his dream, he had himself carried to the church, and at the close of the services he was placed at the altar. The congregation, led by Rev. J. S. Collier, prayed for him, and he also prayed for himself. He says that while praying he heard a still small voice saying, "Arise and walk." The third time the voice was quite distinct and positive, and he obeyed at once. Rising to his feet he cried: "It is done," and he started to walk out of the church. J. W. Dyches and others undertook to support him, fearing that he would fall, but he waived them off and walked firmly and steadily out of the church and down the street and into his own house, shouting and praising God. He is now perfectly cured and walks as easily as any one. After being cured he told his dream. This miracle was witnessed by about 200 persons, and is as well attested as any event can possibly be.

Our Navy Safe Yet.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The talk of sending a naval vessel to Hayti seems to be confined to the newspapers. Admiral Gherardi and the officers in command of Galena, Yantic and Boston, at the navy yard, yesterday declared that no orders had been received from Washington to have any of the vessels sail for Haytian waters, nor had there been any intimation given that the Galena and Yantic would sail for the West Indies before the holidays.

Prefer Reduction in Hours.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

READING, PA., Dec. 7 —The nailers of the Pottstown Iron company at Pottstown, were informed in an informal manner today of the condition of trade and the scarcity of orders. The men gave the company to understand they would prefer a reduction of the working hours instead of a reduction in wages, as contemplated if the company found it necessary to make a change after Jan. 1st.

Deadly Gas.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

FINLAY, O., Dec. 7.—Wm. Lightfoot, an employe of the Peerless Refinery Co., while cleaning a still was overcome by gas and fell face downward into a pool of oil. Ephraim Werreick, who went to his assistance, also fell a victim of the noxious vapor. Peal O'Connell, a third man, experienced the same result. The three were finally gotten out; Lightfoot is dead, Weirrick dying, and O'Connell will recover.

French Tea and Coffee.

A noted French chief makes coffee by pouring boiling water on the ground berries; after filtering, the water is again boiled and again poured on the coffee; and finally a third time. He does not boil the coffee and water together, nor put the coffee in cold water and let it come to a boil. To make good tea, he says, you must pour boiling water on it and throw it out immediately. Then pour one-third of the boiling water required, put the pot over a steaming apparatus, and then add another third, and finally the last third, repeating the steaming, in order to let it draw without boiling. This is what the French cook of a well-known millionaire does.—Good Housekeeping.

How to Wash Dishes.

A writer in a domestic journal gives some good advice on the subject about which the women folks have no doubt troubled their heads more than about any other connected with their duties.

One of the most wearisome domestic tasks which falls to the housewife doing her own work is the "never-ending, still beginning," washing of dishes. It is often a real pleasure to prepare a dainty palatable meal; a well-earned satisfaction in viewing the work of one's hands in the light, sweet loaves of white or brown bread, the roast of flesh or fowl, done to a turn, the perfect cake, quivering custards, etc. But no one of these toothsome viands can be brought to pass without the aid of various pans, spoons, cups, etc., all to be cleansed for perhaps immediate use again. They must be washed by hand already weary—for modern invention, fertile as it is, has not yet, to my knowledge, produced an automatic dish-washer and dryer. It is discouraging, and few things sooner bring the tired housekeeper's spirit down to zero (especially if the mercury has already gone down to that point) than a kitchen-table full of sticky, greasy, unwashed dishes greeting her as she rises from breakfast or dinner, and in addition to the dishes used upon the family table. A very great help is to wash as you go, have your pan, with hot water and cloth handy, on the table, and as fast as you dish articles from the stove or range wash the cooking vessel. Rinse out frying pans, kettles, etc., with very hot water to take off the grease. Chain dishcloths readily take off whatever sticks to the sides of the stew-pans or pots, or a common clam shell may answer the same purpose. As nearly all cooking utensils are more easily washed when warm, washing as you go saves time for the dining-room work after the meal, besides setting the kitchen sooner in order. Keep several thick holders near the stove, to save your hands (and towels) in lifting hot kettles and pans. Never take hold of these with the dishcloth, as you wish to keep that important kitchen appliance entirely free from pot black and grease. By taking some simple precautions the cooking vessels can be washed with almost as much ease at your china service. By having your pan and hot water ready you may sit down to breakfast or dinner with the sense of relief that the kitchen things are out of the way until next time.

They stood beneath the stars, and, silent as the heart-beats of the night, looked far away into the diamond-studded shirt-front of the sky. "Is that Mars?" he whispered, as he slipped his arm about her waist and gazed upon a glittering orb in the distant blue, "No, it ain't," she exclaimed, jerking away, it's mine—and if you think you are hugging mother you are mistaken." The matter was amicably adjusted before anything serious resulted.—Washington Critic.

SATURDAY, DEC. 8, 1888.

If the Hon. John R. McPherson of New Jersey had taken the same attitude toward the Mills bill before the election that he seems inclined to take now the democratic party certainly would have been no worse off.—New York Sun (Dem.)

The mayoralty fight in Boston has aroused intense interest, and it would seem as though Mr. Hart, the Citizens' candidate, has a fair chance of beating O'Brien. There is a revolt in the democratic ranks which has assumed very formidable proportions. The "City Hall ring" have become alarmed, and are trying to excite race prejudices in order to hold the vote of the Irish born citizens.

The New York Sun is decidedly of the opinion that President Cleveland has become wiser since his tariff message of 1887, and that in his late message "the thorn which he thrust into the democratic side in 1887 has been withdrawn," and that he leaves the party now to stand upon the declarations of 1884. Commenting upon the course of President Cleveland in regard to the tariff issue in the late campaign the Sun says:

"Upon a scheme retaining the internal revenue all tariff reduction leads straight, and quickly too, to free trade. It was this which paralyzed the real spirit of democracy, and through this the sole sentiment left in the canvass with any genuine animation in it and able to act without protest or reservation was that of the free traders. There never was a more magnificent exhibition of party loyalty than the manner in which the bulk of the protection democrats kept their place in the ranks for the sake solely of the party name."

A Man Who Told Too Much Truth.

Edward E. Kidder, the author of Sol Smith Russell's merry comedy of "Bewitched" tells an amusing story of his experience in the Catskill mountains during the past summer. At an informal party in the hotel parlor one evening a specimen of the genus tough arose and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I ain't no professional, but I'll recite a recitation that was recited by Nate Salisbury, of Salisbury's Troubadours, called Der Tramp."

"My blood ran cold," said Mr. Kidder, for I was the author of the recitation. Well, he simply murdered it. At its conclusion somebody said:

"That's a nice poem. Who wrote it?"

"My wife replied: 'Mr. Kidder.'

"There was a glare of incredulity from every one."

"Well, the next evening they were singing a hymn written by my mother, Mrs. M. A. Kidder, and at its conclusion the question was asked: 'Who wrote it?'"

"My wife replied: 'Mr. Kidder's mother.'

"There was a sickening silence. It was evident that our family was regarded by those present as impostors and liars. The next day while indulging in a little game of poker a young man said: 'That was a funny game of poker that the Troubadours had in 'Three of a Kind.' Did you ever see the play?' 'Yes,' I replied calmly. 'I wrote it' (which, by the way, I did). This almost capped the climax of our audacity, but it was accomplished the next day when another young man remarked: 'An actor named Sol Smith Russell came to Danbury last winter in a play called "Bewitched." Laugh? How I did laugh. Did you ever see that play?' 'Yes,' was my rejoinder. 'I wrote it.' This was too much and the company fled, leaving me to cogitate on the folly of speaking the truth and to long for the presence of Eli Perkins."—Pittsburg Leader.

The Professor's Adventure.

Prof. Butler of the Wisconsin State University is a great believer in outdoor exercise, particularly walking, though his flesh is not always as willing as his spirit. One day, when he was trying to walk around Lake Mendota, his legs began to swell, and so he stopped not far from the insane hospital, and, sitting on the ground, stuck his feet upon a rail fence to reduce the swelling. While in this awkward posture two men drove up in a wagon, and after a whispered consultation jumped out, pounced upon the professor, handcuffed him, bundled him into the wagon, and in spite of his indignant protestations carried him to the hospital; thinking he was an escaped patient.

Prof. Brainard G. Smith has begun the instruction of a class in journalism at Cornell University, and has more applicants than he can accommodate. Meantime the various newspaper offices throughout the country will continue to educate in the good old way and graduate the real newspaper men of the future.

At an educational meeting held in this state a few years ago, says George Fleming in Literature, the conductor, a noted professor, made the following statement: "The best-educated person in this room will not use more than six or seven hundred words." He also assigned a smaller number to persons of limited education, stating that an ignorant man would not use more than two or three hundred words. I had never before seen statements of similar import in public print, and to test their correctness I began an investigation of the matter.

The subject was brought anew to my mind by observing an article in the Chautauquan some months ago, in which Prof. Bancroft remarked: "It has been estimated that an English farm hand has a vocabulary limited to two hundred or three hundred words. An American workman who reads the newspapers may command from seven hundred to one thousand words. Five thousand is a large number even for an educated reader or speaker."

The assertion is much nearer the truth than that of the institute conductor mentioned. For the benefit of those who may be interested I offer the results of my study on the subject. An intelligent person can make the same examination, and will arrive at the same results.

I took Webster's high-school dictionary, edition of 1878, containing 434 pages of vocabulary, and examined each word in the book. I made a note of those words which I supposed I had used at some time either in speaking or writing. I counted the primitive words and those derivatives whose meaning is most at variance with the primitive. Thus I count fright and fruit, but not frighten, frightful, frightfully, nor fruitage, fruiterer, fruitful, fruitfulness, fruition, and fruit trees. I omitted most of the compound words, especially when the component parts directly indicated the meaning, as milk-pail, meeting-house, rag-man, but counted those whose significance was not directly indicated, as crowbar, quicksand, tinfoil. As the result of this examination I had 7,928 words which I think I myself have used.

Had I counted the various derivatives in common use it is probable the number would be nearly double.

To make a further test of words at my command, I spent about two hours in writing from memory words in A. I was able to note down 537 words that I could use if occasion required. This is 35 per cent more than I had counted from the dictionary. Should the same proportion hold good in all the letters, it would follow that I can recall from memory 10,700 words all of which are familiar.

I made another count and came to the conclusion that I could give a fair definition of at least 20,000 words in that book, and would understand their signification in a printed article or spoken address.

The above estimates are based upon my own experience and knowledge, because it was convenient to make the experiment with myself. Every well-informed man will be as competent, or more so. Either professor mentioned will have a more extended vocabulary than I have.

I then took at random, in the same dictionary, a page in each letter and counted the words in very common use. On twenty-four pages there were 254 such words. This would give 3,500 words in use by persons of the most ordinary intelligence. None of these lists include any proper names.

At the time of making this study one of my children was 3 years and 2 months of age. I noted down (and still have the list) 213 words used by her in one day. They were words that any intelligent child would use, chiefly names of household articles and common things, with the most ordinary verbs and participles.

I did not hear all she said during the day, nor do I think she used all the words she knew. I estimated her vocabulary at 400 words, and she did not know enough to carry on any except childish conversation.

From all the foregoing observations I draw the following conclusions:

Every well-bred man of fair ability will be able to define or understand 20,000 or 25,000 primitive and principal derivative words.

The same man in his conversation and writing will use no less than 6,000 or 7,000 words. If he be a literary man he will command 2,000 or 4,000 more.

Common people use from 2,000 to 4,000 words, according to their general intelligence and conversational powers.

An "illiterate man" (one who can not read) will use from 1,500 to 2,500 words.

A person who has not at command at least 1,000 words is an ignoramus and will find difficulty in expressing his thoughts, if indeed he have any to express.

The Women of Armenia.

The Armenians belong to two classes—the kalun, or "coarse," and the inge, or "refined." The former are members of the Gregorian, or national, Armenian Church. They are conservative, and especially in the interior adhere rigidly to their ancient Oriental manners and customs, which the inge, who belong to the Roman Catholic Church and copy European manners, have in a great measure set aside.

In Armenia the women are secluded to the extent of dining and sitting apart from the men, and out of doors they are cloaked and veiled like the Turkish women. The Armenian ladies of Constantinople are renowned for their beauty, which consists chiefly in the languor of their dark, almond-shaped eyes. As a rule, however, the Armenian type is coarse, especially among the lower classes.

In the Capital and in Smyrna, where this community is numerous, the upper classes of both Gregorians and Catholics are well educated and not much inferior in manners to their neighbors of other races. While residing in the latter city I was invited to an Armenian fancy dress ball, where I was the only European present. Everything was well arranged. The stewards were perfect in their duties, and the costumes were extremely rich, varied and picturesque. One pretty girl in particular—dressed in the ancient Turkish costume—made a great sensation, and was deservedly besieged by partners, for she waltzed most gracefully. Many of the ladies and gentlemen present spoke English, nearly all expressed themselves fluently in French, and I was indebted to them for a most enjoyable evening.

In the privacy of their homes the Armenian woman of all classes are as a rule untidy and slatternly. They are towns, having discarded their natural costume, they copy the Parisian fashions. But their want of taste seldom fails to make itself evident in glaring and ill-sorted colors, while those who can afford it overload themselves with jewelry. Out of doors they wear preposterously high-heeled French boots, on which they totter along the roundly-paved streets, but on returning home they exchange these for slippers run down at the heels and their toilets for petticoats and jackets, the latter of thin calico in summer and fur-lined stuff in winter.

History of the "Bloomer."

"My dear old mother was really the inventor of that peculiar costume afterward made famous by the name of Bloomer," said Capt. Edward E. Potter, United States navy, the commandant of the League Island navy yard, yesterday. "I was born at Seneca Falls, N. Y., and Mrs. Bloomer and Mrs Elizabeth Cady Stanton were our near neighbors, and mother's most particular friends. Mrs. Bloomer was my Sunday school teacher. Mother was a very intelligent woman, and, although she didn't favor the extreme advanced views of her two friends, she had a mind of her own, and was very original and inventive.

"One day in the spring of 1847 it became necessary to 'clean house,' and mother got ready for the arduous work. She found that her gown discommoded her, and at once set about inventing a substitute. In ten minutes' time she had evolved the Bloomer costume, and cutting the material for a suit out of some calico that she happened to have on hand, she sat down at the sewing machine and in a short time run it together. She donned the new garments, found them just what she wanted, and, whitewash brush in hand, mounted a step-ladder to freshen up the kitchen ceiling.

"She was busily engaged when Mrs. Bloomer dropped in, and was at once struck with the utility and convenience of the new garments. She asked mother's permission to make the discovery public, and when through the columns of her paper she described the 'breeches,' and began to wear them herself, the costume took her name, and although it was very popular at one time mother never claimed the credit of being its inventor.—Philadelphia Press.

What Will Be The Next Great Invention.

The Lewiston Journal recently propounded the following questions: (1) Of what nature will be the next economic invention? (1) What great invention is most needed and called for by the world? (3) Does anything remain to be invented by man, which shall be as revolutionary in its effects as the application of steam power? These were the answers received from Gen. A. W. Greely: (1) The storage, without appreciable loss of electricity produced by natural forces, such as waterfalls, tides, etc. (2) A cotton picker. (3) No.

Tramp (in a barroom)—There was a funny discussion going on in Pittsburg when I left. It was on a point of grammar, and the question was: "Which is correct—let's you and I take a drink, or let you and I take a drink?" Philadelphian—Humph! Easy enough. 'Let's you and I take a drink.' "Thanks; don't care if I do."—Philadelphia Record.

POSITIVELY CLOSING WEEKS

GRAND CYCLORAMA

BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG,

641 Tremont St., Boston.

Don't fail to see this great battle scene at once.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush on the druggists still continues and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to give entire satisfaction. Price 50c. and $1. Trial size free. eod6

"What shall I do?" the maiden cried. "He will be here tonight and my hands are chapped; however I have a bottle of Salvation Oil."

Old remedies under new names are being constantly introduced to the public, but Dr Bull's Cough Syrup still maintains its pre-eminence.

Cyrus Dunn, a well known business man of Manchester, died of heart failure on Wednesday, aged 72 years.

As a purifier, Ayer's Sarsaparilla acts directly and promptly. A single bottle will prove its merits. Many thousands of people are yearly saved from dangerous fevers by the exercise of a little timely care in cleansing the system by the use of this remedy.

Avoid the harsh, irritating, griping compounds so often sold as purgative medicines, and correct the irregularities of the bowels by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills, which are gentle, yet searching, in their action.

Hundreds of letters from those using Hall's Hair Vigor attest its value as a restorer of gray hair to its natural color. As a stimulant and tonic, preventing and curing baldness, and cleansing the scalp, its use cannot be too strongly recommended.

Happy and Hungry.

For over five years I was a constant sufferer with that most terrible and annoying disease, dyspepsia. After paying out hundreds of dollars, the only medicine I found that would do me any good was Sulphur Bitters. Six bottles cured me. Now I can eat will and am happy and hungry.—Editor.

The republican club of Concord has been put on an assured basis for the ensuing year.

Be Your Own Doctor.

It won't cost you half as much. Do not delay. Send three 2-cent stamps for postage, and we will send you Dr. Kaufmann's great work, fine colored plates from life, on disease, its causes, and home cure. Address A. P. Ordway, & Co., Boston, Mass.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. eow,wed,fri,0ual

Precocity.

"Well, Johnny, have you learned your A B C's yet?" said his father, after the lad's first week in school. "Yes, sir," replied the young hopeful. "A. B. C. B. means Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam." Johnny remembered how quickly his last cold had been cured.

A SCIENTIST'S WARNING.

"We are startled constantly by the sudden death of some man who seemed the picture of health. He thought he was well. He had felt strange pains shooting through his body, but as they did not remain, he forgot them. His head pained him periodically, he was somewhat pale; more than common and unaccountably tired, but he felt comparatively well and vigorous; and yet, he suddenly died! He a shame to our boasted civilization."

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

"Look at the list of women who die in childbirth, and what is it? Simply because their maternal organs have been so weakened by the most terrible of diseases that they cannot withstand the fearful sudden strain that is brought to bear upon them. How many women escape monthly agonies? And yet nature never intended that pain or inconvenience should attend the operation of her natural laws. The solemn and terrible fact is, that men and women drag along, die, and are buried, and their friends and the doctors say heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, congestion, convulsions, when the cause lay far back of all these things. The truth is that weakened kidneys are the cause of most of our troubles. The great question, therefore, is 'How shall I preserve my kidneys, or, if diseased, how can they be restored?' There are numbers of cases and learned from unquestionable sources of many others, where the preparation, Hunt's Remedy, has been almost remarkable in its results. Use it freely among my patients, and shall continue to do so. It is a wonderful and invaluable remedy."

The remarks of the learned doctor should be carefully considered, and acted upon by all who desire long life, and freedom from pain and the danger of sudden death.

A FAIRY GOD-MOTHER.

"O Willie, I do wish I had an apple, a real rosy-cheeked apple, like the ones that used to grow in grandpa's orchard in Michigan."

Two feverish little hands came together supplicatingly, a wan, flushed face looked up from the pillow with a piteous appeal in the child's blue eyes.

"Dear Nellie, I'd do most anything to get you one," said Willie, coming over to the side of the bed, and dropping his curly head on the pillow beside the little sick sister.

"Don't you suppose you could, somehow?" asked the thin, parched lips. "Isn't there a single penny left in the drawer?"

"Not a single penny. I've looked six times. I say, Nellie, this is an awfully hard world to live in."

"Such a hard world," echoed Nellie.

"Here am I, head of this family," continued Willie, drawing his slender self erect, in order to do credit to his exalted position, "and other men don't seem to think I am of much account. I guess a fellow can be 'head of a family' if he isn't large, and the smaller he is the more he needs a lift from other 'heads of families.' I ought to be earning as much as a dollar a week, and nobody wants me even for 'errand boy 'cause I'm so small, and they think I can't carry big bundles. I only wish that they'd just let me try."

"There might be a penny stuck in a crack in the drawer," was the only answer Nellie's plaintive little voice made. "Mrs. Benson's got an uncommon big washing to-day, and mamma won't be back till most night, and it may be I won't care for an apple then, but I do want one now so very, very much."

"I might go down into the street and see if I can't earn a nickel in some way, only"——

"Only what, Willie?" asked Nellie's eager voice as he hesitated.

"I promised mother I'd stay with you until she came back. She is worried about you, and she don't want you left alone."

"But I won't mind it, indeed I won't, Willie. I'll be thinking about the apple all the time, and I'm sure mamma won't mind. My mouth is so hot and dry, and the water isn't one bit good. Please go."

"All right, I'll go, and I'll just make some one give me a job to earn an apple for you." Willie looked quite fierce as he made this threat, then, taking his rimless hat, he started down the stairs.

"I wouldn't wonder 'n my old hat keeps me from getting work," he soliloquized, soberly, "but how's a fellow to get new hats an' things, when nobody won't hire him? Let his dear mother scrub 'em out on the washboard, maybe. Hum, I'd be ashamed of a hat got in that way."

The hot sun beat down upon him as he passed along the street, and he kept thinking and thinking of the little sick sister waiting for the apple. Yes, he must get one for her, somehow. But how? that was the question that puzzled him.

"She'll want some one to cut it for her," he thought joyously, "for of course, a woman can't cut wood."

But, when he reached the door, a larger boy had just rang, having come on the same errand as himself, and, of course, the Widow Hopkins engaged the larger, stronger boy to do the work.

"Hello, Willie Plunket, come and have a game of ball," cried one of Willie's mates, for this boy Willie was a master hand at ball, or any other game, and the boys enjoyed his society.

It was a great temptation, I assure you; but Willie had no thought of yielding to it. Remembering that he was "the head of the family," he replied emphatically,—

"I can't. I am looking for a job."

An old woman was going by, and, hearing these words from the lips of a very child, she turned and scrutinized his face closely.

Just at that moment,—was it an accident? or do you think she did it purposely?—her foot slipped, and away rolled several brown paper bundles she was carrying in her arms.

"Dear me! Dear me sus! what ever shall I do?" she exclaimed, in dismay.

Quick as a flash Willie sprang to her assistance.

"I suppose you want to be paid for picking up my packages?" she queried, in a sharp, squeaky voice, that exactly matched her thin, sharp face with its long nose and keen gray eyes.

Willie's sensitive face flushed a vivid scarlet.

"I'd be ashamed to take pay for picking up a lady's bundles for her," he said, his young voice swelling with indignation.

"You would, eh? I thought you were looking for a job?"

"And so I am, marm. I'm the head of a family, and my sick sister wants an apple real bad, but I wouldn't think of—of taking advantage of any one's accident, much less a lady's."

Willie caught his breath after the effort it had cost him to make such an elderly sounding remark, and there was a sly twinkle in the keen old eyes, but Willie did not see it.

"Here's a nickel, and good big pay it is for the little turn you did for me," she said, almost savagely.

Willie drew back, and threw up his head proudly.

"If you'll let me earn the nickel, I'll be glad to take it, for Nellie's sake," he said. "I'll carry all these bundles home for you, and then you may give me the nickel."

"I live a long piece from here," the sharp voice made answer.

"It 'll give me a better chance to earn the nickel," replied Willie, briskly.

"Very well. Step up spry then, right around the first corner, and mind you don't lag behind. I don't mean to give you a chance to slip any of the smaller bundles in your pocket."

The old eyes took note of every change in the boy's frank face, and how could Willie know that she was testing him, or her object in asking where he lived?

"I have an errand in this store," she said, as they were about passing a large grocery store. "Come in with me."

The proprietor, a tall, fine-looking man, came forward, and said,—

"Where is your carriage, mother?" She drew him to one side, and held a whispered consultation with him, during which they both glanced often at Willie, guarding those brown bundles which the eccentric woman had been carrying home, because her carriage had not come for her at the moment she expected.

Presently she came back to him.

"This gentleman is going to send those things to my house, free of charge," she said, "and as a 'penny saved is two earned,' I think I'll let him do it."

Without another word she walked out of the door, and took a seat in a carriage that had just driven up.

Willie choked, and two big, round tears slid down over his cheeks, in spite of his brave efforts to keep them back. He had been so sure of an apple for Nellie, and the disappointment was bitter indeed.

The fine gentleman saw it all, but he had promised that queer little old mother of his something, and he let poor disappointed Willie go away, without one encouraging word.

The whole hour had been wasted, and he must now go home without Nellie's apple.

Slowly his reluctant feet approached the door of his mother's room; slowly it swung open in his hand. How could he bear to see Nellie's eager, expectant face, when there was no apple to give her?

"O Willie, Willie Plunket," called Nellie's voice, the moment he stepped inside the door. "The queerest little old lady has been here, and she brought a lots and lots of apples and oranges, and she said you was to take the basket back to the store, where she left you, and there'd be a job waiting for you."

"She did?" exclaimed Willie, explosively, his eyes round with amazement. "Did she have a cross-looking face, and a scolding voice, and eyes that look a fellow right through and"—

"Why no, she did n't," interrupted Nellie. "She had the loveliest old face ever was, and the sweetest voice, and the kindest blue eyes. She only stopped about a minute, but I shall never forget her,—never! And she is going to take me to ride in her carriage some day, and—O Willie Plunket, I do really believe that she is our fairy god-mother."

"So do I," said Willie solemnly. "If she can change herself like that she must be something of that sort. I believe I'll take the basket right back before the 'good fortune' all vanishes again."

"Do, Willie," entreated Nellie, as she set her white teeth into a juicy apple.

When Willie delivered the basket at the store he found that the "good fortune" had not vanished. He was given a position in the store with a salary of two dollars a week to commence with and a promise of higher wages as he learned the business.

"I feel as though it is too much, sir," said Willie modestly.

"Not for the 'head of a family,'" replied the proprietor, quizzically.

The time came when Willie saw only the smile and kindly eyes of the fairy god-mother, as both children loved to call her; and her voice was always gentle when speaking to him, and he wondered how it could ever have sounded harsh and discordant.

Under her fairy touches, the extreme poverty of the Plunketts vanished, and comforts found their way into their humble home. A hundred better things came to them, all as a result of Willie's thoughtfulness in gathering up those scattered bundles.

The Loon, or Great Northern Diver.

From the article on "Bird Music" by Simeon Pease Cheney in the Century we quote the following: "The loon is not a singer, but his calls and shoutings exhibit so great a variety of vocal qualities that we must consider him a member of Nature's orchestra.

"In the summer of 1887 I spent a few weeks on the borders of Trout Lake, St. Lawrence County, N. Y. This beautiful little island-dotted lake, some three miles long, has been inhabited for years by three or four pairs of loons. There they lay their eggs and rear their young, and there I found a good opportunity to study them. On one occasion a small party of us discovered a nest. When we were yet a good way off the wary sitter slid from sight into the water, darted along beneath our boat, and was far out into the lake before she came to the surface. The nest, simply a little cavity in dry muck, was on the ruins of an old muskrat house, not more than eight inches above the water. There were two very dark eggs in it, —never more than two are found in the nest of the loon,—nearly as large as those of a goose.

"The time of sitting, as I was informed, is four weeks. Wilson says of the loons that 'they light upon their nests'; but a careful observer, who had several times seen the female make her way from the water to her nest, told me that they shove themselves to it on their breasts, very much as they push themselves in the water. I was also informed that the young are never fed upon the nest, but are taken to the water on the back of the mother, where they remain and are fed for a time, and then are launched upon the waves for life. At this age one can row up to them and take them in the hand, which they delight in giving hard nips with their long and limber bills; but when a month old they seem as wild and cunning as their parents."

Voodooism in Hayti.

It is a fact that voodooism is practised in Hayti, but it is done without human sacrifice. There is no cannibalism known on the island, reports to the contrary notwithstanding, and nothing of the kind has been proved since 1863. The voodooists are a remarkably learned people in the science of botany, and they can do things which would seem incredible to those who never saw them performing their rites. They profess to be able to give a charm to the life of the warrior, and they can render the human body impregnable to the thrust of the sharpest sword. This is done by bathing the body in a vegetable solution. They are a strange people and their influence on the island is considerable. Voodooism does not appear to be losing ground in spite of our educational advancement, but, as I said before, I do not believe that in observing the rites there is any human sacrifice—Philadelphia Press.

A Philadelphia newspaper says that the prevailing impression that the "old-time, broad-brimmed, sugar-scoop Quakers" are dying out is erroneous, at least as far as Philadelphia is concerned. Twenty-five years ago the same impression prevailed, but to-day the beauties in the meeting houses are as full as then. The explanation is that after coquetting with worldly ways and fashions for a season the young generation of Friends undergo a reaction and gradually fall into the same ways and the same austere life, even to the plain garb of their grandfathers and grandmothers.

THE OFFICE BOY.

The Brooklyn Insurance Man Tries Another One With Very Unsatisfactory Results.

I met my friend, the up-town insurance man, a day or two ago, and his countenance was very sad, says "The Rambler" of the Brooklyn Eagle. "Those office-boys will be the death of me yet," he said. "I tried a new one last week. He was a nice American boy, very rapid in his movements, and seemingly very zealous. When he had been in my employ two days he came to the office after a trip to the bank and said that two men had attacked him and tried to get his money away. He had tripped up one and torn away from the other, and made good his escape. The next day he came running into the office and told me that the two young men who were laying for a chance to rob him were outside. He pointed them out, I rung for a policeman, and the men were arrested. I gave the boy $5 for his sharpness and faithfulness. The boy flew about his work in a more alert manner than ever, and I was still further convinced that I had found a treasure. That afternoon I went out at 1 o'clock to get my lunch. I met a man who said Cleveland was not going to be elected, and of course stopped to reason him out of his view. At 4 o'clock I sent a note over to my chief clerk, telling him to close up the place and send the keys to my home by the boy. Those directions I afterwards learned were strictly obeyed, but the boy had his own idea of how to perform his share of the work. 'Nobody knows where the boss is,' he said cheerfully to my wife, as he gave up the keys. 'He may be dead. No one has seen or heard anything from him since lunch-time. I rather think he must have met with an accident, but whatever has happened you can depend on me ma'am. I'll stand by you and see you through.' Well, then there was a time. My wife jumped to the conclusion that something had happened, and telegraphed for her brother. She signed her initials, which of course, are mine. Her sister-in-law, who got the telegram, read it and imagined it came from me, and was designed to get my brother-in-law out for a racket. She didn't give it to him until after 8 o'clock. About half-past 7 o'clock I turned up at my house, and my wife nearly fainted at the sight of me. While we were talking the bell rang and the boy appeared, more cheerful and busy than ever. His countenance fell considerably when he saw me, and he got off to the edge of the stoop. A dark, grave-looking man, whose dress suggested clerical duties, was with him. 'What do you want?' I asked the man. 'I am an undertaker, sir,' he replied, 'and I believe there is a job for me here.' I was confounded for a moment, and then I kicked that boy clear to the sidewalk, and have not seen him since."

Woman's Crown of Glory.

Brush it. So shall your hair be clean and silky. No amount of combing will make it either. Look well to your brush. No wire brush, no heavy silver-backed brush, but even, well-chosen bristles. Abundant hair is an ornament, but it is a responsibility. A woman's crown of glory is apt to be a dirty diadem. There is no dust catcher equal to a great shock of hair. Every flying particle lodges in the flowing tresses that the poets rave over, and sifts down from silken thread to silken thread whether the locks be brown or gold. If your hair is still in color, wiry in texture, and will not catch the burnishing gleam of the last rhyme you read, brush it. If it is losing the gloss it had when you were younger, if it looks old and sickly, brush it. If your hair is fretful and peevish, brush it till it smiles and behaves with docility under the comb again. Wash it first. Beat an egg into foam, rub it well into the roots, thoroughly but gently, then rinse it in lukewarm water. Keep a small brush for the purpose—a nail brush or a toothbrush will answer—and part your hair, strand by strand, until you have cleansed the scalp well over. If your hair is moist by nature, dissolve a little borax and glycerine in the rinse water; if it is harsh and dry use the glycerine only, lest the head, after so much manipulation, feels uneasy or sore. Find an airy place—in the sun if the day be not too warm—and brush the wet hair dry. Brush it caressingly with a soft brush till the moisture is nearly expelled. Then stop patting it and brush briskly with a stiff brush till it is satiny and dry.—American Analyst.

Hardier Apples.

For the north and west hardier apples are necessary if they are ever to become as abundant and cheap as is desirable. Twenty years since and later, many Russian varieties were imported. Extensive experiments with them have furnished only a few hardier than the Dutchess, and those generally inferior in quality and mostly early kinds, says J. W. Smith of Charles City, Iowa.

Fortunately some investigators did not forget that nearly all our varieties of choice apples were only chance seedlings, originating within the United States and Canada. One of these was Mr. C. G. Patten, now President of the Iowa State Horticultural Society. In 1867, on the open prairie, in northern Iowa, he began to plant the seed of choice, hardy apples that were likely to be crossed only with others of similar qualities. New seedling varieties were thus produced. Sufficient time has now elapsed to test the quality of the fruit and the hardiness of many of these. Numbers have proved hardier than Dutchess, fruit also good in size and quality.

Some work has been done more scientifically, by covering a tree when in blossom and fertilizing it by hand, or by a swarm of bees, and other apple blossoms placed within the tent. The result of much of this painstaking work is yet unknown, but from the results already obtained, and what is only reasonable to expect, it now appears, and Mr. Patten confidently believes, that the hardy apple question for the trying climate of the north and west is practically solved by the new seedling varieties. In quality of fruit, in rapidity of growth and in hardiness, they seem much superior to most of the Russians. Modern scientists claim that American trees are superior to all others in American soil. The apple is evidently no exception to this rule.

Mr. Patten is a modest man and entitled to much credit for his work. It deserves to be widely published, but is to be destined to receive the blessings of all lovers of the apple, and especially of the people of the great northwest.

PORTSMOUTH REPUBLICAN CLUB.

At the regular meeting of the Portsmouth Republican club, Friday evening, the declination of Mr. Willard J. Sampson to serve as president of the club was received and accepted.

Mr. W. Scott Smith was elected president of the club, and a committee appointed to wait upon him returned with a report of his acceptance.

Voted that all citizens of eighteen years of age and upward be eligible to membership.

Adjourned to Friday evening, the 14th inst.

MUSIC HALL.

There was another large audience at Music hall on Friday evening, when the Bennett-Moulton Comic Opera Co. gave a charming presentation of "The Bohemian Girl." This afternoon the company will perform "The Merry War" at the children's matinee, and will close the week's engagement to-night with "Robert Macaire, or the Two Thieves." Take the children to the hall this afternoon; we guarantee them a rich treat.

"DAN DARCY."

It is with pleasure that we again call our readers' attention to "Dan Darcy," which will be produced at Music hall next Friday night. It is over thirteen months since its first and only production in Portsmouth, but we doubt if it has entirely flown from the minds of those who saw it then. Of that entertainment we said at the time:

"The new Irish-American drama, 'Dan Darcy,' was presented under the management of Mr. J. M. Hill, with the author, Mr. James Connor Roach, in the title role. The character of 'Dan Darcy' is thoroughly pleasing; he has all the good qualities of true Irish nature—is generous and big hearted, witty, keenly appreciative of humor, and impulsive, but he never descends to the clownish buffoonery which marks most of the so-called Irish impersonations, and we do not doubt that Mr. Hill, in Dan Darcy, has added another to the long list of successful attractions he has placed before the theatre-going people."

The success which has attended "Dan Darcy" since we made the above prediction, has been such that we cannot refrain alluding to it with pleasure. The good things that have been said in the press about the piece would fill a volume. Nym Crinkle, in the New York World says: "You smell the peat from the moment you see him. The everlasting verdure of his green hills is in his heart, and the wet skies show in his gray eyes."

"Dan Darcy" will be produced at Music hall on Friday evening, Dec. 14th, by Mr. James C. Roach, under the same able management of Mr. J. M. Hill, and has lost none of the strong features which made it pre-eminently entertaining last season.

PERSONAL.

—Mrs. Perry, widow of Adams Perry, Jr., has arrived at her former home in this city from Burton, Kansas, where she has resided for the past ten years, and where her late husband died two years ago.

—Mr. Michael R. Perkins and wife, of Chapel street, will pass the winter in Amherst, Mass., and leave for that place to-day.

—Mr. Herman W. Oxford left this city Friday for Suncook, where he enters on his new duties at once.

—Mr. J. W. Frankel, business manager of J. C. Roach as "Dan Darcy," under the management of J. M. Hill, made us a call yesterday. Mr. Frankel was a newspaper scribe for a number of years, and aside from being a bright theatrical critic, is a gentleman.

—Mr. Frank P. Davis, employed at the Shoe factory, and living at Christian Shore, lies very ill with the measles. His child, and two young relatives who live with him, are also sick with the same disease, which has been quite prevalent in the city for several weeks, and does not seem to abate.

Dinner, of the Mechanics' Fire Society.

The Mechanics' Fire Society held its annual meeting at the Rockingham on Friday evening, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President, Joseph H. Gardiner;
Clerk, John Ponder;
Wardens, Wm. R. Martin, Geo. W. Pendexter, Enoch J. Conner.

After the transaction of business and the reading of the report of the clerk, showing the association to be in a flourishing financial condition, the president and Mr. H. Fisher Eldredge, the host of the evening, led the way to the famous old dining-room, where the quarterly dinner of the society was served as only the Rockingham can serve it, to as jolly a party as ever gathered around the festive board. The president, Mr. Gardiner, and the host, Mr. Eldredge, occupied the head of the table, and on either side were the guests of the society, Mr. Hiram C. Locke, W. Scott Smith, and Morris C. Foye. At the other end of the table were Mayor George E. Hodgdon and Ex-Mayor M. Eldredge. Of the other members of the society the following were present: Wm. A. Hodgdon, Geo. W. Pendexter, John Pender, A. R. Junkins, Wm. G. Billings, S. C. Whittier, Wm. R. Martin, W. J. Sampson, E. J. Conner, A. E. Rand, Albert Rand, B. F. Webster, E. D. Coffin, H. R. Stoddard, T. E. Call, Dan M. Camp, J. P. Morse, J. W. Caswell and John S. Treat.

After the inner man had been more than satisfied the company adjourned to the parlor, where short addresses were made, and Capt. E. D. Coffin told in his inimitable manner a Sunday experience when engaged in service not connected with the Fire society. The social feature was kept up until a late hour, and all departed for their homes delighted with the entertainment so delightfully carried out.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

Elder W. H. Mitchell will preach in the Advent church on Sunday; the public are cordially invited.

Rev. Mr. Farren of Newton, Mass., will preach in the Middle street Baptist church on Sunday.

At the vesper service in the Unitarian church tomorrow, Rev. Alfred Gooding will give the 9th lecture in his series on the Epistle to the Galatians.

"A century of song."—On Sunday evening, the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church is to have a grand service of thanksgiving for a century of Christian song, in honor of the memory of Charles Wesley. The exercises promise to be of peculiar interest, indeed a calendar day in the history of this church.

The Dover District Ministerial association holds its winter meeting in the Methodist church in this city next Tuesday afternoon, at 1:30 P. M.

Moses H. Goodrich S. F. E. Co., No. 4, will give a ball in Franklin hall on Washington's birthday eve.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

Danger from Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It [illegible] the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

WHAT CONGRESS WILL DO THIS WEEK.

Speculations About the Tariff Bill; Its Passage Before Christmas Not Probable.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The tariff bill will be taken up every day this week in the Senate immediately after the miscellaneous business of the morning hour. The bill as printed contains 140 printed pages, and last week an average of 19 a day was disposed of. This rate of progress, if maintained, would enable the Senate to reach a vote in nine legislative days; and if the confident prediction of some of the republican senators that the bill will be out of the way before the holiday recess is to be verified, its consideration will have to continue at this rapid rate. But in view of the efforts of Harris and McPherson of the minority, and Plumb of the majority, to procure the adoption of amendments now pending, and making allowances for others to be offered, it is hardly probable the measure will be returned to the House until after the Christmas recess.

The Union Pacific funding bill is on the calendar for Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock, but the friends of the tariff bill expect it to be again postponed.

Plumb has given notice of his intention to ask the Senate to take up the Des Moines River land bill passed by the House last week, but it will not be done until the tariff bill is out of the way. There are several bills in conference between the two Houses, including two land grant forfeiture bills, which are privileged matters. But it is not expected they will come up this week except in some now unforeseen contingency.

Under the rules of the House the first business in order tomorrow after the call of the States for introduction and reference of bills, is the consideration of measures pertaining exclusively to the District of Columbia. Tuesday and Wednesday will be devoted to discussing and finally voting upon the direct tax bill. There is not much disposition shown to discuss the measure itself, the color question and the cotton tax amendments being the chief targets for debate. District of Columbia and pension appropriation bills will be taken up Thursday, and the legislative bill; the week will close with further consideration of the bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal company of Nicaragua.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Dec. 9.— Gov. Moorehouse, who is now at Bevire, has ordered out the militia, and Col. Moore will leave at six o'clock in the morning with two companies of the Third Regiment for the scene of the terrible riots.

Sugar Refinery to Shut Down.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 9th. — Andrew Welch, president of the American refining company, said today that owing to the seizure by the customs authorities of the steamer Westmeath's cargo of sugar, the refinery would have to close tomorrow, there being no other stock to work on. The employes will probably lose $30,000 in wages; he knows nothing of ny attempt at fraud on the revenue.

The Democrats to Hold a Caucus.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—There will be a caucus of democratic members of the House of Representatives on Tuesday evening to consider measures relating to territories and the general policy to be pursued during the session.

Admits His Guilt.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9 —Henry Hermann, of the quartet who tried to extort money from gambler Phil Daly in a Fourth avenue flat, pleaded guilty at Jefferson Market police court to-day, and was held without bail.

The White Caps Continue to Destroy Property.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LIMA, OHIO, Dec 9 —White Cap notices were left Wednesday night at Thomaston Casey's saloon notifying him that unless he vacate the building within 24 hours it would be burned. Casey did not heed the warning, and last night the building was burned. The White Caps left notices at several other saloons last night to take warning by Casey's treatment, and to leave town.

The Anarchists made no demonstration.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—The streets about Haymarket were thronged with people during the afternoon in expectation of an anarchist demonstration, but the police kept the crowd moving and they finally dispersed. Entire police force was held in reserve all day.

Illicitet Distillers Sentenced.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., Dec. 9.— The three Payne brothers, arrested by special revenue agent Frank Wooters and posse on Cedar Creek, Wyoming county, before Judge Jackson of the U. S. district court pleaded guilty yesterday to illicit distilling, and were finad $100 each, and given sixty days in jail.

Normal School building burned.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LOCK HAVEN, PA., NOV. 9.—The Central state normal school building was burned this afternoon. A hundred boarding students escaped safely. The building was brick, four stories high and cost $150,000. Insurance small. Over 200 students are in attendance, and many lost books, clothing and valuables.

Telegraphic Sparks.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—Wm. Elkins, a well known carpenter and builder, and Wm. H. Pulk, also a carpenter and builder, both of this city, were struck and instantly killed by the Washington express on the New York division of the Pennsylvania railroad near Bridesbury this evening.

CALUMET, MICH., Dec. 9.—The quantity of smoke and steam coming up from the burning shaft of the Calumet & Hecla mine is much less than at any time since the beginning of the fire. The prospects of speedily extinguishing the flames is excellent. The damage under ground will be very much less than by the last fire, as the mine has not been allowed to fill with water.

WALDOBORO, ME., Dec. 9.—George H. Lincoln, aged 11, of Washington, Knox county, was drowned Friday while skating on the lake at that village. His body was recovered.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Edward Healey, one of the originators of the Morning Express, and within four years one of its proprietors, and one of the oldest printers in the state, died tonight, aged 81.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 9.—Bishop Starkey has selected a commission to enquire into the rumor of gross immorality on the part of Rev. C. B. Perry, late rector of the Home of Prayer in this city.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9. — Alexander K. MacMillan, editor of the Commercial Bulletin for forty years, New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, and formerly editor of the Express, died tonight, aged 63. Death is traceable to exposure to the blizzard of last March.

NONWICH, CONN., Dec. 9.—Professor Forest Shepard died Saturday of pneumonia, aged 88. He was born at Boscawen, N. H., in 1800, and was graduated at Yale in 1827. He was a specialist in mineralogy.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—Mrs. Jay Gould was much better tonight. Thought she may be able to leave her room in a few days.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 9.—There is an epidemic of typhoid fever in this city, and the disease is generally attributed to the impurities in the Pawtucket water. There were over 100 cases last week.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—Warden Osborne of the Tombs has caused an immense amount of indignation among a class of benevolent women by stopping the sending of flowers to prisoners under his charge. In speaking of his action Warden Osborne said: "Frequently, flowers are sent to notable criminals by actresses and other persons who merely wish to get their names into the papers. That sort of hero-worship always has a bad influence upon the criminal classes, and so long as I remain here there will be no flowers sent in to prisoners."

A movement is being made toward the development of the water power at Millchills Falls, between Haverhill and Lawrence, Mass. An engineer says there is power enough there to run all the machinery Haverhill can use in 200 years.

Bloody Riot at Birmingham, Ala.

13 Killed, 30 Seriously Wounded.

POSTMASTER THROCKMORTEN AMONG THE KILLED.

Five Companies of Troops on Hand to Maintain the Peace.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 9.—A mob made an attack on the jail at 11:20 last night As they approached the alley-way leading to the jail the officers inside called on them to halt, which they did not do, and the officers fired with Winchesters and pistols, and the firing was terrific for fifteen minutes on both sides. None of the officers were injured, but over twenty of the mob were killed and wounded. Among the wounded is M. B. Throckmorten, postmaster of Birmingham, who was endeavoring to persuade the mob to disperse. Adolph Shley of the Louisville and Nashville railroad was fatally wounded in the neck. The patrol wagon carried the dead and wounded to the hospital. Firing was commenced by the police, but fully as many shots were fired by the mob as by the officers. Over 500 rounds were fired. The Zouaves and Guards are now in possession of all the streets leading to the jail Inside of the jail the bullets fired by the mob whistled around those confined there. Sheriff Smith gave orders to fire. Desultory fire was kept up for half an hour. Hames was indifferent throughout the riot.

The first volley killed three men instantly, fatally wounded seven, and wounded more or less seriously about thirty others. Charles Bailey, who formerly lived at No. 24 Church street, Boston, was shot through the head and will probably die. M. B. Throckmorten, postmaster, aad a very prominent and popular citizen, was killed. He was about thirty years old, and leaves a widow and one child. An unknown negro was shot through the lungs, and died this morning. J. R. Maccoy was toward the front of the crowd when the firing commenced; he fell dead at the first volley. A. H. Tarrant was shot in the back; after the first volley he lay down on the ground with the hope of avoiding flying bullets, but another ball struck him as he lay on his face, and ranged up his back. After a few minutes suffering he died. H. D. Bryant was shot through the heart at the first volley and died instantly. He was standing rather near the front, and was doing his best to restrain the crowd from going near. C. C. Tate was shot through the hip, thigh and loins, and is dying; he is a printer, and lived at East Lake, is about 45 years old, and has a family. Col. Bert Smith (colored) was shot through the right lung, and died this morning. Lawrence Fitzhugh, civil engineer, was shot through the shoulder; he is about 30 years old. A. J. Shried, mechanic, was shot in the left side just under the shoulder, and it is thought will die; he came recently from Kalamazoo, Mich.; several of his companions were wounded, but less seriously. Chas. Jenkins was shot in the back of the head, the ball coming out in the center of the forehead; he lingered until one o'clock this morning, when he died; he was twenty years old, and lived at Smithfield with his parents, and three brothers. A man named Brandon was wounded in the thigh, and died. Just after he was shot he told his attendants that he boarded at the house of the sheriff of Etowah county, at Gadsden, and was here on business before the United States court. J. W. Montgomery received a slight wound in the left jaw. Mr. Buckley was shot through both legs below the knee while sitting on the rear porch of the residence of W. W. Siddons, on the corner of 4th street and Third avenue. Charles Bailey, brakeman on the Louisville & Nashville railroad, was shot in the right side just below the nipple; his home is at No. 24 Church street, Beston; the wound, while not necessarily fatal, may prove serious. John H Merritt is at the hospital, shot through the calf of the left leg Matt. Kennedy, also at the hospital, was shot in both legs below the knee, the right leg being badly shattered, and the left is a flesh wound; he is also shot in the left arm just below the elbow and the bone is broken He is about thirty years old, and has a wife and seven children. J. W. Owen is at the hospital, shot through the right thigh; he is a carpenter, and about fifty years old. J. W. Gilmore is thought to be fatally wounded through the bowels; he is forty-six years old, and has a wife and five children living at Green's Springs. Frank Childer is dead. Albert Smith (colored) was shot in the back and seriously wounded. Wm. Youngblood, Mr. Alexander and E. D. S. Cooper, reported as killed or wounded, are not hurt. W. A. Bird was shot in the right shoulder, the ball passing entirely through him and coming out near the spine; Bird is thirty years old, and unmarried. Col Thomas G. Jones of the Second Regiment, Alabama state troops, arrived here this morning with five companies, and is confident of his ability to prevent any further attempt at mob violence. There was much excitement for a while last night, but it has subsided somewhat today.

LATEST.—Midnight.—Tonight the city is a military encampment. Civil authorities have practically stepped down and out, and Col Jones of Montgomery with 1370 troops is absolutely in charge of affairs. The jail is guarded by state troops with picket lines extended several squares in every direction, and at each approach frowns the countenance of a gatling gun. Mounted scouts are sent out at regular intervals to acquaint Col. Jones with condition of the public mind and prospects of armed rising by the people. Fire bells sound military alarms, and soldiers in uniforms and armed with Winchester rifles patrol the principal streets and have driven back thousands, who all day have been looking toward the jail. The military was ordered out by Gov Seay from Montgomery, and with the chief executive Col. Jones is in regular telegraphic correspondence. Meanwhile citizens have not kept within doors, but have congregated in hotels or on street corners and in front of bulletin boards. The streets have been a living, maddened mass and very little oratorical pyrotechnics could readily organize a mob whose solemn duty would be to avenge the murder of the popular Postmaster Throckmorten and those who fell by him. Along the walls of the city are posted petitions of various kinds signed by thousands of people. One recites at length the fact that Sheriff Smith butchered in cold blood some of the best citizens of Birmingham by an act as unprovoked as unnecessary, and asks Gov. Seay to immediately relieve him of his duties as sheriff. Another petition side by side read: "This is to hang him," and was signed by thousands of passers by Great excitement was caused by a funeral cortege through the principle highway of one of the victims of last night's affray. A lengthy procession was headed by a brass band playing a solemn dirge. The postoffice building is draped in mourning and makes a mute appeal to every passer by.

The military were called upon to arrest Smith and others implicated, but this was refused and finally at about five o'clock a citizen went before a justice of the peace and swore out warrants for the arrest of Smith and his deputies on a charge of murder. This was served by a coroner, who found Smith in jail, and the coroner himself took charge of the jail, and in his custody that institution is at present. During the day Capt. Peyton Bibb, in charge of the Montgomery Blues, advised that the military take Smith and Hawks out of jail and carry them to Montgomery, away from the scene of the riot and for safe keeping. This was not acceded to by the officers in charge, there being no civil steps to that end.

During the afternoon rumors became widespread that 1500 miners from Pratt mines, about five miles from Birmingham, would tonight march to the city armed with guns and pistols and dynamite cartridges, and with increase to their ranks expected to assault the soldiers and with dynamite blow to atoms the jail. That such will be attempted is expected even by the military, though its success finally is not anticipated. There are already ten military companies under command of Col. Jones, and five others will arrive on special train soon after midnight. The city council this morning ordered all saloons and drug stores to be closed until further notice.

Attention is directed to the contrast in the treatment accorded by the administration of President Cleveland to a small nation with little or no military power, and one with an empire behind her. Canada has not hesitated to seize numbers of our fishing vessels illegally, and we have yet to learn that any American men-of-war have been sent into Canadian waters to demand their release, or that the administration has shown any active interest in trying to secure redress for the damages and wrongs thus inflicted. Canada is a strong power with an empire at her back. Hayti is a small, insignificant power, and when she does no more than Canada has done, and seizes an American vessel illegally, the administration instantly becomes brave and war-like, and orders three or four American men-of-war to go to Hayti instantly to demand the release of the vessel, and reparation for the insult offered. This shows the size of the present administration.

Typhoid fever is getting a headway in some of the larger cities, notably Brooklyn and Providence, and the physicians are giving much attention to the subject with a view of tracing its origin. Opinions, of course, differ very much, as to the causes which produce this dreaded disease. Dr. Cyrus Edson of New York, who has made the matter a study for some time, read an interesting paper before the Academy of Medicine last Friday night on "The Poison of Typhoid Fever," in which he recommended the avoidance of well water, the use of none but boiled milk, and the careful washing of the hands always before eating. These suggestions are more applicable of course to the larger than the smaller cities where water is not so contaminated, but they are worthy of remembrance, and should be followed whenever there is a reason to suspect the drinking water is not entirely pure. When will Portsmouth have its new reservoir and water works?

Brown county, the headquarters of the White Caps in Ohio, has always been noted for its illiteracy and lawless elements. During the rebellion it was the nest of a band of "Copperheads" and "Butternuts," who organized to resist the draft and hide deserters from the army. The Knights of the Golden Circle, a treasonable organization to assist the south in its war upon the Union, had a number of lodges in the county. The way to break up the White Caps, since they have set fire to the County court house and threatened to burn down villages if they are interfered with, is to arrest some of the leaders and hang them promptly.

What has become of the new Grand Army organization? The movement to break up the old society in order to form a new one based entirely upon political affiliations was heralded throughout the land only a short time ago, but we hear nothing more of it. Has the scheme been abandoned because of its insignificance, and the refusal of a majority of those members of the old order holding democratic sentiments to withdraw upon the demand of scheming politicans?

The New York Times, one of the most virulent and notoriously dishonest sheets published in the United States, still offers advice to the Republican party, as though its treachery had not along ago ruled it out of any decent party. It supported Cleveland and Free Trade, and the Republican party has no place in its ranks for such journals.

The Tribune voices the sentiments of more than ninety-five per cent of the Republican party when it says if Gen. Harrison will so select the members of his cabinet as to give the country a first-class administration it will not much matter whether individuals or states or party leaders are altogether pleased.

The Allan Line of steamers is the defendant in a suit for heavy damages, brought by four steerage passengers, for alleged miserable quarters rekeing with disease, poor food, and inhuman treatment. This is not the first suit against this company on similar grounds.

She had suffered with the phthisic and had taken tons of physic.
And whole barrelfuls of bitters and whole loads of nauseous pills;
She's been troubled with miasma, and all choked up with asthma,
And been shaken for a month or two with ague and the chills;
She has had the yellow fever, of which nothing could relieve her,
And the rheumatism lamed her so she could not go about;
And she groaned with tonsilitis and the most acute bronchitis,
And she suffered endless tortures from the twinges of the gout;
She has tried old-school physicians, Christian scientists, magicians,
Indian doctors, electricians, and magnetic healers all;
And drank tons of nauseous liquor, but grew ever sick and sicker,
And they got the undertaker to prepare her shroud and pall;
Then great auction sale of traces, advertised in various places,
Caught her feverish eye one morning, and she leaped up sound and well;
She shook off death's stiffening rigor, and with most emphatic vigor
She grabbed her husband's pocket-book and rushed down-town pell-mell.

HOW TO LIVE LONG.

This Desirable End to Be Attained Through Practice of the Golden Mean.

The true secret of good health and immunity from disease, says a writer in the London News, lies in finding out and practicing the golden mean of every creed. The vegetarian, for instance, goes too far; but he is perfectly correct in his assumption that most men eat too frequently and too plentifully of meat, and not nearly enough of vegetables and fruit. The average Englishman believes in good slices from the joint, usually underdone, and often eaten in haste, with the day's work but half done. Vegetables are with him a very secondary consideration, partly because they are often badly cooked and not temptingly served. Were he to eat less meat and more vegetables and fruit he would be less of a martyr to rheumatism in his old age than he is at present. Nor is he sufficiently appreciative of fish as an article of diet. Here, again, unsatisfactory cooking comes in as a factor in deterring the general public from what is good for them. The ordinary English cook is as wasteful in her methods of cooking it as she is careless in her manner of serving it. The man who does the most justice to his own constitution is he who compasses an attractive variety in his diet, ranging through all the flavors of fish, flesh, fowl and the wares of the greengrocer in a way that not only satisfies appetite, but stimulates it. The teetotaler's theory of life is good for those who can not restrain themselves so as to leave off drinking when they have had enough. Water is not what it was when the world was younger, or as it is even now in places where human life is not thickly congregated about it as it is in England. Various forms of pollution destroy the purity of our rivers, and the student of sanitary science sees a thousand horrors in a glass of cold water. But the golden grain of truth in the teetotaler's theory is not far to seek. It lies in the use of wines, spirits, and beer without abusing them. Till now man has invented no better, no more absolutely suitable accompaniment to a good dinner than well-brewed ale or sound claret. These aid the system to assimilate the food it absorbs. Lemonade is lowering, and its sweetness spoils the savor of most dishes. Milk is not always admirable as a dinner drink, especially when fish plays any part of the menu. Tea or coffee taken with meat is simply suicidal. These hot beverages turn the meat into something resembling leather, and the result interferes sadly with digestion. The man who desires long life must not give a place to "high tea" in his daily program. Of tea itself it can only be said that it is harmless if not taken too often or made too strong. The American lady, who, after several calls and a cup of tea at each, remarked that she could "always worry down another cup, was probably unaware of the mischief she was doing herself. No one need totally abstain from tea if they will only take the precaution to buy it good, not to make it strong, nor to let it infuse long, never to take it more than twice a day, and to abjure it after 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

As to the man for whose bath the ice has to be broken on the Serpentine on winter mornings, who can deny that he is intemperate in the matter of cold water? And yet the morning tub is indispensible to all who wish to live a healthy life. It is true that there have been centenarians who have known nothing of this luxury, but their longevity has been in spite of that fact, not because of it. The bath is good, but not too much bath. Walking is good, but it must not be overdone. Dickens overdid it. Most of us, however, underdo it, and scarcely walk enough. Flesh accumulates upon us in middle age because we do not take sufficient exercise, and then we give up long walks because we are stout and consequently lazy, thus reversing the process of cause and effect. The health suffers seriously, and a way is opened to many maladies. People who assert that they have not time to take long walks should remember that they are probably cutting short their own time by refraining from the needful exercise.

Many people take too much medicine. Morbid persons with hypochondriacal tendencies are always dosing themselves. They apparently regard their own interior arrangements as a sort of puzzle that has been badly put together, and their efforts to sort things out with the aid of pills and powders are but a series of experiments. Highly destructive to cheerfulness is this frame of mind, and cheerfulness is one of the best ends to length of days. It is possible to cultivate this quality, and to the interests of those about us, no less than in our own, if ought to be cultivated. It is a sign of a healthy mind, and enables its possessor in a certain degree to shake off worry, which is a terrible shortener of human life. No one ever died of work, but worry has killed its thousands. There are many ways of avoiding it. The chief is to live within one's income and thus escape the wearing cares that come of debt and improvidence, avoiding anxiety for the future of those dependent on us. A little voluntary self-denial saves a mountain of it, enforced and inevitable, just as the proverbial stitch in time saves nine.

The putting on a short time ago of the fast express between Edinburgh and London has revived memories of the old inhabitants as to English railroading forty years ago, and one of these alleges that he can remember when the train for Edinburg was started by a bugle playing "I'd be a Butterfly." The passenger cars were as much like stage coaches as possible; the baggage was carried piled on top, and the guards sat like drivers on top also.

"One of my adventures, eh?" said the book agent to a reporter of the Omaha Herald. "Well, about eight years ago I carried a pack of novelties such as you frequently see exhibited on the street corners and presided over by a sunburnt Italian. With another man and a young fellow of 18 I traveled through Kansas to the Colorado line, selling and trading our wares to the Indians for anything marketable in the cities. About the time of our arrival in the western part of Kansas the memorable Indian outbreak was terrorizing the country. From the south and west came reports of the terrible outrages perpetrated by the Indians and greasers. Houses were burned, the inmates were killed instantly or tortured to death, and all the cattle were driven off and scattered. You may be sure I felt considerable solicitude concerning the safety of my little party and took extra precautions to find secluded spots when camping. Of course, under the conditions, I deemed it advisable to get out of the neighborhood immediately. To do so we found it necessary to pass through the country most likely to be infested with straggling bands of Indians. Despite the risk we determined to make the attempt. After a long, hard day's tramp we encamped for the night in one of those small canyons so prevalent in western Kansas. It was an excellent place, too. Our backs were effectually protected by a natural cave in the side of the bank, the entrance to which was concealed by brush and tall grass. Sam, the boy of the party, was an unusually bright young fellow and very familiar with the tactics of Indian warfare. Just before lying down I noticed him untying a good-sized bundle of sticks resembling short broom-handles. He placed them within easy reach and tumbled down to sleep. I had noticed him fumbling around the bushes a short time before, but didn't pay much attention to his actions. The other fellow and myself concluded not to set a guard, as we were in such an excellent place. I don't know how long we had slept when we were awakened by Sam shaking us slightly and whispering;

"By this time we were both wide awake and ready with our rifles.

"'Listen,' whispered Sam; 'hear the dirty scamps sneaking up. Put down the rifles. I've got something better.'

"He handed us each four of the sticks mentioned, remarking:

"'Them's Roman candles. I've got a pile of whoppers along, and I think we can scare these scamps clean out o' their hides.'

"I caught the idea in a moment and strained my ears to listen for further demonstrations from the attacking party. We could hear them creeping here and there through the bushes, scarcely making a noise, but easily distinguished in the silence of the night.

"'Now,' whispered Sam, 'take two in each hand and I'll light them.'

"Suiting the action to the word he contrived to light them in rapid succession. Then he turned them into the bushes and heavens! what a sight was revealed as the candles flashed. About fifty villainous-looking savages and greasers were stooping and creeping towards us. At the first flash they stopped as if spell-bound. We turned them so the green and white balls would strike them in their faces. The candles were tremendous affairs and eight or ten of them popping away independent of human aid was enough to terrorize any one. Our assailants wavered a moment, then with a terrible yell bounded away toward high ground as if the devil himself was in pursuit. We could hear them scrambling up the hillside, mount their horses and gallop away. Sam afterward explained that he had brought the candles along as a side speculation, and he also explained that he had arranged a system of strings among the bushes so that no one could approach very close without meeting the obstruction and alarming him. It is needless to state that we reached safe ground in due time without further molestation."

A Warning Against Mesmerism.

It has become a great fad in family circles to experiment in the art of mesmerism and to try the various tricks of test mediums, such as staring steadfastly in the eye of a weak-willed person and thus obtain control of their minds. These amateurs find a great deal of fun in this form of amusement, but sensible parents should never countenance such proceedings, for the most disastrous results are likely to ensue where the subject is of a neurotic temperament. Nervous, hysterical girls and soft-boned, growing lads should be kept away from these circles, for there is always a possibility of administering a shock that will leave lasting effects.

I was called to attend a young lady in North St. Louis, who had lain in a trance state for three days and could not be restored by ordinary medical treatment. She had been playing at innocent parlor tricks one Sunday evening until the entire company declared they had enough of it. Then a young man proposed to mesmerize one of the young ladies, and without any idea of his secret power made the usual passes which he had seen practiced in the theaters. After the third movement the girl's eyes assumed a glassy stare, and the operator became alarmed. The subject was to all intents unconscious of her actions, and would not respond to pinching, calls, or even a more violent summons. She was put to bed by her mother, who was a witness to the affair, and ordinary remedies usual in catalepsy applied. A physician was called in, but he could not suggest any relief except electricity. A strong shock was given, but the patient remained insensible, although breathing regularly.

When other measures failed the parents sent after me, and after hearing the facts I decided the body was surcharged with electricity and the girl must be demagnetized. I worked for three hours, and was almost completely exhausted when I began feeling the cold current passing from my fingers through my system. Then I realized the girl was saved, for science had conquered. Imagine what would have happened if the result was failure. The patient was a handsome blonde, of a negative nature, only 17 years of age, and although she had never been south in her life, she spoke of places in Memphis, and while under the mesmeric influence claimed that her name was Henry Seymour. She would answer questions promptly when addressed by that name, and appeared to grow quite angry when informed that she was a woman—a fact that she would not believe.—Magnetic Physician in Globe Democrat.

Weather Indications.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9, midnight.—For New England, fair weather, preceded by light rain or snow on the coast, warmer, winds becoming southwesterly.

SOCIETY NEWS AND PERSONAL NOTES.

—Miss Fanny and Miss Marie Carpenter, the pretty and interesting daughters of Capt. Chas. C. Carpenter of the Boston navy yard, have accepted an invitation to make a week's visit in Portsmouth shortly after the first of the year. Their many friends are delighted with the prospect of seeing them here again, and hope the week may be extended to a month or even longer.

—On Thursday evening, the 6th inst., Mrs. J. P. Bartlett gave one of her delightful little teas to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hatch of New York, who are here on a visit to his mother. Among those who were invited to meet them were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Treadwell, Mrs. Cogswell, Mrs. Richter, Miss Hatch, Miss Goodwin, Mrs. and Miss Gerry, Mrs. Winder and Mr. Parrott.

—Miss Treadwell of No. 100 State street entertained Miss Gerry, Miss Neal, Mrs. Gooding, Mrs. Douglas, Miss Thompson, Miss Ball, Mrs. Decatur, Miss Julia Ball, Miss Slse and Miss Foster at a charming card party on Friday afternoon last, from four to seven o'clock. The party was given for Miss Gerty, of Portland, Me., who is here on a visit to her grand-mother, Mrs. Jenness of Pleasant street.

—A similar party was given for Miss Gerry and Miss Jenness by Mrs. Dr. Emil Richter, earlier in the week; the latter young lady, Mrs. Richter's niece, was visiting her at the time, but has since returned to her home in New York.

—One of Portsmouth's most charming debutants, Miss Vera Jenness, is confined to the house with the measles. Her many friends and admirers hope she will be well and out again before very long.

—Rumor has it that one of the handsome young marine officers at the navy yard, Lieut. Doyen, is down with the measles also. This disease seems to be quite epidemic at present in Portsmouth and vicinity.

—We are sorry to note the detachment of Asst. Paymaster Madison R. Calvert from our navy yard. Mr. Calvert has made many friends during his short stay in Portsmouth, and as asst. general storekeeper he discharged his duties with promptness and universal kindness to all around him. His genial smile and pleasant manners will be greatly missed.

—Dr. and Mrs. Du Bois and Mrs. Trilley of the navy yard, spent two or three days of last week in Boston doing some Christmas shopping. During Dr. Du Bois' absence Dr. Simons took charge of his department at the yard, and was the guest of Chief Engineer Joseph Trilley.

—Mrs. W. L. Mintonye of the navy yard has been confined to the house with a severe attack of neuralgia for the last three weeks. She is thinking of spending the winter in a warmer climate, and may leave before the first of the year for Fortress Monroe, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Peacock.

—Lieut. F. H. Delano left on the 7th inst. to rejoin his ship at Fortress Monroe. His visit here was somewhat marred by the sickness of his two boys, and his charming wife has the sympathy of many friends in their continued indisposition.

—Asst. Engr. Thos. F. Carter and his bride are expected to arrive here this evening. It is to be hoped that Mrs. Carter will take kindly to our severe winter weather, for the change from the balmy climate of her native heath will be very marked.

—E. W. Rollins of Denver, Col., president of the Rollins Investment Co. of Denver, and a son of Hon. E. H. Rollins, was in this city Saturday. He reported that his father is slowly recovering from —The beautiful and commodious country residence of Mr. and [illegible] Winchester has been closed for the winter, and they, together with Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Hackett and family, have taken apartments at the Rockingham.

MUSIC HALL.

Second week. — Geo. Hoey's comedy, "Keep it Dark," was given to the greatest houses ever known in the annals of amusement. The funniest of comedies. —Baltimore American.

Success of "Keep it Dark." The jolliest, brightest and funniest of the new musical comedies. Laughed at and laughed with by thousands. A complete and entire success. — Baltimore Daily News.

At Music hall Wednesday evening, 12th inst. Tickets on sale at Goodrich's this morning.

Tickets for "Dan Darcy," which as presented by Mr. James C. Roach is beyond comparison the most refined and pleasing Irish drama ever presented in this city, will go on sale at Goodrich's tomorrow. At Music hall next Friday evening.

Another snow storm, varied by rain and sleet, Sunday; in consequence the attendance at the churches was generally very light.

The vesper services at the Unitarian church were omitted yesterday, on account of the weather.

At the next stated communication of Naval Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Kittery, Dec. 12th, there will be work in the second and third degrees.

Mr. John Simpson, for twenty years or so past station agent at South Newmarket, has been releived by Mr. John Atherton, formerly night telegraph operator at the Exeter station.

Many of our tradesmen are making handsome shows of Christmas goods, and the windows about town are filled with rich and beautiful wares, from which any one can make a good selection. There is no necessity of going to Boston or anywhere else for this purpose.

The attendance on and interest manifested in the special revival services conducted in the Pearl street church last week by the pastor, Rev. J. S. Harrington, were so great that the meetings will be continued through this week.

Measles are very prevalent among the children of this city, and many persons are also troubled with bronchial affections; diphtheria too is reported as prevailing in the part of the city westerly of Cabot street.

The democrats have finished repairing the bridge connecting the navy yard with Kittery. They have made a good job of it, too, the bridge now being stronger, probably, than ever before; they must have anticipated that a vast throng of republicans would "go on" over that bridge next year.

The Boston & Maine railroad managers are guarding against snow drifts at Scarboro, Me., by the erection of a fence 500 feet long and eight feet high, along the track.

The Cheshire passenger train which has been fitted with the Sewall steam heating apparatus has been in regular service on one of the mail runs from Boston to Essex Junction for the past week. The heaters give satisfaction in every respect. The Grand Trunk and Canada Atlantic railways gave this system a trial last winter in Canada, and the result was quite satisfactory.

The annual meetings of the Portland & Rochester, Rumford Falls and Buckfield, and Knox & Lincoln railroads were held on Wednesday, the 5th inst., the first two at Portland and the last at Bath, Me.

Schooner King Philip, Coombs master, from Baltimore with 1793 tons of coal, arrived at this port on Friday, and was berthed at the Concord railroad wharf by the tugs Clara Batemen and Cocheco.

The schooner Mary Willey, Williams master, from Bangor with lumber to John H. Broughton, and the Loella, Amee master, from Bangor for Dover with lumber to Dover parties, arrived at this port on the 7th inst.

Tug Cocheco towed the schooner Loella to Dover on Friday. She is loaded with cedar shingles, assigned to Converse & Hammond of that city.

The secretary of the treasury last week appointed Mr. L. H. Sawyer to be second assistant keeper at Boon island light station, vice Capt. James Burke, promoted to first assistant.

Just wait a moment! A new era is dawning upon us, or else all the talk that has been made against lending books, for the reason that they are not likely to be returned, is mere bosh. Dr. Nathan Allen has recently returned to the Lowell superintendent of schools a copy of the report of the school committee from 1838 to 1843, which he borrowed thirty-seven years ago. Dr. Allen should receive the thanks of the community for establishing a precedent so worthy of emulation.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

[illegible] health, it must have [illegible] sleep. Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup insures this. Price 25 cents a bottle.

Do you suffer from catarrh? You can be cured if you take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. Sold by all druggists.

One of the notable institutions of Portsmouth, intensely local, interesting beyond comparison to every lover of the old Portsmouth which was the home of his childhood or to which he has become attached by years of adopted sonship, is Brewster's Rambles about Portsmouth. The chapters are all delightfully-told stories, perused with like interest by young and old, containing facts that had been extensely quoted by historians and some in poetic verse by such poets as Longfellow, Aldrich and Laighton. Our neighbor, L. W. Brewster of the Journal, who is the publisher of the book, has it for sale at his office. It is just the thing for a holiday present.

The recent "slump" in railroad securities is another proof to those who continue to invest their funds in Western securities, through good agents, of the wisdom of their choice. Those parties who have based their judgement on receiving a fixed and safe rate of interest, have reason to congratulate themselves. History shows beyond question, that interest is by far more successful than speculation, and is void of the anxiety which characterizes those of speculative ideas. County, school, municipal and Debenture Bonds and Real Estate Mortages are safe as any future thing can well be. For sale by JOHN LAIGHTON, No. 1 Market square.

Condensations.

Two gentlemen, guests of the Preble house, Portland, Me., were arrested one evening last week at a fair in that city on suspicion of being thieves. Being strangers they were identified by the proprietor of the Preble house, and proving themselves respectable business men, were released.

Charles A. Morse, an escaped convict from the Concord state prison, and who recently stole a team from P. W. Bradley of Portland, Me., has been recaptured at Lawrence, Mass. He made a short stay at North Berwick, Me., got into the good graces of the Baptist society, and gave a supper at their vestry on money he realized from the sale of a stolen team.

John Castle of New Bedford, Mass., got drunk, fell down two flights of stairs, and was killed.

While Henry Murphy, a drug clerk of Fall River, Mass., was mixing medicines they exploded, setting fire to the store, and he lost his life.

A Long Term.

Irish guide to American tourist: "And there is no king nor quane nayther in America, they're tellin' me, surr?"

Indifferent tourist: "No; we've a President there."

"And how long have you bin havin' a President, moight I ax, surr?"

I. T. "Oh, something over a hundred years!"

Irishman, stopping, paralyzed with astonishment: "Howly saints! And do they live that long beyant there?" Harper's Magazine.

The first shipment of chemically pure aluminum from this country was made the other day when 150 pounds were sent from Newport, Ky., to London. It sold, at 50 cents a pound, it is reported, and was the result of a new and secret process applied to Kentucky ore and clay.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

What Is Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It is [illegible] mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that, I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMPLE, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

ASSOCIATED PRESS DESPATCHES.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—Mr. Edmunds reported, from the judiciary committee, upon the resolution asking whether the government can attack a patent for fraud. The committee reports that, under the decision of the United States supreme court in the Bell case, the government undoubtedly has the right.

A number of resolutions were introduced, and these with communications from several of the executive departments were referred to appropriate committees.

The tariff bill was taken up and various amendments offered and discussed.

In discussing the iron and steel sections of the bill, Mr. Sherman said the time was not far distant when all structural forms of steel and iron would be mutiplied to an amazing extent and would be produced cheaper and cheaper by offer of inducements to manufacturers to enter into business. That was one object of the proposed rate. He thought it better to sustain the finance committee in its classification than to change rates blindly and at haphazard. In regard to trusts he looked upon them as one of the most dangerous and subtle inventions of man; and he was in favor of breaking them up. They were contrary to the spirit of the common law of England, but the only way, he thought, to break them down was by inviting competition. If that was not sufficient he was willing to go to the extent of proposing a law to prevent and punish them. The senator from Tennessee (Harris) made a motion some days since to lay the senate's substitute on the table. That motion had been rejected by the senate, the vote being an expression of opinion that the substitute was a better bill than the House bill. The principle having been thus determined he thought it better to leave the details of the bill to the committee which framed it, unless there was some palpable error to be corrected. He asked his democratic friends to abide by the judgement of the people on the question. That judgement had been in favor of American industry.

At the conclusion of Mr. Sherman's remarks, and without coming to a vote on the pending amendment, the senate adjourned.

HOUSE

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 10.—Mr. Butterworth offered a resoluton providing for the assimilation of Canada, the United States to assume the debt of Canada, and the provinces to become states. Mr. Butterworth says that Canada is certain to become a part of the United States. It is a mere question of time.

Mr. Holman offered a resolution providing for an investigation of charges of bribery and corruption in the recent presidential election. He asked immediate consideration. Mr. Dingley asked him to amend it so as to include charges of political contributions from public officials. Resolution referred to the judiciary committee.

Mr. Leopold Morse introduced a bill repealing the interstate commerce law.

Under a call of the States, these bills were introduced and referred among others: By Lawler of Illinois: Granting a pension of $12 a month to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, 60 years of age.

By Howard of Indiana: To punish crimes against the electoral franchise.

By T. J. Campbell of New York: Reviving the grade of Lieut. General.

By Patton of Pennsylvania: For erection of corn mills in the Indian Territory for the benefit of the Cherokees.

By Dubois of Idaho: For the admission of the State of Idaho.

By McAdoo of New Jersey: Proposing a Constitutional amendment providing for uniformity as to the day for choosing presidential electors, and forbidding voting for any other officer, save representatives in Congress on that day.

House then went into committee of whole on District Columbia appropriation bill.

Sudden Death at St. Johnsbury.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ST. JOHNSBURY, VT., Dec. 10.—Miss Helen Jewett, an estimable young lady aged 24 years, was found dead in her bed this morning. She retired in her usual health. She was the daughter of the late Samuel Jewett, was a graduate of St. Johnsbury academy, and a great favorite among her associates.

Railroad Accident.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HUNTINGDON, PA., Dec. 10.—This morning at Coalmont, on the Dudley branch of the Huntingdon & Broadtop railroad, a passenger car was occuying the main track when an engine and two loaded coal cars came down the heavy grade and crushed into it. A dozen occupants of the car were all more or less seriously injured.

HANOVER, N. H., Dec. 10.—The trustees of Dartmouth have voted that the Young Men's Christian Association building soon to be erected, shall be located on the northeast corner of the Rood estate, recently given to the college by vice-president-elect Morton.

A Connecticut Tragedy.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ROCKVILLE, CONN., Dec. 10.—The case of Martha Johnson for the murder of her husband, George R. Johnson, in Stafford Springs last April, was called in the superior court this afternoon. A jury was impanelled, and the court adjourned until tomorrow.

On the night of the crime Johnson awoke at midnight and discovered the lower part of his body to be paralyzed, the bed being saturated with blood and his wife away. An examination showed that he was shot in the spine, the pistol having been fired under the bed clothes. Suspicion pointed to Mrs. Johnson, who was searched by the sheriff, revealing a revolver in a bag attached to her person, with one chamber empty. Johnson lingered in a condition of pitiable helplessness until July, when he died.

Dover to Have an Electric Railway.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—The House committee on invalid pensions today authorized a favorable report on the senate bill granting a pension of $3500 a year to the widow of General Sheridan.

Two Brutal Murders.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW ALBANY, IND., Dec. 10.—Near here last evening, Jacob Motweiler was shot in the back of the head and instantly killed. A few minutes later his wife Ellen was brained with a hatchet which resulted in her death today at noon. The murderer, William Benson, a farm hand aged 21, was arrested last night and made reluctant confession that he killed them because they objected to his paying attention to a girl named Sally Snyder, who lived with the family.

Funeral of Dr. Miller.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—The funeral of Dr. Maurice N. Miller, late dean and curator of the Charity Hospital on Blackwell's island, took place today at the Church of the Epiphany. The burial will take place at Brattleboro, Vt., on Wednesday.

The late Dr. Pray of Dover.

Special Despatch to Daily Chronicle.

DOVER, N. H., Dec. 10.—Dr. Thomas J. W. Pray, who died of heart disease last night, leaves a widow and two children. He was born in Lebanon, Me., in 1819, and graduated at Bowdoin college in 1844. In 1846 he began his study of medicine with Dr. J. H. Jewitt of South Berwick, and afterwards went to New York and completed his education with Prof. E. B. Peaslee. The degree of M. D. was conferred on him by Harvard college in 1848, and he has been in this city ever since. In 1850 he was chosen president of the New Hampshire medical society, and gave a noted address upon diphtheria, which attracted attention from professional men all over the country. He has been president of the Dover medical association, also of the Strafford district medical society for many years. For twenty years he was connected with the public schools and was state commission of education in 1858 and 1859. In the state legislature in 1858-9 he was chairman of the legislative committee on education. He was a member of the city government four years just after the war, and for three years was president of the council. The funeral will be on Thursday.

AFTER THE RIOT.

Quiet Resuming at Birmingham.

The Mob Satisfied.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 10.—Business is as usual today, except that all saloons are closed by order of Col. Jones, commanding the troops. The only evidence of trouble remaining is the line of troops and cannon guarding every approach to the jail. There is still much feeling that Saturday's terrible volley settled all desire of the mob to break down the jail. Sheriff Smith is still in jail under arrest for murder.

Chief of Police Picard released on $10,000 bonds this morning several men who were shot, but say they were there to restrain the crowd, or as curiosity seekers.

Thirteen persons are reported to have been killed, and eleven wounded are now at the hospital. In addition are a large number of people who received slight but not disabling wounds, and are therefore not reported at the hospital. The dead are being prepared for burial; those who lived out of the city are sent to their friends as fast as possible, and of the wounded at the hospital it is now hoped that all will recover.

Gov. Seay will no doubt investigate the situation personally and make arrangements for the removal of Hawes and Sheriff Smith, or for a relief of soldiers. It is not probable the gov rnor's order to dismiss the troops will be given until Coroner Babbitt, now acting-sheriff, says they are no longer needed.

The funeral of Postmaster Throckmorton occurred this afternoon from the Church of the Advent, the remains being buried with military and lodge honors. A detachment of artillery, of which the deceased was captain, and a detachment of the local military, escorted the remains to the cemetery and fired a salute over the grave. Large number of Birmingham Protective Order of Elks, of which the deceased was a member, attended in a body. The funeral was one of the largest and most impressive ever held in Birmingham.

The body of little May Hawes was yesterday morning buried in the city cemetery. A fund subscribed by citizens served to purchase a grassy plot, and she was buried in a handsome white casket. All day yesterday Supt. Morton of the Highland dummy line, with assistants, was engaged in dragging the lake where Mrs. Hawes' body was found, for the body of her baby, but it has not yet been found.

Mayor Thompson issued a proclamation urging all classes to co-operate in preserving order. Sheriff Smith persists in his statement that a dozen shots were fired from the mob at the jail before he gave the order to shoot. After the coroner's jury has viewed the body of Mrs. Hawes, the remains will be buried in the cemetery by the side of her little daughter May.

[The riot was caused by an attempt to lynch R. R. Hawes, a locomotive engineer, for the brutal murder of his little daughter and wife, that he might marry another woman, to whom he was married at Columbus, Miss., on the 5th inst. Another child is missing, and no doubt murdered by the fiend.]

Chicago Dynamiters at Work Again.

But on a Distillery, This Time.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec 10.—Shortly after six o'clock this morning an attempt was made to blow up Shufeldt & Co.'s distillery with dynamite, but whether the dynamiters were anarchists or merely personal enemies of the Shufeldts is not yet known. The neighborhood was shaken by a tremendous explosion, shaking the buildings, breaking many panes of glass in the surrounding houses and causing people to rush into the streets in great alarm. Investigation showed that a bomb had been thrown, probably from the street, in a detached warehouse used for storing high wines in. This building was shattered so that the hoops were burst off many of the casks and the heads driven in. Soon afterward a package wrapped in paper was discovered lying in the street. It contained several sticks of dynamite and six full charged caps. A fuse connected with the package showed evidence of having been lighted, but had gone out prematurely. These articles are now in the possession of the police who are at work on the case. J. D. Lynch, manager for Shufeldt & Co., offers a reward of $25,000 for the conviction of the person who threw the dynamite into the distillery building, or of the man who employed him, or for such information as will lead to the detection and arrest of the parties responsible for the crime.

Quite a Bill.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 10.—In the debate on the Irish estimates in the Commons, John Ellis, member from Nottinghamshire, moved to reduce the vote for the Irish police by £10,000. He protested against Irish constables procuring evidence for the Times, and forcing witnesses by threats to appear.

Dillon stated that in 1845, when the population was over eight millions, the cost of the Irish police was only 430,000 pounds yearly; now, when the country was much less disturbed and the population only four and three-fourths millions, the police estimates amounted to 1,450,000 pounds.

Balfour denied that the police intimidated persons to give evidence for the Times. He aimed to restore the relations between the people and police to the condition of friendly respect which had existed before it was perverted by the Parnellites under the pretence of working for the interests of the country.

The motion of Ellis was rejected.

Considerable interest is felt in the assembling of the Delaware legislature, which for the first time in the history of the republican party will be republican on joint ballot. The legislature will meet on Jan. 1st, the first Tuesday of the month, and on the second Tuesday after the organization of the general assembly is the election of a United States senator. The most prominent name yet mentioned on the republican side is Charles H. Treat, who was the republican candidate for Congress at the last election. Mr. Treat is a native of Maine and has only lived in Delaware a few years, but he is a fine speaker and very popular throughout the state.

The sudden determination of Postmaster Gen. Dickinson to put the railway mail clerks in the classified service so as to retain the present force, justifies the suspicion that his action has not been taken because of any desire to advance the interests of the civil service but for selfish partisan purposes. If there is any branch of the federal service that needs prompt application of the pruning knife it is the mail service as it now exists, and we entertain no doubt but the knife will be applied, and vigorously too, by the incoming administration, in the interests of promptness and accuracy.

The Tribune says that Atlanta, Georgia, is in a state of social upheaval over the discovery that one of the delegates to the Forestry Congress there last week was a negro, and that he was treated, both in and out of the Congress, on the same footing as a white man. Even at the hotel where he stayed he was not discriminated against. What would have happened had the discovery that he was of African descent been made before the Congress adjourned it is hard to conceive. Now nothing seemingly can be done except to take vengance on the hotel-keeper.

The Columbia Register, the oldest and staunchest democratic newspaper in South Carolina, has caused a sensation by a leading editorial denouncing the present election laws in South Carolina and the bill in the legislature providing for educational qualification, which will, for a time at least, disfranchise a majority of the colored voters. The Register pleads for fair dealing with the negro and a change in the election laws.

President Cleveland's failure to say anything in his annual message in support of civil service reform has drawn upon him the fire of many of his late supporters, who imagined that he would never let an opportunity pass without advocating this cause. It is now said that he feels the criticisms so keenly that he has determined to send to Congress a special message reaffirming all that he hitherto said on this subject.

The proposition has been brought forward to divide the great state of New York into two states, constituting one out of the seaboard counties and the other out of the interior counties. The project has not been favorably received thus far, but it will continue to be agitated.

On the congressional vote in New York state the republicans carried 19 of the 34 districts, and polled 20,183 more votes than the democrats.

Commissioner Edgerton's Opinion of Civil Service Reform.

"I confidently expect that in a few months after the inauguration the mass of appointees under the civil service rules will look as if struck by a very cold and windy blizzard. As president of the civil service commission I can hold out no hope whatever to them. Civil service reform is something that should grow slowly, as the needs of the government require it. As it is, it is like a potato vine growing in a dark cellar—it comes up white and slender, and after a few days droops down and dies. So it will be in this case. A perpetuity of tenure of office can never obtain in this country, as it is, in the first place, directly opposed to the constitutional principles of the government. Then, logically considered, it is equally fallacious. Why should a man when placed in an office expect to stay there till his hair is whitened with age, and keep out younger and better men? What argument can be made to keep in office certain men, while others just as good, and perhaps better, are kept out? The man on the outside is capable of just as good work as the man who is inside, and why should not he be there? Look at the matter as you may, it only becomes the more and more evident that federal offices will always continue to be given as rewards for party workers."

PRESIDENT HARRISON'S INAUGURAL.

The Manuscript So Bad That the Writer Couldn't Read It.

"I see some one out in Wisconsin or Michigan, I don't remember which, claims to have the original manuscript from which President William Henry Harrison read his inaugural address."

Such was the remark of Malcolm Seaton a few days ago, whose father was a member of the firm of Gales & Seaton, editors and publishers of the famous old Whig organ, the National Intelligencer. The elder Seaton was the intimate friend and confidential adviser of Gen. Harrison, and Malcolm Seaton was a boy when the inauguration occurred.

"I remember it well," he said, "and my impression is that the claimant of the original manuscript from which President Harrison read his inaugural address is mistaken. The address was read from proof slips printed in the office of the Intelligencer.

According to the story told by Mr. Seaton Gen. Harrison came to Washington, and the day before the inauguration he went to the elder Seaton's house. His inaugural address was written, but its preparation had been hurried. Gen. Harrison's handwriting was never good, and in this instance it was particularly bad. At the supper table that evening the coming inaugural was discussed.

"I am all ready for it," said the General, "but I am greatly worried over my address."

"Why, isn't it ready?" inquired Mr. Seaton.

"Yes, but I fear I can't read it. It is so badly written that I can never make it out."

So after supper Gen. Harrison and Mr. Seaton sat down together and studied the address. The chirography was about the worst that Mr. Seaton had ever gazed upon, and when bedtime came the translation had not materially progressed. General Harrison couldn't read it with any greater ease than Mr. Seaton, and Mr. Seaton could not read it at all. It seemed a hopeless task, and it was late when they retired, both of them despairing.

Mrs. Seaton, a shrewd and accomplished woman, had overheard the difficulty, and after her husband had retired she called to little Malcolm.

"Malcolm," she said, "go into Gen. Harrison's room when he is asleep and get the manuscript which he and your father have been studying."

Little Malcolm, too, had been listening to his father and the General, and, appreciating the situation, he fell in at once with his mother's plans.

As soon, therefore, as he was sure that Gen. Harrison was asleep he crept softly into the room, and by the dim light of the fire found the roll of manuscript lying on the table. He carried it to his mother, and she then sent him after two of the oldest printers on the force of the Intelligencer. They came in response to her summons, and the situation was explained to them. The manuscript was placed in their hands, and glancing it over they declared their ability to read it.

"Can you put it in type before morning?" asked Mrs. Seaton.

"We'll try," was their answer.

Just at daybreak the last "take" was finished and placed on the galley, and the last proof taken. It took them but a little while longer to carefully revise and correct the proofs and to take new slips in which there appeared not an error.

Before Gen. Harrison arose for breakfast the proof-sheets of his inaugural address were lying on his table, where he had left the manuscript. His astonishment was great at the discovery, but it was not until he came down to breakfast that the mystery was explained.

"A woman's wit and a woman's will have succeeded where a great General and a distinguished editor failed," was the comment of Mrs. Seaton.

Gen. Harrison read his inaugural address that day from the proof-sheets which had been thus prepared in the office of the National Intelligencer.

Mrs. Cleveland's Engagement Ring.

Mrs. Cleveland's engagement ring, is not, as is generally supposed, the beautiful diamond which she wears just above her wedding ring, but is a large, old-fashioned seal ring, which now adorns the President's finger. There is quite a little history attached to this ring and the way it came to be bestowed upon Mrs. Cleveland.

A few days before the departure of Mrs. Folsom and her daughter for Europe, it will be remembered the President went on to New York for the purpose of seeing and bidding them goodby. It was upon this occasion that the President first definitely asked Mrs. Cleveland to become his wife and fixed the date of their marriage immediately upon her return to this country. Taking from his finger the seal ring which he had worn for years, and which originally had been a gift from Mr. Folsom, the President placed it on her finger, intending, almost immediately thereafter, to forward her the handsomest diamond that could be found. This plan Mrs. Cleveland ultimately changed, as she decided it would be less likely to attract attention if, during her stay abroad, she wore the old seal ring which had belonged to her dead father.

On the day of her marriage, as is well known, Mrs. Cleveland received a magnificent ring and necklace of solitaires from the President, diamond pins, for the hair and breast from Secretary Whitney and Mrs. Whitney, in addition to numerous other small gifts of a similar nature from others. But curiously enough, the first diamond ring which Mrs. Cleveland ever possessed was a tiny little star of diamonds, which she wore upon the little finger of the right hand on the occasion of her marriage. This ring was the gift of a friend in New York, who had known Mrs. Cleveland from early childhood, and who hearing her mention the fact that she had never owned a diamond, sent the little glittering star from Tiffany's the day before her departure from Washington when she came on to to be married. This friend was among the number of those who came on in the same train, and was present at the ceremony.—Baltimore American.

The Buenos Ayres Herald says the reeds and rushes of the Parana are destined to become of great value for paper pulp and as a fiber for textile fabrics. By a recent invention wool and silk are made from reeds, and the Herald remarks: "We have examined heavy goods for overcoats, blankets and gentlemen's wear, felting and black silk dress goods, all made out of the fiber of these rushes, which for texture, for finish, for strength and for holding colors we can not distinguish from similar goods made from wool and silk."

Economy in College Work.

Some years ago a one-study college was established west of the Mississippi. Its cardinal principle consisted in taking one subject at a time, and in finishing it before taking up another. We are tempted, living in the shade of an old university, to laugh at this experiment in education, and to point to the experience of many hundred years in universities older than ours as a reason for not following in the track of the one-study college. There is a germ of truth, however, in this educational experiment; for the actual results of the system now prevalent in our high schools and colleges do not inspire confidence in it.

It is rare to find a college student who can read a German work on physical science, although he may have taken several German electives during his college course. If the same student had been three months in a German town, he would have been able to make himself understood, to understand others, and to read a German newspaper. It is true that in the latter case he is in a German country, and conditions are favorable for his getting a command of the language; but he will tell you that his success comes from breathing and eating in a German atmosphere. Every moment of the day he is reminded of a German verb. He has become an intense specialist in German; moreover, he cannot depend upon the atmosphere alone to his environment, but he must supplement it by assiduous study with a competent teacher. Now if the same man had taken up his residence in a frontier town where German is spoken on one side of a river and French on the other, and undertaken to gain a working knowledge of both languages at the same time in three or six months or even in a year, we all know how lamentable his failure would have been. It may be said that a university does not propose to give a man a working knowledge of any subject; it merely opens the book of knowledge and shows what there is in it, and how delightful it would be to gain at some future time a sound knowledge of the various subjects there presented.—Atlantic.

A Sacred Number.

Undoubtedly seven is the sacred number. There are seven days of creation; after seven days respite the flood came; the years of famine and plenty were in cycles of seven; every seventh day was a Sabbath; every seventh year the Sabbath of rest; after every seven times seven years came the jubilee; the feasts of unleavened bread and of tabernacles were observed seven days. The golden candlesticks had seven branches; seven priests with seven trumpets surrounded Jericho seven times and seven times on the seventh day; Jacob obtained his wives by servitudes of seven years; Samson kept his nupitals seven days, and on the seventh day he put a riddle to his wife, and he was bound with seven green withes and seven locks of his hair were shaved off; Nebuchadnezzar was seven years a beast; Shadrach and his two companions in misfortune were cast into a furnace heated seven times more than it was wont.

In the New Testament nearly everything occurred by sevens, and at the end of the sacred volume we read of seven churches, seven candlesticks, seven spirits, seven scales, seven plagues, seven angels, and a seven-headed monster. Such are merely a few instances of the sacred use of the number common to all nations and all religions.—Christian Observer.

Equitable Enough.

The Drawer hears of a case that was recently tried before a justice of the peace in one of the mining districts of Arizona, that for the impartiality of its settlement is unique in the annals of the law. The plaintiff was a wealthy druggist, who sued the Knights of Labor for the cash equivalent of certain medicines furnished an injured Knight on the written order of the association, which order the association refused to honor.

Witnesses were examined on both sides at great length, and the counsel for both parties to the difference indulged in the highest flights of oratory, to which his honor listened with becoming dignity, ruling always with the greatest deference for the proprieties, and taking apparently great interest in the point at issue.

The trial lasted for two days, both sides summed up, and, in accordance with usual custom, each of the counsel requested that the judge would award the verdict to his client.

When counsel sat down a look of ineffable disgust crossed his honor's face, and rising from his chair, he fixed his eye upon the legal luminaries before him, and remarked: "You fellers must think I'm the blamedest fool that ever lived. Give a verdict to your client? What kind of a freak do you take me for?"

"I'm sure, your honor," cried the plaintiff's counsel, "that neither I nor my client holds you in any other than the highest esteem. Your rulings have shown that your honor is possessed of an erudition which—"

"That'll do, that'll do, my friend. I don't want no back talk. But I'll give both you fellers this p'inter: If I give a verdict agin Mr. Blank" (the druggist): "Mr. Blank, bein' the richest man in this town, 'll be down on me, an' I can't afford losin' none of his influence; and if I give a verdict agin the Knights, the town 'll git so darned hot I couldn't stay in it. I ain't no fool nor no freak, so I don't deliver no decision on no side. The court's adjourned."

Two Requests.

Confession of inability could not go further than in the prayer of a good brother more used to dry-goods than leading camp-meeting—"O Lord, we are as weak—as weak as No. 60 basting thread!"

Nor does the Drawer believe there was any insincerity in the request of the colored boy who, when his turn came to lead the prayer-meeting, observed, "O Lord, I pray thee make Thy servant conspicuous.—Harper's Magazine.

The remains of another extensive ancient city have been discovered in New Mexico. It is about a mile north of San Mateo. The action of the windshade covered the larger portion of the ruins with sand and other detritus, and converted the whole into an extensive mound, and it was only a severe rainstorm and cloudburst sweeping away one angle of this mound and disclosing some heavy stone walls that made the discovery possible. Human skeletons have been exhumed, and what appears to have been a citadel.

Luck in Horseshoes.

The old superstition of nailing a horseshoe over the door of a house as a protection against evil spirits, and an assurance of good luck, is as widely spread in the United States as it is in England or Ireland. It also prevails among nearly all Teutonic and Scandinavian races, and flourishes largely in the East and West Indias and Hindoostan. A writer tells the New York Mail and Express that there are elements united in the horseshoe—in the first place, it is crescent-shaped; secondly, it is a portion of a horse, and lastly it is made of iron. Popular superstition has long endowed iron with protecting qualities. During the time of the plague in Rome the inhabitants of the Eternal City drove nails in the walls of their houses as a safeguard against the dread disease. When the Arabs in the desert are overtaken by the deadly simoon they seek succor from heaven by crying "Iron! iron!" Celtic, Finnish and Welsh superstitions all agree that against witchcraft iron is considered the only guard. Custom even recites that it has always been considered a good omen to find old iron, and particularly to find an old horseshoe. In the mythology of England horses were and are to this day looked upon as luck-bringers. In some parts of England nowadays it is still thought that many forms of disease can be cured in burning a horse alive. A horse's hoof placed under an invalid's bed is considered a specific for many complaints in the North of Scotland. Many years ago, in Ireland, so it is said, upon the death of a horse, its feet and legs were hung up in the house, and even the hoofs are kept sacred. All of which it is claimed, serve as a preventive of ill luck or disease.

Even in New York, among a certain class, the horseshoe may be seen nailed up over many a house or shop door. The well-known song which was sung by Edward Harrigan a few years ago made a lasting impression, and served to remind many of the luck attending old iron shoes. One of the stanzas was:

There's a story that is told in Irish history,
Far beyond the days of King Boru,
That luck will surely always wait upon you

On account of its form, historians state that the qualities formerly accorded to the crescent have been transferred to the horseshoe. The Chinese build their tombs at the present day in a semi-circular form like a horseshoe, and the Moors use it in their architecture. Lord Nelson nailed a horseshoe to the mast of his flagship Victory, and guarded it as if it had been a citadel.

The Mangosteen.

Travelers in Java have filled pages and columns with rhapsodies over the mangosteen; and all unite in extolling it as the supreme delight of the tropics. The mangosteen appears to one as a hard round fruit the size of a peach. Its hard outer shell or rind is of the same color and thickness as a green walnut, but in this brown husk lie six or eight segments of creamy white pulp. The little segments are easily separated, and transferred to the mouth melt away, the pulp being as soft and fine as custard. The mangosteen's delicious pulp tastes, as all its eulogists say, like strawberries, peaches, bananas, and oranges all at once; a slight tartness is veiled in these delicious flavors, and it is never cloyingly sweet. Taken just as it comes from the ice-box the mangosteen is an epicure's dream realized, and the more's the pity that it only grows in faraway places and deadly climates, and does not bear transportation.

Large sums have been offered and P. and O. steamships have made hundreds of ineffectual efforts to get a basket of mangosteens to England to the queen. The hard rind looks unchanged for weeks, but the delicate pulp melts away and the dryest and coldest refrigerator chambers can not keep the heart of the mangosteen from spoiling.

Advice to Husbands.

Perhaps, says the Philadelphia Press, some wives would like to cut out the following and paste it in their husband's hats.

1. Always come home good-tempered, leaving business cares behind, and do not vent annoyances met with at the office on your wife and family.

2. Make yourself agreeable to your wife and friends, and do not sit glum all the evening, looking utterly bored.

3. Be lenient to your wife's faults, and do not expect perfection until you have first become perfect yourself.

4. Be punctual at meals. Remember that a cook can not keep dinner waiting without its being spoiled. Do not expect each servant to have two pairs of hands.

5. Do not expect your wife to keep accounts, unless you take the trouble to keep your own correctly.

6. Dress as well and as neatly as your means will allow, and be careful not to get your best trousers wet, as baggy knees are a thing no woman can respect.

7. Be kind and attentive to your wife as you were before your marriage, and remember she has got no pipe to go to for comfort.

8. When your liver is out of order remember food can not be palatable; therefore do not grumble and turn over on your plate what your wife has provided for you as if it were not fit for a dog to eat.

9. If you have a wife who does keep her house in order, is not constantly at war with her servants, is not extravagant, has meals regularly and well served, and does her best to please, let her see you appreciate her, otherwise she will cease to try and make your home comfortable, and in due course your troubles at home will be infinitely worse than any you may have at office.

Irving Finds a Way Out.

Little Irving was visiting a friend of his mother one day, and was much interested in the pictures which hung on the walls. He looked with particular earnestness at a delicate engraving of Aurora (the goddess of morning) and another of Spring. The hostess took him on her lap and said, "Will you stay with me Irving, and be my little boy?" Irving's kind heart would not permit a point-blank refusal, so he answered very gently, "I don't fink I could." "Why not?" asked the lady. Irving made a desperate effort to find a reason, and at last a happy thought struck him. "I couldn't live wif you because your pictures haven't clothes enough to wear!" was the answer.—Boston Beacon.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Hash and Dyspepsia.

"Hash is becoming the popular midday luncheon dish of business men," said a well-known restaurant keeper. "One of the reasons for its popularity is the fact that very little time is wasted in chewing it. It seems next to impossible for the average business man to eat slowly. He will waste valuable time talking with acquaintances. He will loiter in his office or the office of a friend and think nothing of it; but when luncheon hour arrives he makes a rush for the nearest restaurant and bolts his food with alarming rapidity. A young lawyer will languidly lounge in his office, but when the meal hour arrives a transformation takes place. He rushes to the nearest lunch counter, straddles a stool, and sights with the waiters if not waited on instantly. Hash is what he invariably orders, and it disappears with lightning rapidity. He then returns to the office and yawns and gapes the rest of the afternoon. No wonder dyspepsia holds high carnival in this city. If business men paid more time and attention to their midday meal, they would avoid many a doctor's bill."—New York Sun.

YOUNG MEN'S REPUBLICAN CLUB.

A meeting called to consider the matter of forming a Young Men's Republican Club in Portsmouth was held on Monday evening in Frye's hall on Congress street, and was attended by a large number of young men interested in the movement. After a full and free discussion of the idea it was unanimously voted to establish such a club, to be maintained on a social semi-political basis, and organization resulted in the following officers:

President, William H. Moore;

Vice Presidents—Ward One, Charles Hatch, Clement M. Waterhouse, Everett L. Marston; Ward Two, Wallace Hackett, Dr. E. M. Jewett, George F. Randall; Ward Three, Frank P. Rand, Willis G. Mason, George W. Hersey; Ward Four, Gilman B. Randall, George H. Brown, John W. Robinson;

Secretary, Horace P. Kent;

Cor. Sec., Harry B. Drew;

Treasurer, Arthur W. Walker.

The following resolution was adopted, with the expressed desire that it be published:

Resolved, That we have the kindliest feeling toward the Republican Club of Portsmouth, of which many of ourselves are now, or are about to become members, and that we propose to act cordially and energetically with it in all endeavors to place the republicbn party in the ascendency in this city and county.

MUSIC HALL.

There was a large attendance at the performance of the Bennett-Moulton Comic Opera Co. at Music hall, Saturday afternoon, and a very good attendance in the evening. At the matinee the winners of the prizes offered to children under fifteen years of age, namely, a $5 gold piece for the largest list of words made from the letters forming the words "Merry War," a $2.50 gold piece for the second largest and a $1 gold piece for the third largest, were announced; the first was Miss Goodwin of Fleet street, the second was Master Charlie Roberts of Sheafe street, and the third was Miss Tripp of Daniel street.

Prof. Edward L. Morse lectures at Music hall this evening in the Star course, on "Man and the Lower Animals." The lecture will be illustrated.

Thursday evening, in Music hall, the bright and amusing musical comedy "Keep it Dark" will be presented by W. T. Bryant, the comedian, assisted by a company strong both musically and dramatically. Tickets at Goodrich's; see adv't.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Patrick Cassidy, formerly of this city, was buried from St. Thomas' church at Jamaica Plain, Mass., on Sunday last, and laid to rest in Mt. Benedict cemetery. The deceased was well known in Portsmouth, having worked for the firms of E. F. Sise & Co., Neil, Tarlton & Co., and others, in years past. His age was seventy-eight years. He leaves a wife and five children, three daughters and two sons, all of whom are well known in this city. The four Lane brothers of Melrose, Mass., formerly of this city, acted as pall-bearers. Friends from Portsmouth, Greenland, South Newmarket, South Boston, and Boston, former residents of this city, were present at the obsequies. The funeral cortege included thirty-five hacks.

The Portsmouth Shoe company has donated a check for fifty dollars to be sent to the National Confederate Soldiers' Home in Texas, through the treasurer of the Boston Citizens' committee.

First Lieut. Christopher W. Harrold, 3d U. S. Art., left Fort McHenry, Md., on the 5th inst., to visit his family and plantation at Victoria, Fla., where he will pass the full term of his leave of two months.

There was another discharge of men employed at the navy yard yesterday on account of the lack of funds.

Mr. Clarence H. Wiggin has sold the Portsmouth steam laundry to Concord parties, and will go to Atlanta, Ga., to take charge of a large laundry there.

For several months householders living on a portion of Hanover street have been troubled with lack of water, the supply being intermittent, and in some houses occasionally ceasing altogether for many minutes at a time. This is supposed to be due to a bad leak somewhere on the line, but the usual surface indication of a leak has not appeared, from which it is thought the break is near a sewer, into which the escaping water finds its way without coming to the top of the ground. For three or four weeks past the aqueduct workmen have been digging in that street to locate the trouble, but so far without success.

The Eben Seavey place at Sagamore creek has been taken by Mr. Godfrey of Lynn, Mass., an employe of the Portsmouth Shoe Co., who has moved his family into the house and will occupy it as a residence. We do not envy Mr. Godfrey the job he will have, some of the stormy days during the winter, in making the passage between his house and the shoe factory.

Mr. Wm. A. Hodgdon, contractor and builder of this city, last week closed a contract with the Messrs. Carey of Little Harbor to build a stable on their land at the harbor, which will cost about $9000. Work will be commenced on it at once, so that it will be ready for use in the early spring.

Preston's "1838" Cologne Water for the Holidays.

One of the notable institutions of Portsmouth, intensely local, interesting beyond comparison to every lover of the old Portsmouth which was the home of his childhood or to which he has become attached by years of adopted sonship, is Brewster's Rambles about Portsmouth. The chapters are all delightfully-told stories, perused with like interest by young and old, containing facts that had been extensely quoted by historians and some in poetic verse by such poets as Longfellow, Aldrich and Laighton. Our neighbor, L. W. Brewster of the Journal, who is the publisher of the book, has it for sale at his office. It is just the thing for a holiday present.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

An egg merchant, who goes from house to house buying eggs, told us a few days since, that he expected to have to pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs before Christmas.

This is remarkable, when we reflect that the poultry industry of this country last year amounted to nearly seven hundred million dollars; and even then, we had to import several millions dollars worth of foreign eggs. Our own egg-raisers ought to have this money. The demand for fresh eggs for food alone far exceeds the supply. At fifty cents per dozen eggs are as cheap as beefsteak for food. Many persons who keep hens will probably not have an egg to sell when they reach fifty cents. Some one may ask, "what can a body do, when the pesky old hens stop laying, and the pullets refuse to begin until spring?" Why do as Wm. H. Yeomans, of Columbia, Conn., editor of the Germantown Telegraph did last winter. He says: "Last fall I made an experiment worth giving our readers. Until about Dec. 1st, I was getting from twenty common hens, only one or two eggs a day. I decided to try Sheridan's Condition Powder. I confess I had but little faith in its value to make hens lay. Commenced feeding, and for nine days saw very little effect. Then the hens began laying and in three months laid 858 eggs. Part of the time the thermometer was 12 degrees below zero, and my hens were laying a dozen eggs a day, while my neighbors (who did not use the powder) were getting none. I now, without hesitation, believe it is a valuable aid to farmers for egg-production." Well might he believe, for nearly 72 dozen eggs, in three months, from twenty common hens, with eggs worth 50 cents, is worth having. I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., (the only makers of Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay,) will send, postpaid to any person, two 25 cent packs of powder, and a new Poultry Raising Guide, for 60 cents. The book alone costs 25 cents. For $1.00 five packs of powder and a book; for $1.20 a large 2 1-4 pound can and book; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send stamps or cash. Interesting testimonals sent free. adv

At the burning of Ferguson's planing mill and sash and blind factory at Mousam, Kennebunk, on Thursday night of last week, Mr. G. Edward Goodwin, an employe, aged about sixty-five years, and married, lost his life in an endeavor to save his tools. The mill was put up in 1785 by William Jefferds, was owned by the Mousam Mfg. Co., and had been occupied for thirty-six years by the Messrs. Ferguson, whose loss is about $10,000, with no insurance. A saw mill on the other side of the river, built about fifty years ago, and of late years used as a storehouse by the Mousam Co., took fire from the intense heat, and was also destroyed.

Mr. Nathaniel Tufts of Boston, who married a niece of Mr. Thomas F. Staples of Eliot, has recently presented to the Advent society of the latter place two very handsome street lights, which have been placed at the main entrance of the church.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

ASSOCIATED PRESS DESPATCHES.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—Mr. Cockrell offered a resolution, which was agreed to, calling on the secretary of war for an account of the expenditures made by the late General Hancock in entertaining the French officers on the occasion of the Yorktown celebration, with a statement as to whether any of such expenditures had been refunded to General Hancock or his estate.

Mr. Frye's resolution of yesterday instructing the committee on foreign relations to inquire into the state of affairs at the Samoan islands was reported back from the committee on contingent expenses and was agreed to.

The senate then resumed consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. Vest, refeering to Mr. Sherman's speech yesterday, denied the assertion that the late election had settled the question of tariff legislation. He (Mr. Vest) was not disheartened by that result. If the senator from Ohio and his party thought that the election had settled the tariff question, a greater mistake had never been made by mortal man. The question would last as long as the country endured, because it involved a fundamental difference in the construction of the Constitution, aside from the policies of the government.

Mr. Vest contradicted the statement yesterday of Mr. Sherman that on metal, the schedule was reduced 10 per cent. Mr. Aldrich made explanations, declaring that Sherman's statement was correct.

Mr. Sherman said he was absolutely correct in his statement, and Mr. Vest continued to discuss the metal schedule in detail. Gorman said he had never taken an extreme view, either as to reduction, or increase of duties. The country had expected, however, there would have been a moderate decrease of revenues so as to remove inequalities in the present tariff, without interfering with the capital invested or with the labor employed in the manufactures.

The discussion was continued at great length by McPherson, Allison, Vest, Aldrich and Gorman. The Senate at 5.10 adjourned.

HOUSE

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—After the reading of the journal the House went into the committee of the whole, Mr. McCreary of Kentucky in the chair, on the Direct Tax bill.

Mr. Hopkins of Illinois spoke in support of the measure, and in opposition to the proposed amendment refunding the cotton tax. If there was merit in the latter proposition, that merit should be discussed in a separate bill, and the amendment should not now be brought forward to embarrass the consideration of the pending measure. He controverted the position taken by Mr. Barnes of Georgia, that the cotton tax was unconstitutional, and he contended that the tax was uniform, as contemplated by the constitution, being levied the same in Illinois as in Georgia, and having been collected from twenty-six states and territories.

After some further debate the Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, enclosing the final ascertainment of the result of the election for president and vice president in the states of New Jersey, Kansas, Alabama, Louisiana, Missouri, Maryland, North Carolina and Georgia.

The House then resumed discussion of the tax bill. Pending further debate the House at five o'clock adjourned.

North Dakota Wants to Come into the Union.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BISMARCK, DAK., Dec. 11.—The people of this city and surrounding country met in convention this evening to take steps to hasten the admission of North Dakota into the Union. The people are working hand in hand to secure the division of the territory and the admission of the two states into the Union.

"White Caps" in Indiana.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 11.—The Governor has received letters from the State attorneys who are prosecuting the "White Caps" in Southern Indiana. They report that they have succeeded in procuring four indictments for attempted murder. There are eleven defendants. The attorneys think that they are certain to convict at least seven or eight of the indicted men.

COMMENTS ON THE BIRMINGHAM RIOT.

Sheriff Smith's Action Commended.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—The Tribune says editorially: "In Birmingham Sheriff Smith has been arrested on a charge of murder. In the North, at least, he is held in honor as the most heroic figure the South has revealed to us in years. When the mad passion of the mob, whom he met and conquered, and are now howling for his life, has subsided, even they may be able to see that this fearless man has taught them, and through them the people of many parts of the South, a lesson they sorely needed. He has vindicated the authority of law against the power of mobs. Probably a riot was never quelled without the slaughter of some innocent person. Yet riots must be quelled. These are points to be borne in mind by prudent men when mobs are about. We do not mean by this that Sheriff Smith made mistakes. There is no proof of this. But, even if he had done so, they ought not to weigh in the scale against the fact that he did his duty bravely and noble. He deserves honor for this instead of the execration that is being heaped upon him."

THE BIRMINGHAM RIOT.

Gov. Seay Endorses the Action Of Sheriff Smith. The Sheriff Released On Bail.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 11.—Gov. Seay today assured Sheriff Smith that he endorsed his action. The governor said he was glad Jefferson county had a sheriff who could uphold the law at all hazards. Sheriff Smith was released on $25,000 bail. Beginning tonight troops are being sent away, one company at a time, until all are gone.

Long Trial Expected.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN, Dec. 11. — The long expected trial of the case of the state vs. Henry F. Royce, ex-treasurer of the Willimantic Savings Institute, suspended last March, and indicted for alleged defalcation and falsification of accounts, was begun in the superior court for Windham county this afternoon. The court room was thronged, and open skirmishes between counsel indicated a long, closely contested trial, lasting perhaps two weeks.

ADVICES FROM HAYTI.

An Effort to Secure Peace on the Island. What the U. S. Consul General Says.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—Despatches from the United States Consul-General at Port-au-Prince were received at the state department today. They said that the Haytien archbishop, the French minister, and the British consul-general had made a visit to Cape Haytien in the French ship Bisson, to confer with representatives of the revolutionary party in that city as to the best methods of securing peace on the island. The negotiations were ineffectual, however, as it was impossible to bring the two bodies together, the authorities at Cape Haytien refusing to go on board the French vessel and the committee on that vessel declining to go ashore to confer with the authorities, each showing a decided lack of confidence in the other. The consul-general also forwarded letters from masters of American vessels at Port-au-Prince protesting against the action of the authorities there in refusing them clearance papers to other ports on the island said to be under blockade.

United States Consul Gen. Goutier at Cape Haytien in a dispatch to the Secretary of State, dated the 10th ult, says there has been no effective blockade at that port, as no vessel has been stationed off there. A vessel has been cruising between there and Fort Liberty. Six barks and eight schooners have entered Cape Haytien since October 16, when the alleged blockade was established, which is ample proof that no effective blockade ever existed. He has not heard from Port-au-Prince for five weeks.

The Woman's Vote Heard From.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Dec. 11.—Thomas N. Hart, republican and citizens' candidate, was elected mayor over Hugh O'Brien, democrat, the present incumbent, by 1701 plurality, in a total vote of 62,689.

The board of aldermen will stand eight republicans and four democrats, against eight republicans, two democrats and two independent democrats last year. Common council, 38 democrats and 35 republicans, against 38 democrats, 29 republicans and seven independent democrats last year.

The entire republican ticket for school committee is undoubtedly elected by varying majorities, though the count is not yet finished.

Majority for license, 17,566.

It is estimated that of the 20,000 women who registered, 18,000 voted for school committee.

Senator Ingalls Denies Mrs. Whitney's Statement.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—Senator Ingalls today made a long statement concerning the charge of Mrs. Whitney that he had circulated stories of domestic infelicity at the White House. He paid a warm tribute to Mrs. Cleveland, and then said: "When it becomes necessary for a husband to obtain a certificate of good moral character, and then prove by the testimony of experts that he is faithful, considerate and tender toward a young, lovely and affectionate wife, he may be innocent but certainly is unfortunate."

Fiery Facts.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SALEM, MASS., Dec. 11.—Harris Read & Co., grocers, were burned out this morning, losing $10,000; insured for $4000 in the Equitable of Providence, and $10,000 in the Anglo of Nevada. The Boston branch grocery was damaged $400; M. F. Pony, crockery, $250, and the building about $200.

SALEM, Dec. 11.—John M. Raymond was re-elected mayor by 75 plurality, against 749 last year. License — yes 2437, no 1209.

WORCESTER, Dec. 11.—Mayor Winslow, rep., is re-elected by 977 plurality. All the aldermen are republicans. License—yes 5614, no 4699.

LOWELL, Dec. 11.—Mayor Palmer is re-elected by 560 majority. Republicans elect six of eight aldermen, a loss of two. Council stands 15 to 9, same as this year. License majority 2752.

LYNN, Dec. 11.—Asa T. Newhall, citizens' and workingmen's candidate, was elected mayor. The workingmen also elected 7 of the 8 aldermen, and 12 of the 24 councilmen. Large license majority.

The Storm at Plymouth, Mass.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PLYMOUTH, MASS., Dec. 11.—A strong northeast wind is blowing, equal in violence to the storm of November 25th. It is very thick outside, and the barometer at 8 o'clock was 29.91 inches.

The Pope Causes a Sensation.

IRISH CATHOLICS REBUKED.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ROME, Dec. 11.—There is a sensation caused by the Pope refusing to bless the medals and reliquaries sent to Rome by Irish priests, who intended them for distribution in Ireland. The Pope sternly said: "I cannot bless them. The people of Ireland are disobedient. They seem to prefer the gospel of Dillon and O'Brien to the gospel of Jesus Christ."

Another Mining Disaster.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

DENVER, COL., Dec. 11. — While a gang were endeavoring last night to extinguish a fire in the Canfield coal mine near Canton city, an explosion of gas occurred, badly wrecking the works and killing two, fatally injuring two, and severely injuring eight, some of whom will probably die.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S

NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty-six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10½x14½. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco $12.50; tree calf, $12.50; English-seal style, $9.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver lettering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

What Defeated Cleveland.

The New York World says that at least 7000 democrats in the State of New York voted against Cleveland, and it wants to know their reasons. It therefore asks its party friends to send in their views for publication. If it will help the World any in solving the riddle which it seeks to unravel, the CHRONICLE's views are at its service.

Cleveland was defeated because: First—His administration was surrounded by an ex-rebel and southern Bourbon atmosphere. Patriotic men, both Republican and Democratic, who were for the Union during the War, felt that the country was too much under the domination of the South. They wanted the whole country to stand on an equal footing, and regarded sectionalism with disfavor. The ex-rebels were not only strong in the Cabinet and in other positions scarcely less important, but they headed the most important committees in Congress and absolutely controlled legislation. But perhaps the act which startled and alarmed the country most was the elevation of Lamar to the Supreme Court. It was feared, and we think justly, that four years more of Cleveland would foist upon that court of highest resort enough Bourbons to unsettle and undermine the whole fabric embodying the results of the War.

Second—The sneering and childish pension vetoes. The tone which pervaded these papers showed but too plainly that Cleveland had no love for those who, unlike himself, marched to the front when the Union was in danger of disruption through the rebellious attacks of the disloyal South. Not alone Republican ex-soldiers but Democrats as well resented this unpatriotic attitude.

Third—His absolute surrender to the Free Traders of the South. Carlisle, Watterson and Co. shaped his policy, while such able and conscientious Democrats as Randall were read out of the party. A necessary part of the Free Trade scheme was the foolish and wasteful piling up of moneys in the treasury so as to alarm the country with the cry of "surplus." This money was afterward handed out to certain favored banks as a free loan, and plain people could not see why it should not be used by the government for the payment of the interest bearing debt, as had always been the case during Republican administrations.

Fourth—Cleveland had no friends in his own party. This statement does not need any qualification; it is strictly true. To be sure the party leaders desired the success of the party, hoping to have the man of their choice in 1892, but they did not hesitate to characterize Cleveland in terms of bitter denunciation, and freely used expressions which the CHRONICLE, as a family paper, cannot in decency reproduce. One leader in our own state politely spoke of the head of his party as a "barrel of intestines," whatever that may mean, and said that while he personally should vote the ticket, he would not break his back in getting other people to do so. These are some of the reasons why Cleveland was defeated.

The extent to which the sugar-raising industry of this country is protected by the tariff is indicated by the fact that a shipload of sugar from Java, after paying $150,000 in duties, has been seized for not paying about $100,000 more—$250,000 duty on one cargo. The laboring man likes his tea and coffee as sweet as the capitalist does his, and consequently pays as much of whatever increase in the price of sugar is due to the heavy impost. The Mills bill, which proposed to reduce or remove the duties on so many articles of northern manufacture for the benefit of the poor man, could not see its way clear to take the load from the "poor man's sugar;" but then sugar-raising in this country is wholly a southern industry.

With the ships of the North Atlantic squadron hastening to Hayti one after another as fast as the political repairs discovered just before election to be absolutely indispensable are completed, and a fleet of piratical oyster boats fighting a real battle with a Maryland oyster-police sloop, filling her sails full of bullet holes and cutting her rigging to pieces, and compelling her to run away in order to avoid capture, the old naval spirit of the country is likely to experience a revival, and appropriations for naval vessels and guns may be less grudgingly made than during recent years.

mounds of the so-called mound builders are found near the larger streams. A brief account of some recent investigation of such mounds, along Cedar River, near Charles City, may interest your readers. On a ridge, formerly timbered, one fourth mile from the river are some thirty or forty mounds, in about a straight line from north to south, at unequal distances from each other, in size each from ten to fifteen feet in width and fifteen to twenty-five feet in length and two to three feet high in the center. About one half of these mounds have now been excavated by Prof. C. L. Webster, a scientist, and his assistants. About thirty skeletons were found, as many as six in one mound, in others less, and in some nothing. The skeletons were from eighteen inches to three feet below the surface, some lying horizontally and others appeared only as heaps or deposits of bones. The first foot in depth was ordinary soil; below that very hard, as though it had been firmly tramped or trod over and around the bones, thus perhaps preventing as early decay. About most of the bones was the reddened soil, as though caused by burning. If the bones were partially charred at cremation, or a cannibal feast, that may have helped to preserve them,—charred wood being almost indestructible.

The bones were in such a state of preservation as to show the size and shape of the larger ones, but nearly all would easily crumble by handling or exposure to the air. The heads were toward the east, the mounds apparently built over the bones. The teeth showed a few of old people, judging by the worn condition, but most of the skeletons were of young adults, one only of a child with the first, or milk teeth. The foreheads sloped abruptly backward, the under jaw protruding beyond the upper teeth, or striking squarely against them—the contour of face and head showing a low order of beings. Most of the skulls were thicker than of present human beings. The bones obtained indicate a size of five to six feet in hight. The shape of the skulls is unlike the Indians, but like the mound builders of Ohio, Indiana and Wisconsin.

No animal bones were found, as has been the case after funeral feasts; neither any implements of war, or of personal possession, as often found further east. If any were deposited, they have mouldered away. Many pieces of the rude pottery of the period and of a variety of patterns were found in the mounds excavated; also one small urn nearly perfect.

The subject of the mound builders is an interesting one. They evidently far ante date the Indians, whose tradition is that the mounds were here when their ancestors came. A gradual evolutionary process has changed the mound builders into the modern races, or else they were entirely a different race, and probably the latter. The questions then: Who were they? Whence came they? When did they inhabit this planet? How did they live? Were they peaceful or warlike? Had they a language, and when and by whom and what process were they all swept from the face of the earth?—though their bones and some other things remain for our investigation,—never have been and probably never can be answered.—Joel W. Smith.

It Never Gives Up the Ship.

"The Galena is a fever ship," remarked an officer attached to that vessel. "I was somewhat surprised when she was ordered to Hayti, where yellow fever prevails."

I asked "What is a fever ship?"

"A fever ship," explained the officer, "is one that has had the yellow fever on board. The officers and men alike fear them, and with good reason. The germs of the disease never leave these old wooden ships, and as soon as they go within fever districts the contagion is bound to break out afresh on board. We had several cases of fever on the homeward trip, but owing to timely attention they did not develop into the dread yellow fever. You might take the Galena and thoroughly clean her, steam all the woodwork if you chose, and then lay her during an entire winter in a cold climate, and then during the following summer go within range of the yellow fever country, and cases would soon develop on board.

"An illustration of the strange fact is found in the experience with the Jamestown, now the training ship at Baltimore. On one of her trips yellow fever appeared on board, and several deaths followed. Subsequently the vessel was thoroughly renovated and extensively repaired. Her woodwork was steamed. Then she remained in northern harbors for several winters. She was finally ordered South again, and before she reached the fever district a case of yellow fever developed, and the man died. Above his hammock was found a quantity of filth. The woodwork was torn out, and the filth removed. But she is still a fever ship, and I would not like to go South in her. Then again, there is the case of the Portsmouth. She once had fever on board. Long afterward she was ordered to Norfolk for repairs, Naval Constructor Hichborn had charge of the work. A number of his workmen died, and he himself was taken down with typhoid fever, and his life was despaired of. It is true that once a fever ship, always a fever ship."—Washington Capital.

The Pretty Girls of Iowa.

The editor of the Iowa Day has been studying the subject of feminine beauty in his locality, and has arrived at the following conclusion:

"Lyons girls, take them up one side and down the other, are about as numerous in good looks as any town within a mile or over of us. Clinton puts on some airs, and there is every reason to believe they have some good-looking girls, but we are still backing Lyons on the good-looking girl question. Not only have Lyon girls pretty faces, but they have pretty figures (some of them artificial perhaps,) but they know how to dress neat as well as look neat. Take a walk up Main street on a pleasant Sunday afternoon and you'll notice feminine beauty in great profusion. Tall, bewitching blondes, saucy little brunettes, and the way they take a sly glance at a fellow as they pass by is enough to make him feel funny all over. No, there isn't much danger of Lyons being left in the matter of pretty girls. There's a good supply yet and a probability of more."

Two dancers who had been attempting a waltz at a ball stopped a moment during a pause in the music. "So you are fond of waltzing?" asked the lady. "I adore it," responded her cavalier. "Then hadn't you better try and learn?"—Judge.

Register are familiar with Wall's extraordinary feat, in 1849, in driving, according to his statement, a swarm of bees across the plains. A day or two since as one of our business men was coming down town he happened to discover a huge bee quietly resting on Wall's shoulder as preparations were being made to sprinkle the court-house lawn. "Say, Wall, what are you going to do with that bee on your shoulder?"

Wall was startled for a moment, but, recovering his usual composure, spoke with gravity, carrying conviction of untarnishable truth. "I'll tell you, and it's the solemn truth, if ever I spoke it in my life. That bee is the queen of the swarm that I drove across the plains. She has been hunting me for years, and knew me the moment I called her name. You see, she is getting a little gray, but I knew her on sight. She piloted the swarm, and I used to feed her from my own molasses can. That bee is the last of her race and I shall take care of her in her old age. I tell you, John, that bee brings up many reminiscences of that memorable trip. Several times that swarm stood by me in an hour of peril. They could scent an Indian several miles away, and they got to really enjoy an Indian attack. The fact is they understood tactics as well as the best trained soldiers. When the queen sounded an alarm every bee was under arms, ready for fight. First a skirmish line was thrown out, and you could see more or less uneasiness among the redskins as one and another would claw about his ears, eyes, or nose, but when the order to 'charge' was sounded, and the bee battalions began to move in 'double quick,' a rout and stampede always followed. It is a fact, John, if I ever told the truth in my life, what I am saying is true. Those bees fought all of my battles across the plains, and this is my 'old queen' sure enough."

What is a Well-Brought-Up Person?

If we went deeper into this matter we might find that what it means is that notwithstanding this person is well brought up, she is not interesting, and that it is a fatal defect in a companion for a day or for life. If the good bringing up, including the schooling, has not made her interesting, there is a fault somewhere in the method. Is it too much to presume that everybody can become interesting? It is granted that some people are born with a charm of manner, with a turn of mind, with an originality (it must be so), that impart a certain zest to what they do and say. They may not be highly cultivated or well read, but they have an innate intellectual vigor and freshness, a quality of genius (for want of a better word) that gives an interest to their expression of opinion about everything that turns up. But if a person lacks this originality or this charm, what can be done? All the four hundred young ladies at a school do not expect to be prodigies, to be specialists in any learning, to practice law, medicine, to preach, or manage a business, or even manipulate a type-writer. They expect to marry and take a place in society. If they cannot be interesting members of that society, life is going to be a disappointment to most of them. If they are just picking up a few graces and accomplishments in order to make a marriageable entrance into society, they are likely to find it flat after a year or two. For whatever the fact may be about love, and whatever disposition men have shown to shy off from "blue-stockings," it is true that men in all ages have preferred for companions women who are interesting, if not positively intellectual.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine.

Thought the Guillotine was Funny at First.

And yet it is evident that the guillotine was not at first a terror-inspiring object. One general of the Revolutionary army had a guillotine engraved on his seal. The ladies of Tours wore guillotine ear-rings, and the "avenger of the people" danced with them at the proconsular balls. The guillotine was a la mode. Its inventor, Dr. Guillotin, in a speech before the National Assembly on December 1, 1789, said, "With my machine I slice off your head in the twinkling of an eye, and you do not suffer." People, it must be presumed, soon grew accustomed to the fatal machine, for it even entered the salons, and MM. de Concourt relate, in their History of French Society during the Revolution: "In extremely good company at dessert, after supper, a little mahogany guillotine was placed on the table, and the ladies, acting the role of Sanson, placed under the knife dolls whose heads were portraits of some enemy—Lameth, Robespierre, Bailly, or Lafayette. The head was cut off, and red fluid flowed from the neck; the doll was a bottle, and the blood some amber-colored liqueur." Society in its insouciance treated as a toy the instrument which was soon to decimate its ranks. But except in prints the guillotine is not often represented. It is occasionally found on patriotic snuff-boxes, which themselves take the form of a Phrygian cap. There is one iron pike-head at the Carnavalet Museum on which is engraved an old-fashioned guillotine worked by a rope. On the knife is engraved a Phrygian cap, and the inscriptions above and below are "Ca ira" and "Vive la Republique." When the guillotine was first used the knife was held suspended by a rope, and at a given signal a soldier with averted eyes cut the rope with his sword. Afterward the working of the machine was improved and made more expeditious as its use became extended.—Theodore Child, in Harper's Magazine.

His First Night Out.

Bride (of a month)—My husband seems to be out very late to-night.

Maid—Yes'm; its after 11 o'clock.

"Mercy on me! Do you suppose he could have met some former sweetheart, and——"

"No, indeed mum; the butler tells me your husband is at the club having a good time with his bachelor friends, and I think, ma'am, you ought to do something about it."

"Dearie me! You ain't going to commit suicide?"

"Suicide! You must be crazy. I'm going down to the front door to rub phosphorus on the keyhole."—Philadelphia Record.

Mrs. Cleveland is said to have become an expert in the use of the rifle, and at 200 yards can hit the bullseye five times out of a possible seven.

The day of the long sealskin cloak is about over. Short sealskin jackets are coming into fashion. The Louis XV. jacket is also looming up again.

New Jersey turns out nearly thirty-seven million yards of ribbon a year or about twenty-two thousand seven hundred and thirty-one miles if stretched out in a single line.

A physician who has studied the number of yellow fever visits to this country has found that it has been here in eighty-eight different years. The first known case of the fever in America was in 1693.

The Empress of Japan has established a college for women, which is to be ruled by a committee of foreign ladies. Two of these are Americans, two English, and the other two French and German, respectively.

The discovery and utilization of natural gas have proved a powerful stimulus to the manufacture of iron pipes and tubes in this country; there are now 2,300 miles of mains in the United States for conveying natural gas.

The late Gen. Salomon, ex-President of Hayti, was a splendid specimen of the negro race. He was essentially a polished, dignified gentleman, and outside of politics had few if any enemies. One of his marked characteristics was his love for classical music.

Gholam Hyder Khan, the Afghan Commander in Chief, recently caught two men in the act of spreading false news of the Ameer's death. He had them blown to pieces by cannon in the presence of his troops, it is seldom that a baseless rumor has been so completely exploded.

A novel electric railway has been completed, running from the shore of Lake Lucerne over a bed cut in the solid rock to the summit of the Burgenstock, 1,330 feet up. It has a gradient of from 32 to 58 per cent. The electricity is generated by a waterwheel in the River Aar.

Dr. Donald C. Hood has collected many facts relating to the use of salicylic acid for rheumatism. Of 728 patients treated with salicylates 523 were relieved of their pains within seven days, whereas of 612 patients treated by other methods only 140 were relieved within the same time.

"You'd be surprised," says a New York safe manufacturer, "at the number of sham pasteboard safes in New York, and they're made so well that any ordinary person would be deceived. They have a business-like appearance and give an office a thrifty look, all for $5 or $6, whereas the real article would cost something like $100."

Ex-Lieut. Flipper, whose ears once became of almost National importance when he was a cadet at West Point, is now an explorer and mining expert. He has recently returned to El Paso, Tex., from a trip down the Yaqui River from its source, near the Arizona line, to Nasacari. He says that game and fish are most plentiful in that region.

Bazaine's children all returned with their mother to Mexico except the eldest, who is a Sergeant in the Spanish army and who shared his meagre pay with his miserable father. A brother of Bazaine's still lives in France. He is an engineer, and his two sons are promising officers in the army. The young men have obtained permission to assume their mother's family name, Hayter.

There were 19,912 patents issued last year, and of these but 1,083 were granted to Southerners. Texas led the Southern States, a patent being granted for every 6,006 Texans. Florida came next. Mississippi's ratio was one patent for every 25,146 of her population. Alabama, in spite of the recent great mechanical development of the state, was credited with but 54 inventions in the year.

Some extent of the money invested in horse racing may be judged from the amounts that were won last season by a few of the racing stables in this country. The Dwyer Brothers won $122,710; J. B. Haggin, $122,546; August Belmont, $77,481; D. D. Withers, $73,265; A. J. Cassatt, $66,410; and W. Gratz, $18,150. These amounts only represent the race prizes, and do not include any sums which the owners may have staked on their favorites.

Larious Smith, who recently died in Vermont at the age of ninety-two, is thought there to have been the oldest soldier in the civil war. In 1863 he enlisted in Company I, Twelfth Vermont Volunteers, being at that time sixty-seven years old. He didn't look like it, being remarkably strong and vigorous, and at the time of his death didn't appear to be over sixty years old. The Iowa Graybeards had some pretty old men in the ranks, but it is doubtful if any was as old as Larious.

A giant locomotive is being constructed in Boston. It is for use on the Atchison Road, and has two cabs, one over the boiler for the engineer, and the other in the usual place for the firemen. The driving wheels are of paper, with steel tires. Economy in fuel is accomplished by a pump which utilizes the exhaust steam to heat water, and by a large combustion chamber, which burns all the gas. It is expected the engine will make eighty miles an hour, with ten coaches, on an ordinary road.

The rapid increase of the foreign population in France is causing great concern to the government. Since 1886 no less than 482,000 Belgians, 265,000 Italians, 100,000 Germans, 78,000 Swiss, and 80,000 Spaniards have gone into France in addition to the foreign population previously resident there. In 1851 there were but 381,000 foreigners in a total population of nearly thirty-six millions. In 1886 the foreign population exceeded 1,000,000, while the native population remained nearly stationary.

In some towns in Louisiana, where the business interests of the community are mostly wrapped up in the success or failure of the sugar crop, one may see on the registers of the hotels after each arrival's name the expression: "Stubble good," "stubble blamed poor," and so on. The "stubble" is the local name for sugar cane, and this method of each planter writing down the condition of his own crops saves time for the reporters and spares the planter the annoyance of being interviewed.

Mrs. Joseph Riggs, widow of one of the Washington banking firm of Riggs & Co., is about to add her name to the list of American Princesses. She is not young nor good-looking, but she is worth a couple of million dollars in her own right, and Prince Ruspoli, who is young, handsome, and poor as ... Prince of the ... and not the dom... nobleman that most of our ... heiresses and wealthy widows have been accustomed to purchase over in Europe.

In the town of Sutro, Nev., there is a silver mine the main gangway of which runs from beneath that place to Virginia City, four miles distant. Frequently this "tunnel route," as it is called, is used by Sutro parties desiring to go to Virginia City theatres. The parties enter the tunnel almost at their own doors, clamber into a car drawn by several mules and are carried the full length of the tunnel in a comparatively short space of time. Once there they are hoisted up a shaft 1,640 feet deep, issuing within a few minutes' walk of the Virginia City Opera House. The route is cool in summer and warm in winter. The cars are so clean that the best of dresses may be worn without disastrous result. It is a novel way, certainly, of going to a theatre, although somewhat trying to a timid beginner's nerves.

There is a man in Albany who has solved the problem of winding his Waterbury watch without wasting half his time in the operation. He is employed in a machine shop. When the time arrives for the watch to be wound he simply holds the knob of the stem against one of the belts for a moment and then the thing is done.

Senor Orosco is a Mexican gentleman who has a high appreciation of the value of his services. He is the Government Surveyor of the peninsula of Lower California, and for ten days' work in surveying for a railroad he rendered a modest little bill of $5,000. Only half the sum was paid and he has brought suit for the balance.

A thief who stole 500,000 francs from a bishop in Belgium, for which he was convicted and imprisoned four years, is now in Montreal, the paradise of embezzlers, suing certain brokers there for the proceeds of the robbery, which he claims to have deposited with them before he was convicted. The brokers make denial of having the money.

Of the libraries of Germany the largest is that of Berlin, with 700,000 volumes and 15,000 manuscripts; then comes Dresden, 500,000 volumes and 4,000 manuscripts; Darmstadt, 380,000 volumes and 3,200 manuscripts; Leipsic, the university library, 350,000 volumes and 4,000 manuscripts, and lastly, Breslau, Limbourg and Strasbourg.

A small boy has recently found a fine topaz on the Bald Face Mountain in Chatham, N. Y., and sold it for a small sum to a man, who realized $60 for it after it had been cut and polished. Several others of less value have been found in this region, and they are mostly white. So close is the resemblance to diamonds, it is said, that only an expert can tell the difference.

The late John Guy Vassar, of Poughkeepsie, in his will made the following charitable bequests: Fourteen churches in the city, $7,000 (divided); Vassar Home for Aged Men, $65,000; Poor Widows' Coal Fund, $5,000; Vassar Brothers' Hospital, $252,000; Vassar College, $130,000; John Guy Vassar Home for Orphans, $100,000; American Seamen's Friends' Society, New York, $500; Baptist Church, Poughkeepsie, $15,000. Mr. Vassar is estimated to be worth over $1,500,000.

A Portland, Me., man has a proposition for Congress which would enable American fishermen to gain all the bait needed on Yankee shores. He would have an appropriation of $25,000 from the government to establish a system of traps along the whole Maine coast, and having tried the experiment himself he feels sure it would pay. He has supported for some time a $2,500 trap in Portland harbor, and caught herring enough to supply both Maine and Massachusetts schooners, making the business pay a good profit.

The Missouri Court of Appeals has given great joy to the railway deadheads. It has affirmed the judgment of a lower court, which decided that notwithstanding the holder of a free pass agrees to assume all risks of accident, yet it is the duty of the railroad company to do all that human care, skill, and ingenuity can devise in the way of safe coaches, tracks and machinery and to keep the same in proper repair, and, even if the passenger were a free rider, they were liable for damages that might follow a disregard of these precautions.

A mania for gambling seems to have invaded some of the posts on the Pacific slope, as General O. O. Howard has issued a general order calling the attention of officers in his division to the fact that "the vice of gambling is prejudicial to good order and military discipline." All persons in the army, therefore, who shall within any military reservation play games of chance for money or other valuable consideration will be subject to trial by court-martial. It is reported that in consequence an abnormal activity has been imparted to the training of jack rabbits to run steeplechases, this being the only amusement left at some of the stations on the plains.

Men Are Like Sheep.

A man was trying to sell an armful of reprints in a Pennsylvania Railroad ferryboat a few nights ago. They were copies of a newspaper of 1840, recounting events in the canvass of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too." He solicited every man in the men's cabin without gaining the slightest notice. A gentlemen watched him as he approached for the third time, and said to a friend:

"There are a dozen men on this boat who would buy one of those papers if anyone else would. Men are like sheep, you know. They've got to have a leader. Now, I'll bet you a dollar that if I start one half by buying one, he'll sell a dozen more before we land."

"Done," said his companion.

The man bought a paper, standing up in plain sight to do it. Another bought one a few seats away. Before the boat was chained to the slip the vender had sold twenty-one.

"Many a time," continued the speculator in human nature as he pocketed the dollar. "I have seen a great crowd swayed by an unconfessed desire, and go away unsatisfied. Every man was waiting for another to take the lead, and thus dull the edge of possible criticism."—New York Sun.

The late Charles Crocker of San Francisco is said to have felt a personal interest in the employes of the roads which he owned. A story is told of an accident in which a fireman met his death. Mr. Crocker was greatly disturbed, and when one of the officers of the road told him that it was no use worrying over such things, which were happening with more or less frequency all the time, he looked up and replied vehemently, "But, my God, man, one of our boys was killed, and I could not get that out of my head."

If You Are Sick

With Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Blood Humors, Kidney Disease, Constipation, Female Troubles, Fever and Ague, Sleeplessness, Partial Paralysis, or Nervous Prostration, use Paine's Celery Compound and be cured. In each of these the cause is mental or physical overwork, anxiety, exposure or malaria, the effect of which is to weaken the nervous system, resulting in one of these diseases. Remove the CAUSE with that great Nerve Tonic, and the RESULT will disappear.

Paine's Celery Compound

Jas. L. Bowen, Springfield, Mass., writes:—"Paine's Celery Compound cannot be excelled as a Nerve Tonic. In my case a single bottle wrought a great change. My nervousness entirely disappeared, and with it the resulting affection of the stomach, heart and liver, and the whole tone of the system was wonderfully invigorated. I tell my friends, if sick as I have been, Paine's Celery Compound

Weather Indications.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—Midnight.—Fair, preceded by rain on the coast; colder; nothwesterly winds, higher on the coast; storm signals from Deleware breakwater to Eastport.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 12, 1888.

THE REPUBLICAN CLUB OF PORSMOUTH.

Tuesday evening the permanent organization of the Republican club of Portsmouth was effected. The meeting of the club was held in Badger's hall, and was called to order by John H. Rose, vice president, who introduced the president of the club, W. Scott Smith. Mr. Smith accepted the office to which he had been elected in a short address, in which he counselled harmony and hard work and predicted that good results would crown the efforts of the organization. The constitution and by-laws were then considered in detail and adopted, to go into effect at the regular annual meeting, the second Tuesday in January, at which time the officers for the ensuing year are to be elected. The constitution as adopted admits to membership all republicans over eighteen years of age, thus opening the door to young republicans.

Secretary W. H. Moore tendered his resignation, which was reluctantly accepted, and Geo. B. Wallace was elected to the vacancy thus created.

It was ordered that the constitution and by-laws be printed for the use of the members.

The announcement was made that Mr. Hart had been elected mayor of Boston, and much applause followed.

The meeting was entirely harmonious, and the best of feeling prevailed. The meeting adjourned until Tuesday, the 18th.

Owing to the storm the attendance was not so large as it otherwise would have been, but after adjournment about fifty gentlemen signed the constitution and by-laws as charter members. It is expected that before the first annual meeting the club will have a membership of four or five hundred, and thus give an impetus to the republican cause in this city that will enable the republicans to redeem it, and place it in the republican column to stay.

DEATH OF MRS. RUTTER.

Mrs. Frances Rutter, mother of James Palmer, the murderer, died Tuesday morning in this city. She has been a sufferer for some time from cancer, and her early decease has been predicted since her son's conviction, which no doubt had a tendency to hasten the end. She was a close attendant at the trial of her son, and was naturally solicitous for his welfare, as evinced by her bearing toward him, both on and off the stand. She was sixty-five years of age.

THE MINISTERS.

The Dover District Ministerial Association is unfortunate, considering the inclement weather now prevailing. There was a small attendance Tuesday afternoon and evening, but it is thought there will be many from out of town at todaay's sessions, especially if the storm should abate. It was found necessary to change the order of exercises as originally made, Dr. Knowles, President of the Conference Seminary at Tilton preaching a sermon in the evening in the place of Rev. J. H. Haines of Dover. Rev. Mr. Baketel conducted a devotional service in the afternoon. The exercises will continue through today and this evening, and all are invited to attend.

PORTSMOUTH ENTERPRISE.

A company was formed in this city on Tuesday for the manufacture of Pierce's patented artifical stone, with a capital of $30,000, and the following gentlemen were elected directors: Thomas E. Call, George Scott, John Hallan, James S. Peirce, and Thomas Smith. Thomas E. Call is president, and Thomas Smith vice president of the company, which will immediately begin the manufacture of stone for building and ornamental purposes. The material can also be adopted for sidewalks, and in fact for any use in which natural stone is employed.

Col. James S. Peirce, who owns the gant hotel soon to be constructed at Los Angeles, Cal., and will leave for the Pacific slope in a few days, to give his personal attention to the matter.

MORE DISCHARGES AT THE NAVY YARD.

On Monday evening there were over forty men discharged from the department of construction and repair on the navy yard, on account of a lack of funds, and Tuesday evening some half dozen more were discharged from the department of yards and docks, and all because of a reckless expenditure of money by the reform administrtion during the late campaign.

PERSONAL.

—Justin V. Hanscom, Esq., the efficient manager of Hon. Frank Jones' vast business interests, has been confined to his room for several days during the past week, but was enabled to ride to his office in a hack on Tuesday.

—Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Shackford of Lake Village will have the sympathy of a number of friends in this city, in the death of an infant child. Mr. Shackford was formerly of this city, and for a number of years connected with the Lake Village Times.

Mr. Chas. R. Fletcher, assayer for the state of Mass., is at the Rockingham. Mr. Fletcher is largely interested in minerals and mining, and is here superintending some experiments in copper, which are being conducted at the Portsmouth machine shops.

Today being "Railroad Day" on the Boston & Maine railroad, most of the Eastern railroad stockholders in Portsmouth will take advantage of the free trip to Boston and return, and pass the day at the Hub attending to their Christmas shopping.

There is no place in Boston more attractive to visitors than the "Old Corner Book Store" of Damrell & Upham, Washington and School streets. Here can be found one of the best selected stocks of books in the country, and Portsmouth people, especially are made to feel at home by Mr. Damrell, a former resident of our city. We advise all our readers when in Boston to look in and see the magnificent collection of Christmas books.

Mr. Roach scored a success beyond dispute. In a word the portrayal of the character of Dan Darcy by Mr. Roach was one of the freshest and most natural pieces of acting ever seen in this city.—Providence Journal.

ELIOT ITEMS.

ELIOT, Me. Dec. 11.

Winter is again at hand, and a light coat of snow fell Sunday, to remind us of what is coming.

A gentleman from Portsmouth, who was driving a carriage to Eliot Neck on Friday evening, collided with another team, and both vehicles were somewhat damaged. The night was very dark, and neither driver could see the other team.

There are a number of cases of scarlet fever in town.

Charles W. Tetherly killed a hog last Friday which weighed 455 lbs.

B. E. Dixon of Minneapolis, Minn., is visiting his parents, Mr. Samuel Dixon and wife. Bro. Dixon has been out west for the past six years, but was home on a visit about three years ago. He is engaged in the printing business.

The republicans of this town propose to have a supper tomorrow evening, the 13th, in the town hall, if the weather is pleasant; if not, on the first pleasant evening thereafter. HARRY.

Save time and money by having Laxador always on hand, for the numerous diseases which more or less trouble families at times. Price 25 cents.

Of thirty persons bitten by rabid wolves near villages in the neighborhood of Orsova, Austria, most have died of hydrophobia.

Sarah's Worn Out Gate.

Sarah and her young man are out so much in the night air, swinging on the front gate, that her father says "They will both catch their death of cold, and ma will have to dose them with Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam."

One of the notable institutions of Portsmouth, intensely local, interesting beyond comparison to every lover of the old Portsmouth which was the home of his childhood or to which he has become attached by years of adopted sonship, is Brewster's Rambles about Portsmouth. The chapters are all delightfully-told stories, perused with like interest by young and old, containing facts that had been extensely quoted by historians and some in poetic verse by such poets as Longfellow, Aldrich and Laighton. Our neighbor, L. W. Brewster of the Journal, who is the publisher of the book, has it for sale at his office. It is just the thing for a holiday present.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

...chant,—who goes from house to house buying eggs, told us a few days since, that he expected to have to pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs before Christmas.

This is remarkable, when we reflect that the poultry industry of this country last year amounted to nearly seven hundred million dollars; and even then, we had to import several million dollars worth of foreign eggs. Our own egg raisers ought to have this money. The demand for fresh eggs for food alone far exceeds the supply. At fifty cents per dozen eggs are as cheap as beefsteak for food. Many persons who keep hens will probably not have an egg to sell when they reach fifty cents. Some one may ask, "what can a body do, when the pesky old hens stop laying, and the pullets refuse to begin until spring?" Why do as Wm. H. Yeomans, of Columbia, Conn., editor of the Germantown Telegraph did last winter. He says: "Last fall I made an experiment worth giving our readers. Until about Dec. 1st, I was getting from twenty common hens, only one or two eggs a day. I decided to try Sheridan's Condition Powder. I confess I had but little faith in its value to make hens lay. Commenced feeding, and for nine days saw very little effect. Then the hens began laying and in three months laid 858 eggs. Part of the time the thermometer was 12 degrees below zero, and my hens were laying a dozen eggs a day, while my neighbors (who did not use the powder) were getting none. I now, without hesitation, believe it is a valuable aid to farmers for egg-production." Well might he believe, for nearly 72 dozen eggs, in three months, from twenty common hens, with eggs worth 50 cents, is worth having. I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., (the only makers of Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay,) will send, postpaid to any person, two 25 cent packs of powder, and a new Poultry Raising Guide, for 60 cents. The book alone costs 25 cents. For $1.00 five packs of powder and a book; for $1.20 a large 2 1-4 pound can and book; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send stamps or cash. Interesting testimonals sent free. adv

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

MATTERS IN YORK.

YORK, ME., Dec. 10th.

Fifteen cargoes of apples have been shipped from York Harbor this season. The schooner New Boxer, Captain Hayford, was loaded last week.

The sails were taken from the schooner Karen Happusch, by Capt. Patch, last week, and she is laid up for the winter.

The team of a firm of Portsmouth grocers who purchase eggs very extensively throughout this portion of York county, having inadvertently arrived at the washout on Long sands one day this week was obliged to turn back and go a distance of five miles out of the way to reach its destination.

The finest pair of cattle owned in York are probably those belonging to Hon. E. C. Moody, by whom they were raised. They girth about eight feet respectively, are seven years old, and judged to weigh about 4700 lbs. They are of a dark red color, of the Durham stock introduced into York by the late Capt. Charles Moody, Sam... veteran and skillful butcher, recently slaughtered a swine weighing 595 lbs., raised by Andrew R. Webber; it was one of the largest hogs dressed here this season. "Sam" is much engaged now, and the squeal of the porcine is heard in the land. A few days previous he slaughtered for Mr. Webber another hog, which weighed 377 lbs., and which he sold in Portsmouth at eight cents a pound.

Mr. W. S. Putnam, the expressman between York beach and Portsmouth, has made an improvement to his home place in the shape of the addition of a carriage house, 29x30 feet on the ground, to his buildings. Mr. Putnam is one of our smartest young men, and will undobtedly win the success his many friends wish him.

Capt. A. L. Emerson is at St. Francis, Kansas, where he is interested in the improvements of a township of land.

Mr. Joseph Webber, a young man about nineteen years of age, while hunting with Capt. Emerson, last October, came in range of the latter's gun as he was shooting at a partridge, and consequently received five bird shots in his head, where they still remain, the doctors not being able to remove them as yet.

VIATOR.

YORK BEACH, Dec. 11.

A club was formed by the York beach people at Hotel Atlantic on the evening of Nov. 30th, to be called "The York Beach Amusement club." There were twenty-five charter members. C. L. Bowden was chosen president, C. B. Hildreth vice president, Will Hildreth secretary, and Mrs. H. G. Ellis treasurer. The object of the club is to raise money towards building a chapel. Nineteen new members were installed on the evening of the 6th inst., and fifteen have sent in their names to join next Thursday evening, the 13th. Music is furnished each evening by the York beach orchestra. The attraction this week will be a mock trial, and lots of fun is anticipated. There will be a public entertainment every month. Send in your names, boys and girls, and join this band. It only costs you twenty-five cents, and you will say one evening's enjoyment will more than repay you. Both old and young are joining with us. CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER
THE PUREST AND BEST
Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.
It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

...m Catarrh
...the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.
"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS F. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Catarrh in the Head
Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—There was little morning business. The tariff bill was quickly taken up, and various amendments considered. The House bill making appropriation for the contingent fund of the house was passed.

The special order for two P. M., the Union Pacific funding bill, was presented, but Allison insisted on proceeding with the Tariff bill, and said he would do so until it was concluded, and the funding bill went over.

Riddleberger gave notice that he would move every morning to take up his resolution for the consideration in open session of the British extradition treaty.

The tariff discussion was then resumed and continued until the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

Bill Refunding Direct Tax Passed.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—In the House the Senate amendments to the department of agriculture bill were non-concurred in and a conference ordered.

The report of the committee on elections in the California contested election case of Sullivan against Felton, finding in favor of Sullivan, with the views of the minority, confirming Felton's title, was placed on the calendar.

The House went into committee of the whole, Springer in the chair, on the direct tax bill, and a long discussion ensued. After the submission of various amendments, nearly all of which were rejected, the committee rose and reported the bill to the House, and it was then passed, yeas 178, nays 96.

The President Making Nominations.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—The president today sent to the senate a large number of nominations, among them being Walter C. Newbury to be postmaster at Chicago; Walter L. Bragg of Alabama, inter-state commerce commissioner to succeed himself; Orrin B. Hallam of Kentucky, deputy first auditor of the treasury; Lieut. Col. H. C. Rogers, Asst. quartermaster general, U. S. A.

Why Save Him!

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LEE, MASS., Dec. 12.—A few days ago Charles Keep, a pauper at the town farm, knocked down one of the female paupers, breaking her hip. Fearing he would be punished, Keep obtained and drank a bottle of poison solution today, and then attempted to hang himself with a strap, but was discovered, cut down and resuscitated.

Why not Portsmouth, N. H., Harbor?

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—Senator Stewart today introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy and the General of the Army, to have construsted 250 pneumatic torpedo throwers of the highest power operating under a pressure of from 3000 to 5000 pounds per square inch, and capable of throwing steel torpedoes charged with not less than 500 pounds of dynamite or other explosives a distance of five miles. These torpedo throwers are to be mounted in batteries for the defense of the harbors of New York, Boston, Portland, Me., Newport, R. I., Philadelphia, Baltimore, Portsmouth, Va., Charleston, Savannah, Key West, Mobile, New Orleans, Galveston, San Francisco, Portland, Oregon, and San Diego, from 10 to 20 each. Cost of the throwers not to exceed $40,000 each. $10,000,000 is appropriated to carry out the act.

Passenger Rates to Go Up.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—Official notice was sent today to passenger agents of all railroad lines in the west and northwest that, at the expiration of ten days, the passenger rates will be restored to the former basis.

Cleveland Got It.

WHEELING, W. VA., Dec. 12.—Complete returns for presidential electors show an average majority on the face of the returns of 536 for the Cleveland electors.

A TIMELY DISCOVERY!

And Cool Heads Prevent a Holocaust.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

OSWEGO, N. Y., Dec. 12.—During Mrs. Langtry's performance in the Academy of Music tonight, as the curtain was about to ascend on the last act, there was a cry of fire from the rear of the hall. Thick clouds of smoke poured up through a large register in the middle aisle, and the crackling of flames was heard underneath the floor.

The large audience arose panic stricken, and rushed for the exits. Cool-headed men sprang upon the stage and called out that there was no danger, and others mounted chairs in every part of the house and called upon the people to remain cool. This succeeded in partly quieting the people, and in two minutes the theatre was cleared, just as flames burst through the floor.

The fire was soon extinguished. It caught from an over-heated furnace directly underneath the center aisle, near the main entrance; but for its timely discovery, it would have shut off the people from the main door, and there would have been a terrible scene, for the house was packed. Mrs. Langtry escaped through the crowd, and took refuge in a saloon near by until her carriage found her.

On the Track.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, VT, Dec. 12.—The south bound express struck Edward Bouyea, a teamster, at O'Neill's crossing this afternoon. His collar bone is broken and head badly cut, and he lies in a critical condition. His two horses were instantly killed.

A Slim Case.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 12.—The resignation of U. S. District Attorney Emery B. Sellers was not publicly known here until this morning, and causes considerable political gossip. Several different causes are offered in explanation; the chief reason given, is Mr. Sellers' dissatisfaction with the case he made before the federal grand jury against Col. W. W. Dudley. It is said he was averse to entering upon the prosecution of a case of such importance with what, to him, seemed an insufficiency of evidence. It is also asserted that certain prominent Democrats who publicly claimed they possessed specific, damaging evidence touching the alleged Dudley letter, either failed or refused to produce this evidence.

The Birmingham Riot.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—A special to the Herald from Birmingham, Ala., says Sheriff Smith has been re-arrested on a charge of murdering J. R. McCoy. The troops have been ordered to remain, as further trouble is anticipated.

A Warm Reception to Mr. and Mrs. Morton at Indianapolis.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 12.—Mr. and Mrs. Levi P. Morton arrived this evening in a private car, and were met at the station by several hundred people. They were received by a citizens' committee and immediately driven to Gen. Harrison's residence where they were warmly welcomed by General and Mrs. Harrison. Dinner was served, only members of the family being present. Later a number of friends dropped in to pay their respects, and an impromptu reception was held.

Dartmouth Athletics.

HANOVER, N. H., Dec. 12.—The following named officers will serve the Dartmouth Foot Ball Association next year: A. H. Behr, of Cleveland, Ohio, president; D. P. Jones, of Dover, N. H., vice president; W. P. Ladd, secretary and treasurer; senior director, W. McDuffee, of Rochester; sophomore, J. J. Rollins, of Portland, Me.; junior, to be chosen later. Enough money has been pledged to pay all the debts.

Schooner "Sis" Sunk.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NORFOLK, VA, Dec. 12.—The New London corn schooner "Sis," Capt. Church, from Cape Charles to Norfolk, light, sunk in the stream on Monday night. The captain, Mate Harris and one of the crew, name unknown, were lost.

Deed of a Demented Mother.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—Mrs. Caroline Schmidt, aged 23, while demented, threw herself and two children, Jennie, aged 3, and Emile, aged 2, from a fourth-story window this afternoon. Jennie was instantly killed, and the other child died in the hospital. The mother may live. Her brain was affected by milk fever.

BIRMINGHAM.

Sheriff Smith Again in Jail.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 12.—The jury in the Hawes murder case today rendered a verdict that both the woman and the girl, May Hawes, came to their deaths at the hands of R. R. Hawes, and that Fannie Briant and Albert Patterson were accomplices. Two more warrants charging Sheriff Smith with murder were sworn out today, and he is again a prisoner in jail.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 12.—Oral arguments were heard before the full bench today, in the case of the B, C. & M. R. R against the B. & M. The arguments were not finished.

FOREIGN.

A Judge "Views with Alarm." Life is too Short.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 12.—At a meeting of the Parnell commission today, the counsel for the Times announced that they would now proceed with the examination of landlords from the county Wexford, to show the condition of that county.

The Parnellites protested. Presiding justice Hannen said he could only view the future with alarm. The court had been engaged many days, but had not yet arrived at the end of any one branch of enquiry, while only two branches had been entered upon. He again earnestly appealed to the counsel to do their utmost to compress the enquiry and avoid wasting years of the life of those engaged in the case.

Complimenting our Banking System.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

OTTAWA, ONT., Dec. 12.—Radical changes in the federal banking system will be adopted in 1890. The principal change will be the adoption of an enactment authorizing the government to practically control the issue of legal tender, and correspondingly restricting the issue of notes by the various chartered banks. The change will be borrowed from the American banking system

"Disgraceful to England."

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 12. Mr. Morley in a speech at Clerkenwell this evening said; "If we are not careful we shall have on our hands another abominable, profitless, purposeless Soudanese war. We are drifting into it. The police are cruel to the Arabs, usless to Egypt, disgraceful to England."

The Storm on the Nova Scotia Coast. The Heaviest of the Season. Supposed Loss of Life.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 12.—The heaviest storm of the season raged throughout last night with fearful fury. The wind was from the south and rain came down in torrents. Some gusts of wind shook heavy buildings. The storm abated this morning. In this city considerable damage was done to electric lights, telephone service, and telegraph fire alarm wires.

The instrument at the Citadel which registers the velocity of the wind, was blown down. The wind was then blowing about 50 miles an hour. Vessels at the wharves suffered somewhat from chafing, and a fishing smack was sunk at Cunard wharf. A small sail boat left Sambro yesterday about 4 P. M. for Halifax, containing Mr. McKerson, William Cummings, Peter Dwyer, and Mrs. Cummings. Fears are entertained for their safety, as the vessel was seen to run near Herring Cove head last night, and suddenly her lights disappeared. This morning men living in the vicinity found buckets and boards on the shore, and an old boat was picked up by the fishing schooner Sarah and brought to this port.

Dr. Ashton Talbot, twenty-three years old, of Philadelphia, receives $100,000 by the death of Mrs. Anna M. Locken, aged eighty years, to whom he had been engaged to be married over two years. It was the entire estate.

Thomas Muldowney of Biddeford is missing. A coat and hat have been found on the river bank, and speculation is rife connecting the two circumstances.

It is reported that the Boston & Maine railroad is to build a large freight depot in Portland, where the Eastern and Maine Central sheds are located.

The cargo of sugar, weighing 3800 tons, recently seized at San Francisco, will be released on the payment of $62,401. It had been artifically colored, with a view to have it classed below No. 13 Dutch standard.

FOLLOWING ELK.

How a Party of Hunters Were Saved by a Band of Elk.

In the fall of 1879 a party of three men were sight-seeing and hunting in the Yellowstone National Park, and having prolonged their stay until late in October, were overtaken by a terrible snow-storm, which completely blockaded and obliterated all the trails, and filled the gulches and canons, and coulees to such a depth that their horses could not travel over them at all. They had laid in camp three days waiting for the storm to abate; but as it continued to grow in severity, and as the snow became deeper and deeper, their situation grew daily and hourly more alarming. Their stock of provisions was low, they had no shelter sufficient to withstand the rigors of a winter at that high altitude, and it was fast becoming a question whether they should ever be able to escape beyond the snow-clad peaks and snow-filled canons with which they were hemmed in. Their only hope of escape was by abandoning their horses, and constructing snow-shoes which might keep them above the snow; but in this case they could not carry bedding and food enough to last them throughout the several days that the journey would occupy to the nearest ranch, and the chances of killing game en route after the severe weather had set in were extremely precarious. They had already set about making snow-shoes from the skin of an elk which they had saved. One pair had been completed and the storm having abated, one of the party set out to look over the surrounding country for the most feasible route by which to get out, and also to try if possible to find game of some kind. He had gone about a mile toward the northeast when he came upon the fresh trail of a large band of elk that were moving toward the east. He followed and in a short time came up with them. They were travelling in single file, led by a powerful old bull, who wallowed through snow, in which only his head and neck were visible, with all the patience and perseverance of a faithful old fox. The others followed him—the stronger ones in front and the weaker ones bringing up the rear. There were thirty-seven in the band, and by the time they had all walked in the same line they left it an open, well-beaten trail. The hunter approached within a few yards of them. They were alarmed when they saw him, and made a few bounds in various directions; but seeing their struggles were in vain, they meekly submitted to what seemed their impending fate, and fell back in rear of their file-leader. This would have been the golden opportunity of a skin hunter, who could and would have shot them all down in their tracks from a single stand. But such was not the mission of our friend. He saw in this noble, struggling band a means of deliverance from what had threatened to be a wintry grave for him and his companions. He did not fire a shot, and did not in any way create unnecessary alarm amongst the elk, but hurried back to camp and reported to his companions what he had seen.

In a moment the camp was a scene of activity and excitement. Tent, bedding, provisions, everything that was absolutely necessary to their journey, were hurriedly packed upon their pack animals; saddles were placed, rifles were slung to the saddles, and leaving all surplus baggage, such as trophies of their hunt, mineral specimens, and curios of various kinds, for future comers, they started for the elk trail. They had a slow, tedious, and laborious task breaking away through the deep snow to reach it, but by walking and leading their saddle animals ahead, the pack animals were able to follow slowly. Finally they reached the trail of the elk herd, and following this, after nine days of tedious and painful traveling, the party arrived at a ranch between the upper falls of the Yellowstone River and Yellowstone Lake, on the Stinking River, which was kept by a "squaw man" and his wife, where they were enabled to lodge and recruit themselves and their stock, and whence they finally reached their homes in safety. The band of elk passed on down the river, and our tourist never saw them again; but they have doubtless ere this all fallen a prey to the ruthless war that is constantly being waged against them by hunters white and red.—G. O. Shields, in Harper's Magazine.

William Klausman, a nine-year-old New York boy, has the distinction of possessing the hardest head known in that city. The other day, while playing in the street, he was run over by a heavy wagon, the wheels of which passed directly over his head. Strange to say, the only injuries received were a few skin bruses. Doctors consider it a remarkable case.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty-six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10¾x14¼. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12.50; tree calf, $12.50; English seal style, $9.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver letering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

Portsmouth "White Caps."

Our local columns tell the story of the outrage perpetrated upon the office of the Penny Post on Tuesday night by unknown persons. There can be but one opinion in this affair, however much we may differ with the conductors of the Penny Post, regarding the policy it has pursued in its treatment of political or personal adversaries. Regarding that we are not called upon to express any opinion. As a public journal, however, having the welfare of Portsmouth at heart, the CHRONICLE would be false to its duty if it failed to characterize the cowardly and wholly indefensible raid upon the office of the Penny Post and the destruction of its property, as a stain upon the fair name of our city,—and which if not speedily effaced by the prompt arrest and swift punishment of the guilty parties, will work incalculable injury to our business interests. We read about midnight raids in the Southern States and the destruction of property by lawless and reckless bands of political partisans, of the widespread panic which prevails in some of the Western States in consequence of the operations of bands of "White Caps," and we wonder how such things can be. The case is now brought to our own door, and we are confronted with an act which has its parallel only in the lawless operations to which we have referred as occurring elsewhere in the country. Will the citizens of sturdy old Portsmouth, and our city authorities, submit quietly to this state of things, and permit such an open and flagrant violation of law, peace and security of our homes and property, to go undiscovered and unpunished? We cannot believe it. This is not a question of politics, and it will not do to sit supinely by and attribute this act of cowardice to personal malice. The laws must be respected, and it behooves all good citizens to insist upon the prompt action of our authorities to remove the stain which now rests upon the fair name of our city.

Comments on the Boston Election.

The Boston Post, (dem.) of the 12th, speaking of the election of Thomas N. Hart as mayor by 2000 majority over Hugh O'Brien, says:

"This change in no way indicates a revolution in the political sentiment of the mass of the voters of Boston. On such an issue of public policy as that which was presented at the election in November, with the two parties distinctly arrayed against each other, the result would doubtless be the same as at that time. But with the issue confined strictly to that of partisanship or non-partisanship in the local government, the measure of the strength of the independent element appears in a result which puts party lines out of sight. Mr. Hart is not elected, nor is Mr. O'Brien defeated, because one is a Republican and the other a Democrat; but because Mr. Hart's candidacy was that of a man claiming to be independent of party and able to convince independent, non-partisan citizens of the sincerity of his claim, while Mr. O'Brien stood upon his record in office and represented only a party."

The Boston Traveller (rep.) of the same date says:

"The election of Thomas N. Hart * is not by any means a party victory. When party lines are drawn and party discipline is maintained Boston is a Democratic city. The result at the recent national and state election amply demonstrates this fact. Yesterday's victory is one of good government against bad government, of non-partisanship against the worst kind of partisanship, of business-like and clean methods of administration against machine methods. Citizens and tax-payers who hold the best interests of the city of Boston above party have nobly responded to the appeal which has been made."

The Herald (ind.,) which a year ago suggested that Mayor O'Brien's second term would be his last, says:

"While Mr. Hart was the candidate of the Republican party, he owes his success to the desire of a majority of our citizens to put an end to the partisan system of control in our municipal affairs. He has, in what he has recently said and written, clearly affirmed his intention of administering the affairs of the city on business, in contradistinction to political, principles. As it was on these grounds that many thousands supported him, so it will be on these grounds that his administration will be judged."

It would seem that the belief which the Cleveland administration apparently held at the start, that anything to be right and popular need only be English, must have been rudely shaken by this time. The British minister's approval of the administration's fishery policy was not so effective as it was hoped to be, and his political letter writing was a dead failure. British free trade ideas furnished excellent political capital—for the republicans. Secretary Whitney's battle-ship Texas, for the plans of which he paid an English firm a large sum, it is reported, Secretary Whitney's battle-ship Texas, for the plans of which he built on those plans, as she would go straight to the bottom of the ocean, where only the teredo could get at her; and the British steamer Alabama, engaged to dredge New York harbor, after having had about $180,000 laid out on her to make her as suitable for the work as a first-class American dredge, has proved a total failure. A trifle stronger tinge of Americanism in the Cleveland administration would at least have saved it from some egregious blunders.

It is to be hoped that Admiral Luce will accomplish more on the present expedition to Hayti, and be more circumspect in his action than he was last year when he undertook while in command of the American vessels sent into Canadian waters to look after the interests of American fishermen, to become a diplomat. It will be remembered that the gallant admiral issued some instructions to the fishing vessels as to their alleged rights, based not upon treaty stipulations but upon the Canadian interpretation of existing treaties, and that he was sharply called to account by the authorities at Washington, and obliged to withdraw his circular. He lost his head then, and it is to be hoped he will not do the same thing again when he reaches Haytien waters.

The Democrats in Congress are unable to come to any agreement among themselves regarding the admission of some of the Territories as States, and will hold another caucus tonight to see if they can solve the question. They realize that it is poor politics to keep out Territories with a population reaching to half a million, and that something must be done, or the Democratic party cannot expect to have any foothold when these Territories are admitted as States, as will certainly be done next year when the Republicans get control of the House. They have blundered in the past, and it is too much to expect that they will do otherwise than blunder now. Let the people of the Territories have patience, and they will soon see daylight ahead.

The women of Boston cast a heavier vote on the 11th inst. in proportion to the number registered, than the men did. Female ballot-distributors were numerous, and no cases are reported in which they were treated with disrespect, although the voting-places were not in all instances so orderly as some persons have predicted would be the case when the women should vote.

Sheriff Smith of Birmingham, Ala., who commanded the posse which repulsed the mob that attacked the jail, has been more than once arrested, and the despatches report intense feeling against him in that region. At this distance it seems that he simply did the duty he was sworn to perform, and did it bravely and effectively.

Nose-Bleed.

"If there is one thing more annoying than another," said a well-known physician to a New York Mail and Express man, "it is to have an attack of nose-bleed. While traveling in the north of Scotland last year, and being in the company of Sir Morell Mackenzie, then plain Dr. Mackenzie, late attendant of Kaiser Freidrich, I was attacked with a nose-bleed and was obliged to retire from the room. I was shortly afterward followed into the adjoining apartment by the medical knight, who told me of his simple plan of stopping the flow of blood. It is as follows:

"Grasp firmly the nose with the finger and thumb of the right hand for fully ten or fifteen minutes, thus completely stopping the movement of air through the nose.

"This will stop the hemorrhage without any danger of a renewed attack."

THE MODERN STONE AGE.

Many Implements Made of This Material Still Used in Kentucky.

All over our country we find many interesting relics of the Indians. Stone spearheads, arrowheads, hammers, chisels, knives, scrapers, etc., together with pottery, some of burned or baked clay, some cut from soft stone, as slate, steatite, etc. Similar remnants of the so-called stone age of mankind are found in nearly every portion of the globe, and, besides their interest as curious survivals of a bygone time, they aid us toward a discovery of the prehistoric man. It is hardly of less interest, or of less historic or scientific value, to note how the stone age still survives among us to no little extent.

Here in Virginia for instance, says a writer in the Petersburg Index-Appeal, many people still scald their slaughtered hogs in hogsheads or barrels, as our barbarian progenitors boiled their meat in skins, by heating stones and putting them into the water until it is hot enough for the purpose. The stones ordinarily used in this way are roundish, hard and very heavy black or brown modules, sometimes called "negro heads," or iron stones, although they are compressed lava, upheaved in strata through crevices in the rock crust of the earth at remote periods of geological time.

We sometime encounter stones that are hollowed out in the center, often to a socket, and these not infrequently are treasured by their finders as an ancient Indian stone for mashing or grinding corn, with the aid of a stone pestle; yet they are nothing more nor less, for the most part, than discarded stones once used by our rural brethren for their gates to swing upon—many gates in all parts of the commonwealth being still thus pivoted.

Many a housewife in remote country regions still has her stone weights, more or less rough, but honest; where ever the old Kentucky rifle lingers there is likely to be found still a set of soapstone bullet molds; our log cabins yet have rough stone and clay chimneys, where they are not of mud and sticks; in many a humble household a thin rock, not always smooth, is the utensil for baking corn bread; and the stone "mash trap" is familiar to all our country boys. The stone pipe, believed by many to have gone out with the Indian, is made and used to-day by many colored folks and by no few white folks. Wherever soapstone, or steatite, is found not only the stone pipe, but many other articles supposed to be archaic, are still manufactured and put to service by the ingenious and thrifty. In such localities stone pans, stone troughs for children, etc., are still common. Some day they will be dug up and attributed to the Indians, or even to their predecessors. A little inquiry and investigation would show much more of the stone age still here than we have averted to.

It is not rare to see stone sinkers in use for lines and nets in fishing; the flint is not yet superseded wholly by the match; there are clocks in the land yet run by stone weights, stone hovels, with dirt roofs, are not unknown in our mountains: the colored ruffian, and sometimes the white one, carries a stone in a stocking, along with his razor when on the warpath; many a cider press and tobacco press are still made effective by stones swung at the end of their lever; and our small boys are all in their stone age whenever they can give their natures full and free play.

We are not so far off from the stone-age man as some may imagine; many of the implements and relics supposed to be prehistoric, and doubtless so in many cases, have their modern duplicates, and in some instances are all in use among us. Professor and Dr. James C. Southall, of Virginia, has written a big book to prove the recent origin of man, and Dr. Arthur Mitchell, of Scotland, has published a very interesting work to illustrate how the past and present are identical in many things; and so we may conclude that, as there is nothing new under the sun, so there is nothing very old beneath that luminary.

How Lions Transact Their Business.

Lions, as a rule, hunt in family parties. A very old lion, not infrequently incapacitated from taking an active part in pursuing game, is generally to be found at the head of such a coterie, and on them devolves no unimportant part of the program.

Down to leeward, a hundred or more paces below, where the draft bullocks are made fast when a train halts for rest, the young and active males and lionesses place themselves behind what available cover is to be found. This being done, the old lion goes to the windward of the encampment and shakes out his abundant mane in the breeze, so that the odor from it may be carried down to the excited draft animals.

One sniff of the tainted breeze brings every ox to his feet in a moment; then standing, often trembling with fear, they gaze with dilated eyes into the impenetrable darkness. Closer and closer approaches the aged lion to his victims, shaking and reshaking the dense, tawny covering of his forequarters.

Then if the traveler's harness be not strong he may look out for a stampede. Should it hold temporarily, the aggressor, as a climax to his former performances, gives utterance to his deepest and loudest roar, when the frightened beasts, if not secured by the stoutest fastening that can be obtained, will break free and rush with inconceivable rapidity into the very jaws of their foes, secreted to leeward.—Philadelphia Times.

Where Maidens do the Courting.

A young girl in Africa may take a fancy to some person of the opposite sex she may see pass her parents' house or may meet on the streets. Not being restrained by the scruples or any severe code of etiquette peculiar to more civilized nations, she proceeds to send the adored one a present, called a "dash," by the hands of a trusty person, generally an old woman. These "dashes" are of a very heterogeneous description. Fowls, yams, and eggs, rising to gold jewelry, as studs, rings, and other ornaments, are sent, according to the wealth of the sender's people. The lover—or, rather, lovee—is requested to appoint a meeting where he may meet the lady and discuss the situation. He is at liberty to decline the "dash," in which event the affair is at an end. Should he accept he meets his inamorata, and all goes well. These love passages do not invariably terminate in marriage, but have a tendency that way.—San. Francisco Chronicle.

J. F. Morris, of Brunswick, Ga., has a curiosity in the shape of a postal card, on which are written 1,000 words, which can be plainly read.

Money is flowing in from the east in a constant tide. Sometimes the supply is beyond the demand; sometimes the reverse.

Enormous Demand for Eggs.

An egg merchant, who goes from house to house buying eggs, told us a few days since, that he expected to have to pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs before Christmas.

This is remarkable, when we reflect that the poultry industry of this country last year amounted to nearly seven hundred million dollars; and even then, we had to import several million dollars worth of foreign eggs. Our own egg-raisers ought to have this money. The demand for fresh eggs for food alone far exceeds the supply. At fifty cents per dozen eggs are as cheap as beefsteak for food. Many persons who keep hens will probably not have an egg to sell when they reach fifty cents. Some one may ask, "what can a body do, when the pesky old hens stop laying, and the pullets refuse to begin until spring?" Why do as Wm. H. Yeomans, of Columbia, Conn., editor of the Germantown Telegraph did last winter. He says: "Last fall I made an experiment worth giving our readers. Until about Dec. 1st, I was getting from twenty common hens, only one or two eggs a day. I decided to try Sheridan's Condition Powder. I confess I had but little faith in its value to make hens lay. Commenced feeding, and for nine days saw very little effect. Then the hens began laying and in three months laid 858 eggs. Part of the time the thermometer was 12 degrees below zero, and my hens were laying a dozen eggs a day, while my neighbors (who did not use the powder) were getting none. I now, without hesitation, believe it is a valuable aid to farmers for egg-production." Well might he believe, for nearly 72 dozen eggs, in three months, from twenty common hens, with eggs worth 50 cents, is worth having. I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., (the only makers of Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay,) will send, postpaid to any person, two 25 cent packs of powder, and a new Poultry Raising Guide, for 60 cents. The book alone costs 25 cents. For $1.00 five packs of powder and a book; for $1.20 a large 2 1-4 pound can and book; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send stamps or cash. Interesting testimonals sent free. adv

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

COLONEL C. S. WOOD'S LUCK.

Colonel Charles S. Wood, the tall and handsome manager of the Eutaw House, is in great luck. He is wealthier to-day by the sum of $5,000 than he was a week ago. He bought one-twentieth of a ticket in the Louisiana State Lottery. He put it in his pocket and was notified that the ticket, of which he held a fraction—it was No. 73,946—had drawn on October 9th, the $100,000. The Colonel was not slow in communicating with the lottery people, and on Monday he received a certified check for his share of the wealth, namely, $5,000.—Baltimore (Md.) Herald, Oct. 24th. On Dec. 19th, comes the Mammoth Drawing in which the Flat Capital Prize is $600,000. All information to be had by applying to L. A. Dauphin, New Orleans, La.

Pat, the Barrel, and the Bull.

"How did you come over, Pat?" asked the Journal man of a well-known laborer in the yard of one of the Lewiston mills after the story teller had done telling his story.

"I left home," he began, after expressions of diffidence, "when I was a lad, and my cousin says he to me, 'My boy, my boy,' and begorry I was sad, indeed. I didn't register on the ship's books, for them days were afore the steamship times. I just stowed myself in the ship's hold until one day the churnin' and thumpin' got that loud that I was afraid and I come aloft to the deck of the ship."

After he got on deck, his narrative continues, the Captain fell on him and gave him three lashings a day on his bare back, with unfailing regularity. This became so monotonous that one day he fell on his knees and pleaded for his life, and the Captain had a big cask rolled up out of the ship's hold, its head knocked in, a lot of food put into it, Patrick put into the cask, the head replaced, and, with only the bunghole open, the entire cask and contents rolled into the sea. For days he drifted on and on. "I had only the bunghole to look out of, and the great green waves all around me."

"How did you get water?"

"All the water I had to drink was what washed through the bunghole."

"And you like salt water?"

"Sure it's only a matter of taste."

After Pat had drifted many days, and had begun to grow very fat, from his inactivity, he one day felt the cask bumping on the shore, and pretty soon was washed up high and dry.

With a certain naivete, he says that he had by this time begun to be sort of frightened. He saw no signs of life until after several hours some cows and bulls came roaming over the seashore, where they had come down to drink. At this point it is better not to question the taste of cows for salt water. One of the bulls came smelling around his cask, and playfully leaned up against the bunghole to rest. Pat put out his hand and quietly grabbed the bull's tail. Then he pulled it through, and, bracing his feet against the head of the cask, gave the tail a twist.

The bull awoke. He looked around. The cask had him. With a snort like the wrath of Jove he started. Whew! How he ran. He bounded over fields and hedges, into the streets of the city, past wharves and docks, past the Custom House, up to the city building, where, in weathering a street corner, he split the cask in twain over a lamp post, and Pat stood forth from his prison house of weeks, a free man.

He was in New Jersey.—Lewiston Journal.

Moody and Wentworth.

Innumerable are the anecdotes related of the late John Wentworth. One that has often been told has a religious flavor, and exhibits a prominent quality in his character.

He was called on by Brother Moody, who wished to do some missionary work in the interests of the noted and wealthy citizen.

"Mr. Wentworth," said he, after a preliminary conversation on health and the weather, "why are you not a Christian?"

"Me? I am a Christian."

"Is that so? But they tell me that you drink to excess. How can you do that if you are a Christian?"

"That is a mistake! I never drink a drop of anything intoxicating. It's a political slander, and there isn't a word of truth in it!"

"But, Mr. Wentworth, you have the reputation of being very profane."

"That's a lie, too."

"Well, but Mr. Wentworth, I myself heard you some weeks ago, cursing and blaspheming in a most scandalous manner!"

"Where was that?"

"Over in the office of the county clerk."

"Oh! that was before I was converted."—Chicago Globe.

A Silver Dollar Stops a Toothache.

A few days ago Mr. Murray of Brooklyn was troubled with an annoying toothache. He couldn't sleep, he lost his appetite, and was really miserable in consequence. He vowed each day that he would have the molar yanked out if the pain did not ease. He was a sympathetic picture to his friends. Every one who met him would stop and inquire: "What's the matter, Mac; got a toothache?"

"Yes," was the answer, "and if it doesn't quit by to-morrow morning I'll have it taken out, I'm sick of this."

The morrow came. When Mr. Murray lifted his weary limbs out of his virtuous couch that morning the tooth still ached. Fully determined to go through the pain of having the tooth extracted then and there, he put a silver dollar in his vest pocket and started for the dentist. As he left the house the pain eased up a little. As he proceeded farther it became less troublesome, and by the time he reached the door of the dentist's house there was hardly any pain at all. He then went to business in New York, and since then the tooth has scarcely troubled him. He carries the silver dollar in his left-hand side pocket constantly.—New York Sun.

Another of Those Charming Widows.

Husband and wife had a little tiff. He buried his nose in a morning paper, while she gazed out of the car window with persistent intentness. Thus an hour and thirty minutes passed. A lady entered the car. Husband dropped his paper and looked at her admiringly.

"Ah," he said, "that's a fine woman. And a widow, too. Don't you think she's handsome?"

"Yes, rather. You seem to like widows."

"Indeed I do. They're just charming."

Husband evidently thought this would pique his partner. But it didn't.

"Alfred," said she tenderly, placing her hand softly on his arm, "Alfred, I guess I was in the wrong a little while ago, when I became angry at you, and I'm sorry, so sorry. Will you forgive your little wifey?"

"Certainly. Don't say another word about it."

"And will you grant a little request I have to make of you, hubby dear?"

"Of course. Anything that lies in my power."

"You say you think widows are charming?"

"Yes, I did say so, but——"

"Then make me one; that's a good husband mine. O, I shall be so happy."—Troy Telegram.

An Irreproachable Story.

Mr. Smith, of Virginia, has a valet whose eccentricities afford him material for some successful anecdotes. Jim, who is of that shade known as "bright mulatto," has black silken curls and a smile that render him the delight and torment of all the "yaller gals" of the city, and his temper is as sunny as a day in June. It is Mr. Smith's a invariable habit to discharge his valet once a week in futile endeavor to persuade Jim that he does not own his master body and soul; but as the amiable African sweetly ignores all such ebullitions, and always returns the next morning, placidly unconscious of any unpleasantness, the habit serves only as a relief to his master's overcharged feelings. On one occasion he carried Jim down into unfamiliar wilds in Georgia and purposely lost him, after the fashion in which one rids one's self of obnoxious cats, and for two weeks after his return revelled in his freedom. At the end of that time, in answer to his bell one morning, Jim put his head in the door, and asked, in his usual tone, "Mis' Smiff, did you ring for me?" and then his master resigned himself to his obvious destiny. His only consolation is that a repetition of Jim's sayings sometimes helps him over shoals of silence at a stupid dinner party. Here are two of them:

One morning, Jim having been instructed to rouse Smith at a certain hour, woke him with exclaiming, "Law! Mis' Smiff, I done hed such bad luck dis mawnin! I done clean forgot to wake you up time you tole me."

Smith groaned. "Jim you are too trifling to live. I wish you would die. I'll never get rid of you in any other way."

The darky set about his duties without resentment, and said, contemplatively, a few moments later, with an evident desire to be obliging, "I don't mind dyin', Mis' Smiff; it's stayin' dead so long's what henders me."

Jim and a young African companion were one day fishing from the wharves. His friend missed his footing, fell into the water, and was drowned. Jim's grief was so uproarious that a sympathetic by-stander inquired if the drowned boy was a relation. "No," said Jim, through his tears; "he warn't no relation, but he mout's well been—he had all de bait."—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine.

Did Not Know Macbeth.

Macbeth seems to have shared the fate of prophets in their own country. We asked a man passing with a goat the distance to Macbeth's Hill, as it is on the map. He didna know, he answered. But presently he ran after us. Was the gentleman we spoke of a farmer? Another man, however, knew all about it. He had never been to the top of the hill; he had been told there were trees up there, and that it wasn't different from the other hills around, and yet he had heard people came a great distance to see it. He supposed we had traveled far just to go up the hill. He knew from our talk, many words of which he couldna understand, that we were no from this part of the country. But then sometimes he couldna understand the broad Scotch of the people in Aberdeenshire. There were some people hereabouts who could talk only Gaelic. They had been turned off the Western Islands, and had settled here years ago, but they still talked the Gaelic.

He went our way for half a mile or less, and he walked with us. His clothes were ragged, his feet bare, and over his shoulders was slung a small bundle done up in a red handkerchief. In the last three years, he said, he had but two or three days' work. Work was hard to get. Here rents were high, farmers complained, and this year the crops were ruined because of the long drought. He did think at times of going to America. He had a sister who had gone to live in Pittsburg. It might be a good thing. There are Scotchmen who have done well in Pittsburg. He left us with minute directions. The hill, though not far from the road, which now went between pine woods and heather, could not be seen from it. We came to the point at which we should have turned to the blasted heath.

"It's a blasted nuisance," J——said, and he kept straight on to the nearest railway station.—Elizabeth Bobins Pennell in Harper's Magazine.

Jolly Under Adverse Circumstances.

A doctor who was strolling through the woods near Jacksonville, Ga., came upon a negro who was sitting upon the fence singing. "You seem to be happy, old man," said he. "Well, sah, I ain't got nothin' yet 'plain erbout." "Do you know that yellow-fever is raging all around you?" "Ought ter know it, sah, when I dun buried my wife yistidy." "Then how can you sit around here and sing?" "Dis yere is God's wor', ain't it?" "I suppose so?" "An' I b'longs ter God, doan I?" "Yes." "Well, of de Lawd puts it in my heart ter sing, I doan' see why I oughter keep my mout shet." "Are you not afraid of taking the fever?" "What's de use'n bein' erfraid? If de Lawd wants me to take it, I will, an' ef he doan', I ain't, dat's all; an', 'sides dat, I ain't gwine ter take it no quicker ef I slugs. I lay if you go 'roun' dat town now, you'll fin' mos' o' de folks whut's got de feeber didn't sing er talk." "I don't see," said the amused physician, "how you can feel disposed to sing, when your wife was buried only yesterday." "No, sah, cuze you didn't know dat lady like I did." "Didn't you get along well together?" "Didn't git erlong togeder ez well ez we did erpart, sah."

A Desperate Man.

"Is there no hope?" he exclaimed, passionately. "Think a moment, my darling, ere you doom me to everlasting despair."

"I can not be your wife, Mr. Brown, she replied, firmly.

"Then be the consequences upon your false head!" he cried. "Ah, you do not know the effect of your cruel words upon a desperate man. Once for all, is your decision irrevocable?"

"I repeat I cannot marry you. Let us end this painful scene, Mr. Brown," she replied, turning her pale, agonized face full on him.

"May heaven forgive you," he moaned, brokenly. "Look upon your victim for the last time, Miss Jones." Seizing his hat, he rushed out into the cold world, and ten minutes later was playing pin-pool for the drinks.—Binghamton Republican.

Mamma (the next morning)—Edith, my dear, I didn't think you should have had late callers. Mr. Simpkins stayed here until after 11 last night! Edith—Why, mamma! How can you call him a late caller? I'm sure it was only a few minutes after 7 when he called!—Lyn.

A CONTEMPTIBLE OUTRAGE.

A cowardly piece of vandalism was perpetrated at the rooms of the Penny Post in Franklin block, sometime between eleven o'clock Tuesday night and five o'clock Wednesday morning.

Securing an entrance to the office by breaking a large light of glass in the door, a like operation permitted the party to pass from the office to the composing and press rooms, where the miscreant (and companion, if any) proceeded to amuse himself by removing every case from the racks, and emptying the contents in a heap on the floor. The forms, which were in the press room, and contained thirty-two columns of matter, were also dumped in several heaps about the room. Three galleys of mailing lists were the only matter set up, and in fact, the only type in the establishment that did not receive the attention of the perpetrator of this contemptible piece of business. The fact that a large quantity of type was thrown into the ink barrel is taken as evidence that some one familiar with a printing establishment had a hand in the operation. No damage was done to the press or engine.

Whatever motive may have possessed the author of the outrage, or however strong may have been his desire to seek revenge, the method selected merits the severest condemnation that can be expressed. If anything has appeared in the columns of the Penny Post antagonistic to the interests of any one, or assailing any citizen, it has been said openly and fearlessly, and consequently, if open to rebuke at all, was worthy of open rebuke; but for any one to adopt such a mode of proceedure as we have described, under cover of night and a howling gale, merely proves that person to be a coward and sneak, concerning whose worthlessness it would be difficult to exaggerate.

Messrs. Sides and Curtis entertain suspicions as to who paid their premises this midnight visit, and it is needless to say that they will not rest on the matter while there is any probability or hope of tracing the guilty party; and if they succeed in attaching the deed to any one, it is safe to assume that he will receive the full extent of the law, which he so richly deserves.

With characteristic enterprise, and assistance from the other printing offices in the city, the Penny Post appeared on Wednesday evening, a little late and in a variegated dress, but in good form considering its sudden and extensive shaking up.

REPUBLICAN CELEBRATION AT ELIOT.

The republicans of Eliot, Me., have been quietly making arrangements for some time to celebrate the recent national victory, and the affair came off on Wednesday evening, the 12th, at the town hall, and an enjoyable occasion it was.

Acting in concert with the republican committee, the ladies prepared a supper, such a one as the ladies of Eliot are noted for getting up. Tables on each side of the hall and running the full length, were loaded down with good things, and although the capacity of the hall was taxed to its utmost everybody was served and enough was left over to have fed a regiment of soldiers. The ladies of Eliot do not do things half way, as their liberality on this occasion bears evidence; and with plenty to eat and drink and served by the fairest of hands, who could be otherwise than happy? All Eliot was there and enjoyed the good time.

After supper was over, short and telling speeches were made by Mr. Howe Call of Portsmouth, and Rev. Mr. Waldron of Boston, both of whom were heartily applauded. The best of feeling prevailed, and after the tables had been cleared away the hall was given up to the young people, who were afforded an opportunity to show their skill in dancing. M. Prince, provision dealer at the Foreside, was the best musician.

Everybody went home feeling that an evening had been well spent. Several citizens of Portsmouth were present to enjoy the occasion, and they returned home hoping that they would not be overlooked when another celebration came off. The committee having charge of the affair are to be congratulated upon the success attending it.

MAN MISSING.

Parties from York, Me., were in this city on the 12th inst., seeking information concerning Mr. George Junkins of York, who left his home Nov. 1st ostensibly to come to Portsmouth to purchase some clothing, and has not since been heard from. He came to this city on the date specified, and registered at the Kearsarge house, but did not make his appearance at night. He visited during the day several other places where he was known, and appeared to be wandering somewhat in his mind; and his friends fear he may have fallen into the river, or met with some other misadventure. His description is as follows: Age, twenty-one years; height, five feet ten inches; weight, about 150 pounds; black mustache.

ENTERTAINMENT.

The Court Street Christian Benevolent Society will hold its next entertainment this evening in G. A. R. hall, beginning at 6:30 o'clock. The popularity of the entertainments of this society will ensure a large attendance. Fancy articles will be on sale, and ice cream and cake will also be served. Mr. Herbert Mutch of Newburyport will be an additional attraction to our well known and highly appreciated local talent. Following is the programme, though perhaps not in the exact order in which it will be given:

FISHERMAN DROWNED.

The body of Thomas Jenkins, of Pittsburg, Pa., was washed ashore at Hampton beach on the 11th inst. He left his vessel, the Water Lily, Jonah Hiltz master, in the morning, to attend his trawls, and was last seen alive by the captain of the Gloucester fishing schooner Eva May, which vessel he passed about one hundred yards off, sitting in the stern of his dory steering, and going along apparently all right. He was then about six miles off Boar's Head, Hampton. His dory was found on the beach about ten feet from his body, in good condition. He was about thirty-eight years old. Capt. Hiltz went to Hampton on Wednesday morning, the 12th, recognized the remains as those of Jenkins, and telegraphed to Pittsburg to try and find his family or friends.

AFFAIRS IN KITTERY.

KITTERY POINT, ME., Dec. 11th.

The schooner Mary Willey, Captain Zach. Williams, arrived here last Friday morning with a deckload of long lumber, and a hold full of shingles and clapboards. The vessel is now hauled up for the winter, and extensive repairs will be made on her before spring.

The storm of last Sunday made us think of what is coming between now and next April. The church attendance was small at both churches, but the exercises were very interesting. About three inches of snow fell on a level, but it soon melted in the streets.

The schooner Valparaiso, of Deer Isle, Me., came in to Frisbee's wharf last Monday to load with apples to take east, paying $1.25 for No. 1's, and sixty cents for No. 2's, without the barrel. John Wentworth, Esq., of North Kittery, sold 150 barrels.

Mr. Henry Foye of the Norton road is quite sick with dropsoy; we hope he may soon recover.

Mr. Leonidas H. Sawyer has been appointed second assistant keeper at Boon island light-house.

Charles W. Mitchell has had charge of the depot at Kittery Junction for a few days past, the station master, Mr. C. Sullivan, having had his hand badly jammed while closing the railroad draw.

The annual business meeting of the Freewill Baptist society was held in the vestry of the church last Monday evening.

There will be religous meetings in the Freewill Baptist church from Tuesday to Friday evenings, to which all are cordially invited. "Come, and we will do you good."

The Sabbath schools of both churches are now getting ready for their Christmas concerts, which will come off on the evenings of the 24th and 25th; the time will soon be here. Let her come, Santa Claus and all. UNCLE MOSES.

KITTERY, ME., Dec. 11th.

Quarterly conference will be held at the First Methodist church, South Eliot, and at the First Methodist church, North Kittery, on Sunday, the 16th inst. Rev. W. S. Jones, presiding elder, will preach in the church at North Kittery in the evening.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

MUSIC HALL.

This evening, at Music hall, the musical comedy "Keep it Dark" will be presented, by a company fully competent to do justice to the piece, dramatically and musically. There is fun in it from beginning to end, and it is all clean fun, too. Tickets at Goodrich's.

The last of the course of young people's dancing parties, so ably maintained through the instrumentality of Mrs. H. Fisher Eldredge, came off Tuesday evening at Rechabite hall. They have been a source of much pleasure and enjoyment to the happy participants, and all regret that the last one has passed.

The following-named fishing vessels arrived at this port on the 11th, and landed about 50,000 lbs. of fish, which was bought by E. Newton & Co. and Edw. Jameson: Northern Eagle, E. A. Williams, Anna H. Mason, Bertha Miller, Quickstep, A. L. Sanborn, Mary E. Smith, Edith Conley, Abby A. Snow, Margaret, Eva May, Lizzie L. Saunders, Geneva, and Myrtle.

The Dover Navigation Co.'s schooner Zimri S. Wallingford sailed from this port on the 11th inst. for Bucksport, Me., to load with orange-box shooks for Palatka, Fla. She will bring back north a cargo of southern lumber.

Wednesday, the 12th inst., having been "railroad day," the morning trains from this city to Boston were thronged with Eastern railroad stockholders, mainly ladies, most of whom on their arrival home by the evening trains had with them evidence that they had attended the railroad meeting, in the shape of bundles and boxes of dry goods, Christmas toys, etc.

Mr. Cobbett, foreman of the Penny Post office, did himself credit in getting out so fair-looking a paper as he managed to do on the afternoon of the 12th inst., considering the total wreck which prevailed in the office in the morning.

Hampton Falls farmers have shipped over 14,000 barrels of apples this season. One producer, not being satisfied with the market here, has shipped direct to Liverpool, and realized a good price.

Mr. Ansel Staples of Eliot, foreman boat builder at the navy yard, died at his home in Eliot on the morning of the 11th inst. of consumption, after a long illness. Mr. Staples was a most estimable citizen, and much respected by all who knew him.

The Independent Democrats of York are about organizing for future operations. Some of them, who were reluctance to vote the straight republican election, are now openly declared. Like the Romans of old, they intend to carry the war into Africa.

Over 1700 short lobsters have been seized by Maine authorities during the last two months, and it is evident that there is a systematized method in vogue with the dealers, by which the detection of the shipper is avoided. A tag is tacked on the barrel bearing the address of New York firms, while on the reverse of the tag may be found "xx" or "999" or some other private mark to designate the shipper, and no other mark is found to show who he may be.

Frederick H. Moore of Washington, D. C., who died at Nashua on the 7th, was a brother of Hon. O. C. Moore, congressman-elect in the second district. He was educated at Phillips academy, studied law, but drifted into journalism and founded the Manchester Mirror. He was associated with Abraham Lincoln on the Springfield (Ills.) Journal, and with M. M. Pomeroy founded the Democrat at La Crosse, Wis. When the republican party was formed he and Pomeroy separated, not being in political harmony.

A brilliant social event took place at Concord Saturday night, in the shape of a Kate Greenaway tea party at the Eagle hotel. It was a perfect success and an elegant affair, being arranged and promoted by three well known society ladies. The beneficiary, the Guild of St. Paul, will receive a handsome addition to its treasury.

One Fact

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

Portsmouth, intensely local, interesting beyond comparison to every lover of the old Portsmouth which was the home of his childhood or to which he has become attached by years of adopted sonship, is Brewster's Rambles about Portsmouth. The chapters are all delightfully-told stories, perused with like interest by young and old, containing facts that had been extensely quoted by historians and some in poetic verse by such poets as Longfellow, Aldrich and Laighton. Our neighbor, L. W. Brewster of the Journal, who is the publisher of the book, has it for sale at his office. It is just the thing for a holiday present.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—A resolution was agreed to, calling on the secretary of the interior for a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of the commission to obtain consent of the Sioux Indians for opening their reservation.

The senate then resumed consideration of the tariff bill, the pending question being the amendment offered by Mr. Coke to admit cotton ties, etc., at the rate of 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. Vance criticised the senate substitute and declared that it was arranged "without the slightest regard on the face of the earth to the interests of the agricultural classes."

At this point Mr. Riddleberger rose to a point of order.

Mr. Vance I do not care what the senator from Virginia rises to. I decline to be interrupted. I hope he will not be permitted to interrupt me any more.

The presiding officer, Mr. Berry, in the chair—The senator from Virginia will state his point of order.

Mr. Riddleberger—I will do so when the senator from North Carolina (Vance) takes his seat.

Mr. Riddleberger continued for some time to interrupt Mr. Vance, when finally the presiding officer remarked: "If the senator from Virginia does not take his seat the Chair will call on the executive officer of the senate to enforce its rules."

Mr. Vance then finished his argument without further interruption.

Jones of Arkansas, Dawes of Massachusetts, Vest and Hiscock followed him, and the discussion drifted into a question of rates, duty and profits on manufactured structural iron.

Various other amendments were proposed, which were all voted down.

Mr. Riddleberger offered the following resolution which under the rules went over till tomorrow:

Resolved—That the senate proceed to re-organization by the election of its officers on the first day of the session after the first day of January, 1889.

Mr. Edmunds offered a resolution (agreed to) directing the secretary of the senate to mail to the governor of each state printed copies of the acts of February 2d, 1887, and of October 19th, 1888 respecting the meetings of presidential electors, and the transmission of and the counting of electoral votes.

Mr. Mitchell introduced a bill which was referred, for the admission of Idaho, after which the senate proceeded to executive business, and adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—After discussion of amendments to land bill and after an hour had been consumed in an effort to secure a quorum the amendment was rejected, 38 to 129.

Payson of Illinois offered an amendment providing that the right of honorably discharged Union soldiers to make homes on public lands under existing homestead laws shall not, in any degree, be impaired by the bill, and that their rights under those laws extend to lands open to settlement under its provisions. The amendment was supported by Henderson of Illinois, Payson of Illinois, Cutcheon of Michigan, and opposed by Springer of Illinois, Weaver of Iowa, Warner of Missouri, and Peters and Perkins of Kansas.

Without action the committee rose, and Dockery, the retiring chairman, called Butterworth to preside as speaker. This was a signal for a round of applause from both sides of the chamber, which was renewed when Dockery in making his report addressed Butterworth as "Mr. Speaker."

The House then at 5 o'clock adjourned, and a democratic caucus for tonight was announced.

Dist. Atty. Sellers declines to withdraw his Resignation.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Attorney General Garland received a telegram from U. S. Dist. Attorney Sellers at Indianapolis declining to withdraw his resignation. The President and Attorney General are very much dissatisfied, and intimated that he may be dismissed instead of being allowed to resign.

INVESTIGATING THE RIOT.

The Mayor Testifies that the Mob had Repeated Warnings.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 13.—The Coroner's Jury today began investigating the shooting at the County Jail Saturday night last; Mayor Thompson was the only witness examined. He testified that the crowd continued to advance on the jail after repeated warnings given by himself, the sheriff and many others. The crowd made many threats, and he believed they were in earnest. He heard considerable talk of dynamite. Could not say whether first shot was fired by officers or crowd. He had given orders to hold jail at all hazards. Did not call out our military because believed civil authorities could hold the jail, and was opposed to use of the military save as a last resort. He had intended to bring the officers out of the jail and make attempt to drive the crowd back from the alleyway, but got cut off from jail and could not get back.

The Democrats Make the Best Of the Inevitable.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—The House democratic caucus tonight after a session lasting over three hours adopted a resolution for the admission into the Union of Dakota either as one or two states, as the people of Dakota shall decide, and for the admission as states of Washington, Montana and New Mexico. It is proposed that these states shall be admitted by one bill to be considered in the house as early as possible. Utah, although not mentioned in the resolution, it was agreed should be admitted, but by a separate bill.

Would Have Free Hotels.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—A large delegation from the American Sabbath Convention had a hearing this morning before the committee on education and labor, which has before it a bill introduced last May by Mr. Blair "to secure to the people the enjoyment of the first day of the week as a day of rest, and to promote its observance as a day of religious worship."

Rev. W. E. Crafts of New York presented Cardinal Gibbons' letter, and stated that the petitions for the passage of the bill represented 14,000,000 persons. A. S. Diven, formerly vice-president of the Erie railroad company, claimed that Sunday trains could be abolished without injury either to the railroad companies or to the people. As to transcontinental trains, he would have lie-over stations where the passengers could spend Sunday, the railroad companies furnishing free hotel accomodations.

A new Connection for the Boston & Maine.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS., Dec. 13. Preliminary surveys are being made through Berkshire county, for an Eastern extension of the New York and Massachusetts railway from Ancram lead mines through Hillsdale, N. Y., South Egremont, Great Barrington, Housatonic, South Lee, Tyringham, West Otis and Westfield to Chicopee, there connecting with the Boston & Maine railroad. The intention is to complete the road in a year. It will give a direct connection with the Pennsylvania coal fields via Poughkeepsie bridge.

Resigning in Favor of Republicans.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Postmaster-General Dickinson today said that he had received the resignations of many presidential and fourth-class postmasters, with the request that republicans whom they name and recommend be appointed in their places. Others have written asking whether their resignations and recommendations of republican sucessors would receive faverable action. No resignations had been or would be accepted that are made for the purpose of forestalling the action of the incoming administration by appointment.

A. F. of L. vs K. of L.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 13.—At the third day's session of the American Federation of Labor, the matter of the admission of Thomas Shaw of Boston, from the Amalgamated Association of Carpenters and Joiners of America was settled. The Brotherhood of Carpenters objected. The precedent was thus set that no two organizations in any one trade can be received into the federation. This looks like a declaration of war upon the Knights of Labor.

Another Long Lease.

AUGUSTA, ME., Dec. 13.—The directors of the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad have executed a 999-years lease of the road to the Maine Central, at an annual rental of $13,800.

Harrison and Morton Hobnobbing Together.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 13.—The people of Indiana had several opportunities today to get a good look at the republican ticket as Gen. Harrison and Mr. Morton took a walk about 10:30. They crossed from Delaware to Meridian Street, the first resident street in the city, and walked northward away from the business section, returning on the opposite side of the street. While their husbands were walking Mrs. Harrison took Mrs. Morton out in the family carriage for a drive about the city. They visited the art exhibit and pottery show at the residence of Mrs. Mylo Ritzinger; both ladies purchased a couple of small souvenirs. Mrs. McKee accompanied them. In the afternoon and evening there were many callers at Gen. Harrison's residence; great majority of purely social character. Among prominent politicians who called were Chairman Huston, Hon. John C. New, Rev. Ira J. Chase, Lieut. Governor-Elect; and a number of well known society ladies of the city paid their respects to Mrs. Morton, Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. McKee, this afternoon and this evening. Mr. Morton sent word to the board of trade committee that Mrs. Morton and himself cordially accepted the tender of a public reception at the hands of the citizens of Indianapolis, regardless of politics. He had invited General and Mrs. Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. McKee and Mr. Halford and wife to receive with himself and Mrs. Morton. The committee called at the rooms of Gov. Gray to receive his reply to request for use of the Governor's elegant reception rooms on main floor of the Capitol, and were informed by Pierre Gray, the son and private secretary of the Governor, that the latter had departed early in the morning for Logansport without having left any instructions. The committee left the Capitol in a very ruffled frame of mind. The committee secured Thompson's hall, the property of the city, and the reception will take place there from 8 to 10 P. M. Friday night. Mr. Morton expects to start for home on Saturday, but the members of Gen. Harrison's family say the guests will be prevailed upon to remain over Sunday at least, and longer if possible.

The Parnell Commission.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Before the Parnell commission today, a man named Buckley testified that he was sworn into the Fenian Brotherhood in 1882. A man named Roache was expelled from the league for giving information to the police which led to the arrest of several members of the league. A meeting of the league arranged that witness with Fitzgerald and Phenix should shoot Roache. The men followed Roache, but found no opportunity to shoot him. At another meeting witness agreed to shoot Roache if the league provided him with funds to escape to America. Witness was given a revolver and 24 cartridges, and advised to practice, which he did. He afterward met Roache driving cattle and attempted to shoot him. He pulled the trigger three times, but the weapon missed fire. Roache then bolted. Witness was arrested, and according to pre-arrangement, witnesses swore he was at Dean's house when the attempt was made, and he was released. The league paid witness two pounds ten shillings to go to America, and he was told he could not expect more in view of his failure to shoot Roache.

HAYTI.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK Dec. 13.—It was officially announced at the Haytien consul's office today that Consul Bassett had been removed and Vice-Consul Stapleton has been promoted to the consulship. In explanation of Mr. Bassett's removal, Minister Preston said the present government of Hayti wanted a man more in sympathy with its policy. Mr. Preston said he did not anticipate any trouble between this country and Hayti. As soon as the Galena and Yantic reach their destination he thought the existing misunderstanding would be amicably arranged.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S

NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty-six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10¼x14¼. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12.50; tree calf, $12.50; English-seal style, $9.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver letering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edged. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the base and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

FRIDAY, DEC. 14, 1888.

The Boston Journal says that the government has already taken steps to recognize the bravery of Captain Joshua James and his associates in the rescue of shipwrecked men along the South Shore during the great storm in November. Collector Saltonstall laid before Secretary Fairchild of the treasury the facts relating to the rescue, and suggested the propriety of taking official recognition of the brave deeds. On Thursday Collector Saltonstall received from Secretary Fairchild a request for an official statement from the Massachusetts Humane Society of the services rendered by the volunteers. The secretary pledged himself to promptly consider the proposition as soon as he received this statement. It is thought that the secretary will recommend the award of medals by the United States government, with perhaps a consideration in money.

The Tariff League dinner at Delmonico's, New York, January 17, bids fair to be the most notable affair of the kind ever given in that city. Hon. William McKinley, Hon. Thomas B. Reed, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew and Hon. Warner Miller have consented to be present and respond to toasts. It is also probable that Hon. W. W. Morrow of California and J. F. Hanson of Georgia will be present to represent respectively, the Pacific coast and the industrial South.

Representative McKinney joined the Southern democrats in opposing the direct tax bill by which the state of New Hampshire would receive back $185,000 paid the national government in 1861-2. Of course the ex-rebels didn't want the loyal states reimbursed for the money advanced, and Mr. McKinney, true to his faith, danced while the confederate generals in the house piped.

The secretary of the state of Tennessee has set himself up as a bigger man than Governor Taylor. The latter has signed the certificate of election of Mr. Evans, the republican candidate for congress in the 3d district, but Secretary of State Allison has refused to affix the state seal. Mr. Evans will get into the House all the same, and represent the district from which he was elected.

The growth of Republicanism in West Virginia is illustrated by these figures. The State is as certain for the Republican nominees in 1892 as New Hampshire.

Congressman McKinney of New Hampshire says he is undecided as to whether he shall continue in politics or seek another pulpit.—Boston Traveller.

The question has been decided for him, that is if he remains in New Hampshire. He had better take a pulpit if he can find one.

A member of the British parliament, in reply to inquiry by an Englishman in the United States, says the report that British workmen were taxed to supply funds for Cleveland's campaign is "false and ridiculous."

The Russian cabinet is considering a new law which will compel foreigners who have lived in that country five years to become Russian subjects or be expelled.

Who was so proud! Her eyes were soft,
And turned to his with languor glance full oft;
And when his tired head within put her out
Her pretty lips were all too prone to pout;
He longed to kiss them—love had made him mad—

But did not dare.

One morn he met her on the way to school,
The hour was late.
But wait he would not, could not. Thus he sighed:
"Sweet maid, I prithee, be my beauteous bride!
Already hast thou marked, nor need I tell,
That I have loved thee long and passing well;
Nor time nor absence can my passion cool;
Let's conjugate!"

"Ah!" with arch modesty replied the fair:
"That would be fine;
But 'tis impossible, for, as you know'st,
Small stock of learning can thy pupil boast
The first declension now absorbs my thought;
The verb I have not yet all been taught,
I cannot conjugate; all I may dare
Is to decline!"

—Walter Clarke in Table Talk.

A TUBE MADE WITH ROLLERS.

The Novel Process by Which Twist Steel Gun Barrels May be Made.

A new process of making steel tubes recently developed in England threatens to revolutionize the manufacture of gun barrels, at least from the smallest rifles up to the rapid-firing cannon of two or three inches bore used on war ships. By this process a solid bar or ingot of steel is passed through a set of rolls, and come out a tube with a twist fibre.

To fully understand the bearings of this new process it is necessary to know how gun barrels are ordinarily made. The rifle barrel is simply a bar of steel rolled out to the right size by passing it through grooved rolls. The bar is forced into the groove and compressed and drawn out, the groove being of less diameter than the ingot that is fed in. This process makes a fibre, but the fibre runs lengthwise of the bar, and is therefore less able to resist a bursting strain from within than if the fibre ran around the barrel. But the strength of the steel bar is great enough to resist the strain of a rifle cartridge, and most rifle barrels are made by this process.

In shotguns heavier charges of powder are used, and on the account of the size of the bore and the limit that must be put on the weight of the two barrels of which shotguns are made, thinner metal is required in the barrels, and therefore a tougher metal must be used. A good many shotgun barrels are made of plain rolled steel, but they are not trustworthy. To make a stronger barrel, the gunmaker piles up two ingots of the best puddled iron and two of the best steel, alternating the iron and the steel. These he rolls out into rods of a rectangular section of perhaps three-eighths of an inch, and then twists them into a spiral rod. Then several of the spiral rods are again rolled into one rectangular. The last rod made is wound in a spiral around a mandril, and its edge welded together so that it forms a tube with a bore of the size of the mandril. The mandril is then driven out, the tube bored out and turned down and straightened. It is then ready to be fitted to another, and the breech mechanism attached so as to make a complete set of gun barrels. Another method is to cast the barrels of steel under immense pressure. A cheaper twist grain barrel is made of iron only. The old-fashioned stubb and twist English barrel was made of old horseshoe nails. A still cheaper twist barrel is made by inserting one end of a square rod of steel in an immovable block and the other end in the end of a shaft, which, when turned by steam power, will twist the rod into a spiral one. This is then bored out.

Each of these processes, except the one producing the plain barrel with a longitudinal fibre and the last one mentioned, require a deal of hard labor. The last-mentioned process makes a poor fibre.

But the new process not only makes a fibre, but it makes one much superior to the fibre found even in the welded barrels, while the work is all done by the machine.

Three rolls of a canoidal shape are so placed that a rod or ingot may be fed lengthwise between them. One end of each roll being larger than the other, it follows that the surface of the big end of a roll travels faster than the surface at the small end. When, therefore, a bar of steel in a plastic state is fed in at the smaller end of the rolls, it is not only whirled around, but the forward end is whirled with increasing speed as well as twisted around. The surfaces of the canoidal rolls being parallel with each other, there is no decrease in the circumference of the bar, and so it happens that the metal needed for the increasing length of bar is drawn from its axis. It is as if a bar of plastic metal were whirled on its axis until the centrifugal force caused it to expand into a larger bar with a hole for an axis.

In actual practice a mandril is driven into the opening tube as the bar is whirled into the shape of a tube. The mandril is used not to make the hole, but to perfect it. The tube thus formed is not only the best, but it is just about as cheap as any for gun barrels.

The process has been partly understood for some time, but iron masters of experience doubted its practical development, so that it was not adopted in practice by any one until within a few months. The result of the new process is sure to be the lowering of the cost, and probably the price, of first-class guns, as well as of those of other grades.

Latest in Mosquitoes.

A new brand of mosquito has appeared in New Jersey and taken complete possession, to the exclusion of all the old varieties. It is larger and more healthy than the old ones and has plain gray legs without any stripes. It seems to have a "sticker" in each of its feet and an additional one in its head. It can hold a very large quantity of blood, and it does not drop off the skin when it is full. It is estimated by competent authority that several million are born every minute, notwithstanding the cold weather. When the cool wave first came all of the old variety emigrated for the South. There was an unusually large crop of them this year, but the new variety outnumbers the old at least two to one, and, in consequence, life near any of the Jersey salt meadows is almost unendurable. The new insect is more vicious than the old and does most of its work in broad daylight. The old ones worked mostly by night. Scientific men are trapping several thousand of the new variety and will keep them in glass cases until they die, when an effort will be made to ascertain to what particular tribe they belong and how many "stickers" they have together with other interesting information.—New York Sun.

Worth Living Without It.

Englishmen, and still more Englishwomen, are by habit so didactic, so much given to utter thoughts graver than their real opinions, that to find the head of a great female college defending gossip comes on one with a shock of surprise, says the London Spectator. It is as if one had stumbled in a copy book over the text, under the letter "C," "Chat is the current coin of conversational capital." Miss Gladstone, however, the principal of North Hall, Newnham, evidently intended to do it when on Thursday week she related her little story of the Newnham student's debate.

The subject set for discussion in the debating society was whether life was worth living without gossip; and the girls, after an animated controversy, decided almost unanimously that it was not. Miss Gladstone, speaking to the Association for Promoting the Education of Girls in Wales, smilingly defended their vote, and in spite of the nearly universal opinion of social moralists, we incline to suspect that she was right. Certainly she was, if by "gossip" we are to understand the pleasant chat which is one of its many meanings.

Easy conversation, sprinkled with allusions to persons, yet not confined to personalities, is one the intellectual enjoyments possible only to those who live under and share in a developed civilization. It is deliberation made piquant by brevity of speech and by an underlying knowledge assumed on all hands, which of itself indicates at once the cultivation and the equality of the talkers. The uneducated never gossip in this sense, they only narrate and argue; nor do those whose mental interests are confined to a very narrow circle.

To gossip well requires, indeed, a certain quickness of mind, a widish range of knowledge, however superficial, and a degree of tolerance for opposed opinions which is, if not impartiality, a very good substitute for it. No one whose mind creaks as it opens, by no means a rare peculiarity even with the able, can gossip pleasantly; nor can any one who is by nature intolerant of opposition. They say, for instance, we know not how truly, that rural Americans, the men at least, never gossip, and dislike those who do, just as English country folk dislike those who indulge in badinage.

The quickness of the give and take worries them with that sense of their own incompetence to keep up with it which once made an eminent bishop rebuke a jester with a discourse gently condoning "nimble mindedness." Such gossip frequently instructs, if only by compelling the speakers to reduce their thoughts to simple words and see how they look then, and it always lightens the mental atmosphere, making the mind feel freer, as the body feels in a rowing or cricketing dress. Discussion in undress—and that is what Miss Gladstone meant by gossip—is, in fact, a mental stimulant, the healthier for its comparative freedom from mental alcohol.

It is not very nourishing, perhaps, but neither is tea; yet the taste for tea, especially a taste that can distinguish qualities, is a sure sign of an unvitiated palate. It was of a matter of gossip rather than of an intellectual talker that a lady declared she liked him exceedingly, but would not marry him.

"It would," she said, "be like drinking fine coffee all day." That is, perhaps, its truest analogue in the material world, and fine coffee is not only pleasant but in certain states of the body, particularly when it is a little worn out or chilled to helplessness, a most beneficial thing.

It Was all About Isaac.

The daughter of a clergyman in this vicinity, who had learned to read fairly well, recently asked her father's permission to read aloud the Bible to a poor, old, bed-ridden woman, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. Permission was granted, and once or twice a week the little girl took her Bible and read a chapter to the aged invalid.

A week or so passed, and the clergyman himself paid a call upon the old woman, and before he left he asked her how his daughter progressed as a reader of holy writ. The old woman replied enthusiastically that the child was an angel, and had read her some beautiful passages in the life of Isaac.

About a month later, the reading of the Bible having been continued under the same auspices, the clergyman once more called upon the old woman. Naturally he repeated his inquiry as to his little daughter's reading and was very much surprised when the old woman replied: "Well, she reads very nicely, sir, but I'm getting a little tired of hearing about Isaac."

"Doesn't she read from other parts of the Bible?" the good minister asked, for he was puzzled.

"It may be other parts, sir, but it do be all about Isaac," the old woman made answer.

As soon as he reached home the clergyman called his youngest daughter to him and asked her why she had such a preference for the history of Abraham and Sarah's first-born. Without the least hesitation the child replied: "You see, papa, I can't read very well yet, and those long names do bother me so that I thought old Mrs. Brown wouldn't mind if I called all the men Isaac, and that's why."

So by this simple plan Jehosaphat Jeroboam and Nebuchadnezzar and Melchisedec and all the rest of the polysyllable surnames had been transformed into the simple and easy cognomen of the second of the patriarchs.

One of Storrs' Repartees.

There is a repartee perpetuated by the late Emery Storrs that has never appeared in print. A case was on trial in which there was a suit against a physician for malpractice, in having administered an overdose of aconite. John Van Arnam and Storrs were the opposing counsel.

Every lawyer of a few years ago knew Van Arnam. He was very peculiar. He was not particular as to his personal appearance. He smoked an ancient pipe, and was pervaded with the odor of stale nicotine. He was far from inviting in his dress, complexion, or otherwise.

A toxicologist was on the stand, and Van Arnam was questioning him as to the nature of the drug and its effects. Finally he queried:

"You have told us about its effects when taken inwardly; now what is its nature as a lotion?" What, for instance would be the effect on my feet if I were to put them in aconite?"

"One moment, doctor," said Storrs, as he sprang up; "before you answer what would be the effect on Mr. Van Arnam's feet I wish you would tell the jury what would be the effect on the aconite?"—Chicago Globe.

An egg merchant, who goes from house to house buying eggs, told us a few days since, that he expected to have to pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs before Christmas.

This is remarkable, when we reflect that the poultry industry of this country last year amounted to nearly seven hundred million dollars; and even then, we had to import several million dollars worth of foreign eggs. Our own egg-raisers ought to have this money. The demand for fresh eggs for food alone far exceeds the supply. At fifty cents per dozen eggs are as cheap as beefsteak for food. Many persons who keep hens will probably not have an egg to sell when they reach fifty cents. Some one may ask, "what can a body do, when the pesky old hens stop laying, and the pullets refuse to begin until spring?" Why do as Wm. H. Yeomans, of Columbia, Conn., editor of the Germantown Telegraph did last winter. He says: "Last fall I made an experiment worth giving our readers. Until about Dec. 1st, I was getting from twenty common hens, only one or two eggs a day. I decided to try Sheridan's Condition Powder. I confess I had but little faith in its value to make hens lay. Commenced feeding, and for nine days saw very little effect. Then the hens began laying and in three months laid 858 eggs. Part of the time the thermometer was 12 degrees below zero, and my hens were laying a dozen eggs a day, while my neighbors (who did not use the powder) were getting none. I now, without hesitation, believe it is a valuable aid to farmers for egg-production." Well might he believe, for nearly 72 dozen eggs, in three months, from twenty common hens, with eggs worth 50 cents, is worth having. I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., (the only makers of Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay,) will send, postpaid to any person, two 25 cent packs of powder, and a new Poultry Raising Guide, for 60 cents. The book alone costs 25 cents. For $1.00 five packs of powder and a book; for $1.20 a large 2 1-4 pound can and book; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send stamps or cash. Interesting testimonials sent free. adv

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. non,wed,fri,eoj1

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush on the druggists still continues and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to give entire satisfaction. Price 50c. and $1. Trial size free. dec30

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the Balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle today to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at all druggists. I was down near the lower railroad bridge at Niagara Falls, having a couple of boys with me, when a hackman drove up and offered to take us down and show us the whirlpool, a mile below, and return us to the bridge for half a dollar each. When this offer was declined he said he would take the three of us for $1, and we got into his carriage. He drove down to the Whirlpool House, and as we got out I saw a sign reading: "Fifty cents to go down to the whirlpool."

"You agreed to bring us down and show us the whirlpool," I said to the hackman.

"Well, it's down those stairs."

"But I don't propose to pay 50 cents to go down there."

"Then you won't see it."

"And you won't get your dollar!"

"Won't I? Come, I am ready to take you back."

"But we are not ready to go. You lied to us, and I refuse to pay you a cent."

"You either pay or I'll make jelly of you!"

"Come and try it!"

He did not accept the invitation, but drove off up-town, and a stranger said to me:

"He has gone for a crowd, and you will be lucky to get off alive. It's a shamefaced swindle, of course, and here are a dozen of us who have been played the same way, but what can we do about it?"

"You can kick against the gang."

"Yes, but we'd get the worst of it. They are a bad lot. You'd better send the fellow his money."

"I'll be hanged if I do!"

As we started up the river on foot a dozen men followed to see the fun. When we reached the end of the street-car track a mob of fourteen hackmen received us. The one who lied to us demanded his dollar. I refused to pay it. He called to his mob to come on, and I backed up to the building, leveled a revolver at the crowd and waited. They didn't come on worth a cent. They didn't care for a dollar just then. One by one they slunk away, while I took the car back to the Falls. The leader tried to get me arrested for carrying a deadly weapon, but no one would issue a warrant. One justice told him in my hearing:

"Every man coming to visit the Falls ought to come with two revolvers, and the offender he fires into your crowd the better it will be for the honest people here. I wish more kickers would come here.—M Quad, in Detroit Free Press.

How the Invalid Looks at Things.

The invalid, like the poet, and like all acute, sensitive beings, is remarkable for not seeing differently, but for seeing more than do the rest of the world. He endows everything about him with personality. Cold, hard substances are his avowed enemies. The soft, the yielding, the woolly, fill him with gratitude and delight. The arm-chair invites and embraces him. The tiny teapot and ewer are eager to do him service, and the gruel bowl displays a fairly maternal solicitude. His cane is a Fidus Achates, his pet pillow a Nancy, or whatever his childhood's nurse was named. As to the bottles arranged on his table, only the doctors who prescribed them can surpass their individual interest in their charge. A glow of genuine affection fills me when I glance at Tonic, so many times has he proved worthy of the confidence reposed in him when the "lamp of life burned low." Liniment's unctuous sides are nearly bursting with officious good-nature. Fine Old Bourbon has an irresistible bacchanalian leer. Stout Camphor needs only spectacles and a bag to make an old fogy of him. Sly little Morphine, hiding behind the rest, has a singular, suggestive, Mephistophelian look, which at once attracts and repels.—A. B. Ward, in Harper's Magazine.

A peculiar accident happened recently at Bowman, Ga. A seven-year-old boy, while playing in a cotton gin, was caught in the shafting and horribly, probably fatally mangled. Two hours later a young man went to see how the accident happened, and while examining the gin was caught by the same shafting at the same place. His hand was torn to pieces and his arm was broken in three places.

The Oxidized Silver Craze,

The oxidized silver ornament, principally for ladies' wear, is now on regle. Gold is put aside in many articles of display to be supplanted by the tarnished grosser metal.

"The idea was originally imported from France, and it has taken about a year for it to obtain a favorable footing in America," said a leading Madison street dealer. "A vast amount of it is manufactured in America, however, and the home designs are preferable. They are more unique and catchy—more of the American dash in them. There is a stiffness and solidity about the imported articles that do not comport with the sensational character of the material. There is little difference in the prices of the imported and home manufactured goods. We are using the metal for almost every purpose from a glove button to a watch with a $40 Swiss movement—opera glasses elegantly mounted, stocks for ladies' parasols, shoe-horns, chatelaine, pendants and charms for ladies' watches, garter buckles, combs and brushes, powder boxes, pencils and purses—every conceivable article of the character indicated."

There appeared to be no limit to the extravagance of design. In ladies' brooches the artist seems to have gone to the wildest extreme. Ferocious-looking dragons' heads are made to peep out beneath a pretty chin, and snarling dogs grin as no dog, be he ever so vicious, ever grinned before. The glove-buttoner affords a field for some odd displays. The little handle curls up in the form of a maple or willow leaf. On the inner surface and sometimes peeping out from under the coil is a diminutive alligator or ugly-looking bug—the uglier the better. No inebriate asylum was ever peopled with more extraordinary and fiendish-looking conceptions than the jeweler has materialized out of oxidized silver.

There is a counterfeit, of course. It is on a German silver body, plated with genuine silver and then oxidized. The process is the same. The spurious can only be detected by the tame design and lack of finish.

The manner of manufacture is simple and inexpensive. The article is modeled and engraved and placed in a furnace. Then it is heated to a certain temperature, when a spray of pure oxygen is thrown upon it. The work is then complete. Silver is susceptible to the effects of oxygen more than any other metal. That is why silver tarnishes so readily when exposed to the atmosphere.—Chicago Herald.

China News says: "The other day when riding into the city from the country I saw a strange sight indeed—let us call it cremation as practiced by the Chinese.

"On the occasion referred to, in the midst of so much that was beautiful, appeared a sight most horrid and revolting. On a slight mound between the path and the lake lay a man on his back. Round his head and the upper part of his body a little wood and straw were placed, which when I rode up, were already in a blaze. The burning was being superintended by one man only, whose courage I was told was 'very great.' Although there were many passengers-by no one seemed to think much of what was going on. I rode nearer to make inquiries. The man, they said, was a Tartar, and he had only died the day before. Judging by the appearance of what was left of him I should think he was between 20 and 30 years of age. It was truly an awful sight. Beginning at his head the intention evidently was to burn him inch by inch to his toes. But, worst of all, the heat of the fire, combined with the intense heat of a noontide August sun, had caused his body to swell.

"Even from the path the dreadful state of the man's body could be distinctly seen. The only persons looking on in addition to the man, who, truly with 'great courage,' was stirring up the fire, were two men and a boy, who holding their noses, surveyed the scene from a distance. I ought to have mentioned that the man lay upon his back, with one arm raised, pointing to the clear, blue sky. I am told that when those so lately dead are exposed to the heat of the fire their muscles contract and the bodies assume all kinds of strange attitudes. Sometimes a man will be raised almost to a sitting posture. As the cremations are very frequent and generally on the same spot there would be little difficulty in bringing some of the offenders to justice and thus putting an end to these inhuman and barbarous spectacles."

She Dined With a King.

To dine with the king of Siam was the rare privilege of an Allegheny county lady recently. Miss Kate N. Fleeson, of Neville island, was the lucky guest, and letters have just been received by her friends giving an account of the royal feast. Miss Fleeson left Pittsburg a year ago next month as a Presbyterian missionary to the far-away land. It required almost seven months continual traveling before she reached Lakawan, her destination in Siam.

It appears that both the king and queen regard protestant missionaries with favor, and the evangelistic work in their domains has received many marks of imperial favor. Miss Fleeson, with several other missionaries, was in Chieng Nai about the middle of June, several days before she came to the end of her journey. The king's invitation to the party to dine in his new summer palace was conveyed by the queen. It was accepted, and it was understood that it would be nothing more than an informal dinner.

When the party entered the palace they were shown to the general reception chamber and were seated on divans upholstered with Persian rugs. Drinking mugs of gold and silver were then given each visitor and these were quickly followed by a waiter bearing a solid gold chest filled with "betel." This the guests could not eat, and the attendants, seeing their embarrassment, brought them tea in china cups and saucers.

Then they were introduced to the king. He is a charming old gentleman, dressed in pure white, with gold and purple trimmings. He led the way to the banquet hall. The table was beautiful with silverware of costliest designs and cut-glass vessels. The dinner was a good American meal, but it was quite extensive, being served in twenty courses. A conversation was conducted by the king in a formal manner. After the repast his highness summoned the palace acrobats to the stage at the threshold of the adjoining room. They performed skillful tricks and feats for the next hour. Miss Fleeson describes this part of the entertainment as being somewhat of a bore.

Miss Fleeson had another treat in the shape of an elephant ride from Chieng Nai to Lakawn. It lasted three days and was through a very wild section of Siam. They tented in the woods at night. There were five elephants in the train, and the young lady says the swaying and rocking was not unlike that of a ship at sea. There were many high mountains to climb, and general surprise was expressed at the easy way in which the big elephants accomplished the task.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Wanted His Reward on Earth.

Just as a friend of ours, who lives in Winslow, had completed a watering trough by the roadside and stood watching it as it filled with clear, cool water from the spring above an elderly couple, of well-to-do appearance, stopped for their horse to drink. Noting the delight of the animal and realizing the benefit of the contrivance to the public, the lady remarked to Mr. D——: "The Lord will reward you for this." "I have no doubt of it, madam," said D——, with a low bow and a twinkle in his eye, "but I shall make out my bill to the Selectmen."—Waterville (Me.) Mail.

Nothing Dropped.

The man this will tell you about is a short, thick-set individual, wearing whiskers and having the general appearance of a farmer who had just come into an inheritance, says The Ashland (Wis.) News. He walked into the office with a careful, measured walk, as if the printing-office smell was going to contaminate him.

He wanted to stop his paper.

As he uttered the words to that effect he looked majestically at the business manager and waited for that gentleman to ask him to consider ere he took this disastrous step. He looked longingly into the faces of the various members of the staff to see them drop dead to the floor or become hysterical. But no. The managing editor was deeply perusing an article entitled "Joys of Journalism," the reporters' pencils glided on swiftly over the paper; the type clicked regularly in the composition "sticks;" the bookkeeper was adding up a column of figures six in a row; the engine in the basement kept on running.

"There's just two dollars due on your account," said the b. m., not a muscle of his face moving.

The short, thick-set man now is compelled to buy the morning paper of the ragged newsboy on the corner, who needs the money as badly as does the publisher.

FRIDAY, DEC. 14, 1888.

A BRILLIANT RECEPTION.

The social event of this week—in fact of the season thus far—was the reception given last evening by Rev. Alfred Gooding, minister of the South Parish, and wife, to the members of the parish, at their handsome residence, No. 10 Middle Street. The hours of the reception were from eight to ten o'clock, and during that time the parlors were thronged with some of our best known society people. The guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Gooding, and everybody was instantly charmed by the graceful manner with which they were received and the desire to make them feel at home. The house was billiantly lighted and was thrown open to the guests, and sociability and good cheer reigned supreme. The refreshments were served in the large dining room, and could not have been excelled. The coffee table was charmingly presided over by Miss Carrie Treadwell and Miss Edith Burbank.

Among those present were Capt. and Mrs. Dwight, Mrs. Cushman-Tilton, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Winchester, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Parsons, Mrs. Richter, Miss Gerry and Miss Emery of Portland, Mrs. T. M. Ball, Mrs. Jas. W. Emery, Miss French, Col. and Mrs. Sise, Miss Sise, Dr. Blaisdell, Dr. and Mrs. Jewett, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Peirce, Mrs. Joseph Sise, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Mendum, Mr. W. W. Cotton and Miss Cotton, Capt. and Mrs. J. G. Moses, Mrs. Winder, Miss Goodwin, Miss Morgan, Miss Foster and Miss Elizabeth Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Morss, Lieut. Winder, W. Scott Smith, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Seavey, Mr. Wm. H. Collins, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Hackett, Mrs. Wadham, Miss Pray, Miss Edith Gerrish, Mrs. Vennard and Miss Vennard, Miss Julia Pray, Miss Helen Gerrish, Mrs. Burbank and Miss Burbank, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Laighton, Mrs. Wm. D. Grace, Mrs. Harlow, Mrs. Joseph P. Morse, Mrs. Craig and the Misses Craig, Mr. and Mrs. I. P. Miller, Mrs. Pearson and Miss Helen Pearson, Mrs. Thos. Harris, Mrs. Samuel P. Long, Miss Ann Philbrick, the Misses Toscan, Mr. Thos. Neil and Miss Neil, Mr. Harry Yates, Miss Adele Yates, Miss Lucy Sise, Mrs. John Sise, Mr. Mark Wentworth and Miss Wentworth.

PERSONAL.

—Mrs. Kate E. Miller and Mrs. E. P. Seavey, of Lincoln Hill cottage, have taken rooms at Mrs. Craig's, on Summer street, for the winter; Mrs. M. A. Brooks will pass the winter in Newtonville, Mass.

—Mr. Joseph Peirce, of the Boston custom house force, is in this city on a visit to his sister.

—Miss Kate P. Johnson of Rye road is visiting Mrs. William Powers of Maplewood, Mass.

MUSIC HALL.

This evening, at Music hall, that most pleasing and artistic Irish comedy-drama, "Dan Darcy," will be presented under the management of Mr. John M. Hill, with Mr. James C. Roach, who has "made" the character of Dan Darcy, in the title role. The character is unique, there being little of the old-time "stage Irishman" left in it, beyond his honesty of purpose and his ready wit and keen sense of humor. The company is a strong one, and fully competent to make the most of the drama. Tickets at Goodrich's.

At the regular weekly meeting of Rockingham Lodge of Good Templars on Wednesday evening of this week, Mr. Burpee Wood and wife, who have recently embarked on the sea of matrimony, were presented by the lodge with a dinner set, tea set and parlor lamp, and by individual members with a dozen silver knives and forks, a half-dozen silver teaspoons and half-dozen dessert spoons. At the close of the session a lunch was served.

MARITIME NOTES.

The schooner Willie Parkman, recently purchased by E. Newton & Co. and others of this city for the fishing business out of this port, sailed Thursday on her first winter fishing trip, under command of Capt. Thomas Jameson, with a crew of sixteen men, and carrying fourteen dories. Capt. Jameson is one of the oldest and most uniformly successful of our fishing skippers, and under his command the Willie Parkman, which is the second largest fishing schooner hailing from this port, (the Agnes E. Downs being larger,) will no doubt give a good account of herself when the balance is struck next spring.

The steamer Valora was on the marine railway at Kittery on Thursday, the 13th, comes off this (Friday) morning, and will today take to Boon island Capt. James Burke, the first assistant keeper, with his winter stock of stores.

The steamer James Sampson left this port for Portland, Me., Thursday morning, the 13th, in charge of Capt. Butterworth of Portland, who will command her during the winter in the lobster-transporting business between that port and the islands. Capt. Duncan, of the steamer Undine, went around in her as engineer, but returned in the evening to resume charge of the Undine.

The schooner Hattie Lewis, which has been engaged during the present season —and many previous ones—in transporting bricks from the Piscataqua to Boston, having ended her work for this year will sail this morning for Ellsworth, Me., where she will have a new stern put in and receive other needed repairs to put her in the best condition for the brick trade next spring.

The schooner Mollie Phillips, which was driven ashore in Fort Cove, Newcastle, during the great gale in November, and was afterward hauled off and placed on the railway at Kittery, came off the ways on Wednesday, the 12th inst., after being thoroughly repaired, as was supposed, but was found to still leak at the rate of four inches an hour. This was supposed to be due to an auger hole in which no treenail had been driven, and the schooner goes on the ways again today to remedy the trouble.

OBITUARY.

A delegation of foremen and mechanics employed at the navy yard on Thursday afternoon chartered a barge of Mr. Cottle of Kittery, and went to Eliot to attend the obsequies of Ansel Staples, late foreman boatbuilder at the yard. The foremen sent a handsome floral tribute.

The funeral of Sheridan Jenness, one of the best known citizens of Rye, took place Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from his late home, and was attended by many Portsmouth people.

The funeral services of Mrs. Frances Rutter were held at her late home, No. 1 Stark street, on the afternoon of the 12th, Rev. J. S. Harrington of the Pearl street church officiating; the interment was at Harmony Grove cemetery. Her son, the convicted murderer James Palmer, it is said was not informed of her death until after the funeral.

Railroad Meetings.

The stockholders of the York Harbor & Beach railroad at their recent annual meeting in York elected George C. Lord, Edward S. Marshall, John E. Staples, Samuel C. Lawrence, Frank Jones, Henry E. Evans and Joseph S. Ricker directors. The gross earnings of the road for the year ended Sept. 30, 1888, were $27,715.94 of which $22,402.51 was from passengers; the gross expenses were $18,966.99, leaving as surplus $8,748.95. The total number of passengers carried was 56,409, and the total number of tons of freight carried was 4,548.

At the annual meeting of the Eastern railroad stockholders in Boston on the 12th, Samuel C. Lawrence, Nathaniel J. Bradlee, Frank Jones, George O. Carpenter, Arthur Sewall, Henry D. Hyde, Joseph H. Gray, Walter Hunnewell and S. Endicott Peabody were elected directors for the ensuing year. The old board in their report express "regret that the bright prospects of a year ago have not been fulfilled, and that the results of the year's business have failed to meet the expectations which then seemed reasonable." The gross earnings of the Boston & Maine system for the year were shown to have been $13,110,798.13; gross expenses, $9,332, 921.31; interest and rentals, $3,159,387.48—leaving the net surplus at $618,489.34, which is $11,510.66 less than is required to pay the Boston & Maine dividend of nine per cent, which has to be paid before the Eastern railroad shareholders come in for a dividend.

Owing to difficulty in properly heating the several rooms at the Jones school on the 13th, the pupils in all the rooms excepting that of Principal Pickering were dismissed. Mr. Pickering managed to get his room warmed to a comfortable degree—no doubt to the disgust of the [illegible] granted to the pupils in the other rooms.

Mr. F. B. Jenness announces that his class of violin pupils is now forming. Those wishing to join will please leave orders at Stich Ban.

One of the notable institutions of Portsmouth, intensely local, interesting beyond comparison to every lover of the old Portsmouth which was the home of his childhood or to which he has become attached by years of adopted sonship, is Brewster's Rambles about Portsmouth. The chapters are all delightfully-told stories, perused with like interest by young and old, containing facts that had been extensely quoted by historians and some in poetic verse by such poets as Longfellow, Aldrich and Laighton. Our neighbor, L. W. Brewster of the Journal, who is the publisher of the book, has it for sale at his office. It is just the thing for a holiday present.

In at the Finish.

There is a story now circulating to the effect that a minister living not a hundred miles from Belfast attempted some missionary work Sunday on a few wicked horsemen who were speeding their trotters on the track. He drove out to the race course and found these sabbath breakers engaged in trotting one of the liveliest heats he had ever seen. He was interested in the race, but his zeal in saving these lost sheep was unshaken, and he drove on to the track to expostulate and plead with them. As they didn't evince any desire to stop and talk when they came round he started in pursuit, and, having a good nag, came into the finish a close second. We have been unable to get a summary of subsequent races, but, according to a Belfast horseman, the minister proved himself a cool driver and an opponent to be dreaded in a horse race.—Bangor Commercial.

The Original Cantilever.

A St. Louis boy who has been visiting Japan writes home about a wonderful bridge over there. He says: "The most unique bridge in Japan is the monkey bridge that one sees on the Kofukaido before reaching the town of Kofu. It spans a narrow chasm over a roaring stream, and is the first cantilever bridge in the world, antedating the Niagara patented novelty by the trifle of a century or more in years. Whether the Niagara engineers ever saw a picture of the famous monkey bridge, with its bracketed ends, is the question. The condescending tourist often, on seeing the photographs of this bridge exclaims: 'Why, that's a cantilever bridge. Have the Japanese taken that up so quickly? They took it up a century ago, however.'"

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

New Way — Old Way

Don't rub the dirt out of your clothes because your ancestors did. Keep up with the times. Try modern ideas for saving labor. James Pyle's PEARLINE leads all of those which pertain to cleanliness.

What is it that frays your collars, cuffs and skirts and pulls off the buttons and strings? What is it that ruins your paint? It's the old-fashioned way of rub, rub, rub, to make clean. PEARLINE does away with most of the rubbing, so it saves the worst of the wear.

You don't want an imitation, do you? Beware of them. PEARLINE is manufactured only by James Pyle, New York, notwithstanding the plausible stories told by peddlers and some grocers to the contrary.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—The senate was not in session today.

HOUSE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 14th.—Mr. Hooker of Mississippi introduced a concurrent resolution providing for a holiday recess from Friday, Dec. 21, until Monday, Jan. 7.

Mr. Clardy of Missouri moved that the House go into committee of the whole on the private calendar for the further consideration of the Nicaragua Canal bill, and pending this motion moved that all debates on the bill and amendments thereto be limited to 40 minutes.

Mr. Blount of Georgia raised a point of order against the latter motion, contending that debate could be limited only on a specified section of the bill and not upon the entire measure. This point was discussed at considerable length, a difficulty arising from the fact that on Friday last the bill was considered in a very irregular manner, amendments being offered to all the sections indiscriminately, instead of being offered to each section consecutively.

A lively discussion arose in the house this afternoon based on an article in a New York paper declaring that there were two elements united against the Nicaragua canal bill,—the agents of the Pacific railroads and the attorneys of the Panama canal,—containing an interview with Judge Daley on the subject, and intimating that the gentlemen (naming them) who offered amendments to the bill did so for the purpose of defeating the measure.

Messrs. Wilson, Bland of Missouri, Cobb of Alabama, and Spinola of New York indignantly denied being influenced in their action in offering amendments by any purpose except a desire to perfect the measure, and the latter referred to Judge Daly as a man who since his retirement from the bench had been connected with breezy enterprises.

Mr. Cox of New York paid a warm eulogy to Judge Daly's integrity, and in an emphatic manner denied the charge that he was a lobbyist.

A resolution was introduced by Mr. Payson that the bill be debated in sections and that speeches on first section be limited to 30 minutes; it was adopted and the house went into committee of the whole on the bill.

Mr. Payson offered an amendment providing that all shares, stocks, bonds, certificates and other securities shall be issued from the principal office in New York and shall be disposed of only for cash. The amendment was defeated by a tie vote, but it was agreed that a vot should be taken in the house. Mr. Spinola offered an amendment limiting the capital stock to $100,000,000, and the amendment was supported by Payson, and opposed by Bayne of Pennsylvania, who in the course of his remarks declared that the bill would be passed this session if it took every Friday.

The committee then rose and after an hour and half spent in a vain effort to secure a quorum upon the proposition to limit a debate, the house at 4:30 took a recess until 7:30. The house remained in session an hour this evening, the time being principally consumed in an effort to settle upon some method of procedure for the consideration of private pension bills, but as no agreement could be arrived at, the house adjourned until Monday.

Business to be Done This Session.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—Prominent members of the house express the opinion that little else than the appropriation bills and possibly the bill for admission of the territories agreed in caucus, will pass the house this session.

THE REPORT ABOUT MR BLAINE.

Mr. Dingley's Opinion.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, D. C. 14.—None of Mr. Blaine's friends here know anything about the offer of his appointment as Secretary of State. Representative Dingley said he had not heard of any such offer having been made. He did not doubt the report because it was in the least an improbability, but merely because he had got no word of it. If the offer had been made, he did not think either Mr. Blaine or Mr. Harrison would say anything about it. At least he thought Mr. Blaine would speak of the matter first to his friends here. "But if report is not true," he said, "I think it only a little in advance of the truth. The only way I can think of," he added after a moment's thought, "that an authoritative statement to that effect might get to the public, is that Mr. Morton may have telegraphed the fact to some friends in New York who incautiously spoke of it. I have never had any doubt that the position would be offered to Mr. Blaine, but did not expect it for two or three weeks."

Mr. Harrison talks to Reporters, But throws no light on the State Port-folio.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 14.—Harrison and Morton passed a rather quiet day. The latter was somewhat indisposed on account of a sore throat. About 4 o'clock the two went out for a short walk. Mrs. Morton and Mrs. Harrison had a number of callers during the day. For a time this afternoon Mr. Harrison's house was besieged by newspaper correspondents, who were in a flutter over the report published in New York to the effect that Mr. Blaine had been offered and had accepted the state portfolio.

Mr. Harrison when asked, replied with considerable emphasis: "It makes no difference what is the nature of the report or through what channel it comes, I cannot allow myself to be troubled with questions about such things. If I should say anything once I would be expected to again, and you can see what it would lead to. You gentlemen may go on with your speculation as to what you think will be done. I say this in all kindness, but I hope it will be understood all around that I will not be placed in a position determining the trustworthiness of any report. No one can be found likely to know, who places any credence whatever in the report of the state portfolio going to Mr. Blaine."

Vice-president elect and Mrs. Morton will leave for home at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, stopping over Sunday at Buffalo. Mrs. Morton is anxious to return to her children, as she is feeling indisposed.

Their Language is Plain.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The Union League held a meeting last night at which over 600 members attended. The meeting was very harmonious and very enthusiastic. The following resolution, unanimously adopted, has occasioned much comment in political circles today, in view of the attempt which it was believed would be made to induce the League to come out in favor of some one of the Republican chieftains for a Cabinet position:

"Resolved, That we have an abiding faith in the capacity and purpose of the President-elect to select his own Cabinet, regardless of all attempts at dictation or importunity from any quarter, and to surround himself with constitutional advisers who shall be men of large capacity, of spotless personal character, and of steadfast devotion to those principles which have been signalized and vindicated in his own election, and we earnestly deprecate the studied efforts which are being made with undisguised impertinence to force his hand and to put upon him clamorous applicants for places in his Cabinet upon the ground of alleged partisan services, or pecuniary contributions, or local control. That such considerations constitute no claims to these high and responsible appointments, upon which the success of the incoming administration depends, and we warmly protest against them."

Preparing for Inauguration.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—Chairman Britton of the Inaugural Committee has received favorable answers to the requests for use of the corridors of Interior and Post Office Department buildings for sleeping quarters for troops during the inauguration. This available space will accommodate about 1500 men. The subcommittee on civic organization has already received applications for positions in the parade from organizations aggregating 13,000 men. This is 2000 more than were in the parade four years ago. The following names have been added to the reception committee: Col. Fred Grant, Walker Blaine, Emmons Blaine, Hon. John M. Thurston of Nebraska, T. W. Noyes, A. W. Wyman, H. D. Barr, Hon. Horatio King, H. B. Edwards and Seaton Monroe.

Too Costly to Eat.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—Friends of Senator Hearst in this city say they believe he is the purchaser of the famous Derby winner, Ormonde, whose sale for $50,000 was reported a few days ago. Senator Blackburn, who is from the Blue Grass country, and therefore takes a deep interest in such transactions, said that Senator Hearst had done a wise thing in making the purchase of Ormonde if he were sound, and that was to be presumed, of course, or the representative of the Senator would not have bought him. The horse is 7 years old, and will be of great service in improving the racing stock of the country, Senator Blackburn says that Senator Stockbridge, also an enthusiast in these matters, says Ormonde is a noble animal, a bay, and of the family that has produced all the Derby winners of late years. He saw his running last year, and was captivated by his performance.

HIGHLAND LIGHT, MASS., Dec. 14.—Mercury registered 10 above at sunrise, having fallen 22 degrees inside of 12 hours. At five P. M. the wind backed to the westward and increased in velocity to 40 miles an hour. This is the lowest temperature here for nine years, so early in the season.

Voices from the Sea---or a Bottle.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SANDWICH, MASS., Dec. 14.—A bottle containing the following note was picked up on the beach to-day, three miles below Sandwich harbor: "Bark J. R. Humphrey, Bath, Me. We were out in the storm of November 25, and we wrote this to our friends, for when it is found we will be at the bottom of the wild ocean, hoping that you all will pray for us and tell your friends." Signed, John Wilson, captain, Pat Hoey, Tim Lewis, John O'Neil, Billy Cartell. On the reverse side was: "We are all lost."

[There is no such vessel as the "Bark J. R. Humphrey, of Bath, Me.," or elsewhere, on the treasury department list of merchant vessels.—Ed. Chronicle.]

The Arguments Concluded.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 14.—In the railroad case before the Supreme court today, arguments were made on behalf of the Boston & Maine by Richard Olney and Hon. Charles H. Burns, and by Jeremiah Smith, J. S. Streeter, and William M. Chase for the Boston, Concord & Montreal. The court then adjourned until next March.

Suicide of a Prominent Citizen of Rockingham County.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HAVERHILL, MASS., Dec. 14.—James B. Kimball of Newton, N. H., aged 44 years, committed suicide today by cutting his throat with a razor during a fit of temporary insanity. He was a prominent man in town, had served several terms as selectman, and represented his town in the last legislature. He leaves a widow and five children, all now ill.

Death of a Veteran Clergyman At Concord.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 14.—Rev. G. W. Richardson, one of the oldest clergymen in the Freewill Baptist denomination, died this morning of pneumonia. He was 78 years old, was born in Orange, Vt., and had filled pulpits in various parts of New England. He was for a time circuit preacher in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

A Bomb found in Haymarket Square, Chicago.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14.—A bomb was found in Haymarket square this afternoon on the scene of the tragedy which cost several policemen their lives. It was unearthed by workmen digging for the foundation for a police monument to be erected on the spot. It is made of zinc gas pipe, 6 inches long, with a fuse 4 inches long.

Maine Pomologists.

To fight to a Finish.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—Kilrain has accepted the challenge of John L. Sullivan to fight to a finish for $10,000 a side. An unknown friend will cover Sullivan's money tomorrow. Rumor has it that Jim Keenan of Boston is the man.

Off the Iron.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., Dec. 14.—The fast range train jumped the track at a switch just west of this city this morning. The engineer and fireman were instantly killed, and their bodies cooked by escaping steam. A brakeman was badly scalded.

STANLEY CAPTURED BY THE ENEMY.

Will England Abandon or Rescue Him!

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—In the House of Commons, this afternoon, Mr. Smith, the leader of the government, replying to Mr. Wilfrid Lawson, said that so far as was known to the government, the letter written by Osman Digna announces the surrender of Emin Pasha and a white traveller. The government had no means of knowing whether these allegations were well founded.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—Along with his letter, Osman Digna sent several Snider cartridges which he alleged were taken from the white traveller. The Zanzibaris in Stanley's expedition were armed with Snider rifles, but there were none in the possession of the dervishes.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—The Emin relief expedition committee are doubtful of the genuineness of the Osman Digna letter. They suggest the Khedive's letter may have been stolen at Cairo, but they think it more likely that Stanley sent runners to Emin with letters, and these runners were captured. In any case they are hopeful, even if Emin is a captive, that Stanley is still free.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—General Grenfell recognized the letter Osman Digna enclosed as the original he drafted for the Khedive. Thus Stanley's capture is virtually beyond all doubts. The Congo state officials have not been informed of the matter. The King of Belgium is agitated by the event, and is receiving a great many despatches regarding it. He admits having been the largest subscriber to Stanley's expenses.

The Independance Belge says England will doubtless do everything possible to liberate Stanley. Gladstone too bitterly regrets the abandonment of Gen. Gordon, for Lord Salisbury to abandon Stanley and Emin Pasha.

SUAKIM, Dec. 14.—It is reported that the wounds of Osman Haib, rebel commander, are serious. Heavy firing continues. Refugees at Handoub confirm the statements made in Osman Digna's letter.

SOUAKIM, Dec. 14.—Osman Digna's letter was in reply to Major Rundle's request of last August for news of Emin Pasha. The letter asserts the Mahdi has conquered the whole of the Equatorial provinces. Lado's letter stated that one white man escaped.

D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Publishers, Boston, Mass.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty-six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10½x13½. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12.50; tree calf, $12.50, English-seal style, $9.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver lettering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the hazy and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

BROWNE BROS.....DOVER.

Portsmouth Chronicle.

SATURDAY, DEC. 15, 1888.

Mr. Blaine has some over zealous friends who are determined that he shall go into General Harrison's cabinet whether or no. We do not take the least stock in the stories put out that the position of Secretary of State has been tendered Mr. Blaine, and that he has accepted it. It would be something unusual for Gen. Harrison to form his cabinet now, months in advance of his inauguration, and we do not believe he has done so, except possibly in his own mind. The talk about Mr. Blaine going in the cabinet at all amounts to nothing, and will never be realized. Mr. Blaine has been in the State Department once, and the experience acquired there will make him chary of entering the same department again. We have no idea that he wants to enter Gen. Harrison's cabinet, but we do believe that he would like to have the satisfaction of saying that he had declined an urgent request to become one of his official family. That would gratify him and please the "boys" who would raise a considerable commotion if they thought their champion had been slighted. The truth is, Mr. Blaine is so constituted that he could not go into the cabinet without running the administration, and this would quickly result in a row. Mr. Blaine knows this, and so does Gen. Harrison, and therefore the talk is only talk and no substance.

It makes all the difference in the world to the present reform administration whose ox is being gored. Secretary Whitney inaugurated his entrance into the navy department by condemning the Dolphin and other vessels constructed for the navy by John Roach, and by his malignant course of action drove the veteran shipbuilder into bankruptcy and then into his grave. New contracts were made for the new ships, and of course the work went into democratic hands; the shipbuilders of republican sentiment having the treatment of honest John Roach in mind, made no attempts to secure the contracts. It so happens that in the three years one of the new vessels, the dynamite cruiser, is completed, and a trial demonstrates that she fails to come up to the contract requirements. We shall now see whether Secretary Whitney exhibits the same stern and relentless treatment to the democratic contractor that was meted out to John Roach.

In our news columns will be found a resolution adopted by the Union League of New York, the most important political organization in the country, in regard to the "studied efforts which are being made with undisguised impertinence to force his (Harrison's) hand and put upon him clamorous applicants for places in his Cabinet upon the ground of alleged partisan services." It is refreshing to have such outspoken utterances on the part of such a representative body as the Union League. The resolution was framed in the proper spirit, and will receive a hearty response from republicans in every part of the country. It is right and proper that Gen. Harrison should not have forced upon him any man for a Cabinet place. Let him alone to select his own Cabinet, and then the country will know whom to hold responsible.

The victory in Boston last Tuesday, when the democracy was routed, and a republican mayor elected, has stimulated the republicans elsewhere to renewed efforts to secure control of municipalities where the democrats have for many years had their own way. In New York city the republicans have begun to organize for local work, and already talk of making that city republican. The New York Press of yesterday says:

"Organization, active work, an abandonment of the idea that it was of no use to fight against the Boston Democracy—these things have had their legitimate effect. What has been done in Boston can be done in New York. Let every Republican of New York city paste 'Boston' in his hat."

What Boston has done and what New York will do can be done in Portsmouth. What say the Portsmouth republicans? Shall we go to work now and wrest this city away from its present political control next year? It looks like a big undertaking, but it can be done with proper energy and management, and entire harmony of action.

The New York Sun, whose democracy is of the old fashioned sort and not tinctured with subserviency to party leaders when they depart from the teachings of Thomas Jefferson, has a significant editorial in relation to the scandals which have been afloat for some time regarding the private life of the President. It says these stories, or rather the circumstantial denial of them which is far worse than the original stories themselves, should be stopped, and that the dictates of public propriety demand that the President should cause them to be stopped. The Sun then makes this remarkable statement, remarkable in that it is made by the ablest democratic paper in the country:

"It has been suggested, and certainly not without a color of possibility, that Mr. Cleveland himself was the instigator of these denials, or, at least, sanctioned their sudden and wide-spread publication. During Mr. Cleveland's residence in the White House there have been more and greater and more radical inroads into Presidential dignity than occurred in the administrations of all the other Presidents put together. The entire temperament of the executive functions has been changed. The attitude and relation of the Executive to Congress, to his Cabinet, and to the people at large have been different from what they were formerly. He has used the opportunities of his high office to scold the public for disagreeing with him. He has even made it the pulpit from which to denounce Democratic institutions. He has plunged his arm up to the shoulder in local politics, where other Presidents would not have laid their hands. He even brought the President upon the political stump when he appeared as a reviewing officer of a parade."

Chauncy M. Depew, whose name has been used very prominently in connection with the English mission under Gen. Harrison, announces that he does not want the place, or in fact any public office. In talking about the matter he said to an interviewer:

"Any man might be proud to take it and happy in its honors and pleasures. But I do not want any office, except the one I have got. I am one of the very few who can say that he is satisfied with everything he has in the world. I am not a candidate for any office whatever."

A New York despatch says Dr. Rogers, who was the originator of the Pan-Electric Telephone company, in a letter to the Tribune says that the stockholders of the company have resolved to elect a new board, and make Mr. Cleveland president of the company upon his retiring from the White House. This is the company in which Attorney General Garland has stock and at whose instance the Government instituted suits to test the validity of the Bell Telephone patents.

A despatch from Dakota says the territorial legislature will convene on Jan. 8, and it is expected that one of its first acts will be to call a constitutional convention and take other preliminary steps toward statehood. In nearly every legislative district the members have been instructed in favor of the division of the territory, and there will be virtually no opposition to call a constitutional convention for North Dakota.

Literary Notes.

One of the most successful books ever written by an American woman is Margaret Deland's "John Ward, Preacher," and it must be a vast satisfaction to the talented young authoress to know that the enormous sale which her book has already reached is owing to its genuine literary merit, not to any literary immorality or salacious extravagance.

The "Birds' Christmas Carol," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, which has just been published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., costs no more than a Christmas card, some of which, in fact, are more expensive. This is not, by the way, a book about birds, but about a family named Bird. The story is charming, the book beautifully printed, illustrated and bound, and it costs only fifty cents.

It is a pleasure to know that that accomplished author, F. Hopkinson Smith, is to describe "Palm Sunday in Puebla de los Angeles," in the January number of the Atlantic Monthly. Hopkinson Smith is one of the few writers who understands what to include and what to omit in sketches of travel.

An article on "The Athletic Problem in Education," by N. S. Shaler, is announced to appear in the Atlantic Monthly for January.

The portrait of Arthur Sherburne Hardy, author of "But Yet a Woman," which appears on some of the circulars of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., reveals the features of a man who has not the slightest sort of bookish appearance. We are inclined to think "Passe Rose," now running in the Atlantic Monthly, the strongest story that Hardy has written. It is certainly a most unique production, as unlike "But Yet a Woman" as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is unlike "Robert Elsmere."

Olive Thorne Miller writes in the Atlantic Monthly for January about a wonderful song-bird, "The Solitaire," which she found in Mexico.

John Fiske is to discuss a particularly interesting topic in the Atlantic Monthly for January, his subject being "Washington's Great Campaign of 1776," concerning which "the coming American historian," as some of our contemporaries call Mr. Fiske, has made critical researches.

An extra number of the Riverside Literature Series (published monthly by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston, at fifteen cents a number) has just been issued, entitled, "Scenes and Dialogues from the Writings of Harriet Beecher Stowe," by Emily Weaver. The number contains selections from "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Minister's Wooing," and "Old Town Folks." The dialogues are well adapted for private theatricals, and are also especially suited to take the place of readings or recitations in school exercises.

FOLK SONGS.

The Fidelity With Which They Reflect Nature in All its Aspects.

Wherever the folk song has lived and flourished amid its pure air of nature, it has emanated from the life of the people, and has grown out of the soil they trod. Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans all had these songs, and while the women lightened their domestic pursuits with their country melodies, the men tempered the war weapon to their tune, and plowed many a furrow to their rhythm. With the migration of the German races, when music as an art still was not, the tedium of many a monotony must have been dallied away to soft folk theme, or an onslaught in battle intensified by some more soul-stirring glee, which the warrior Teuton learned as he lived. His existence was under little roof save the broad canopy of heaven, while his land song glittered with rapine and onslaught. Rarely with him was it attained in peaceful vein—more often impelling its singers to ax and oar with a dash which made Roman enemies fear them as fierce and cunning foes, with the sea for a war school, and their friend in the storm. It is strains such as these—strains which have never sprung out of revenge for spilled blood, and out of the many varied and nobler mood that human nature is capable of, which are thrilled into life at a period when there was no art to shape and mold them by, and which constitute the folk song, says a writer in Cassell's Magazine. Such emanations sprang direct from the heart, and are as psychologically true as music can be—the shepherd tending his flock, the soldier on the march, the fisherman mending his nets, the sewer casting his seed, the reaper joyous with his sickle — these chanted a something long before the age of scientific art; and what such was, is more or less faithfully depicted in every country's national melodies and folk songs.

The characteristic of the folk song is the fidelity with which it reflects nature in its human and natural aspects. Unadorned by art, it speaks the simple minds of the people wherever it is met, and as we muse over its tones we not only picture the gayly-attired peasantry who sang it, but the very air of the country to which it is peculiar seems to follow it and to pervade the surroundings where it is now performed. It tells of the existence and every-day life of the workers—indoor and outdoor—whose character alone remains to us as we see it reflected in these faithful mirrors of times dear to the lover of his country.

We possess the words of a sixth century song of the time of Clothair II. (584–628), and those of Roland's song of Charlemagne's time, but the music of these and the love songs which were forbidden, and those which were not; of the mournful songs of "laments" which were chanted at night over the graves of the dead—these and the peans of praise and battle-song, all had music which is lost forever, because the light of the age led one to note it down. It is certain, however, that the early folk song had a distinctly popular rhythm and flow. In many cases, too, it would be quaint and orginal even fantastic and comical—as when used to accompany the evolutions in outdoor life and enjoyment. It was essentially the people's possession, and in an age when city life was not, and when outdoor sport and pleasure was all that men lived for, the music would be attuned to the circumstance. There was agricultural pursuit, and frequent war and plundering excursions, but rude enjoyment and revelry occupied the people largely. Sports and fairs and outdoor gatherings were frequent—to which it was not uncommon to beseech the attendance of the knight of the shire from whom the vassals held their fief of tenure. The music was measured to the wants.

His Intelligent Dog Johnny.

I never allowed "Johnny"—that was my dog's name, to lie on the sofa, and he, of course, would not try to as long as I was in the room. Even when I went out I did not mistrust the old fellow, and, you may imagine my surprise when returning home one afternoon I found him lying quietly on the sofa and looking defiantly at me. He received his punishment, and was apparently so disgusted that he did not touch a bit of his supper that night. I did not think any more of the event until a few days later when, coming back at an unusual time, I found "Johnny" sleeping in his box and snoring. "What's up with you now?" I thought. I looked at the sofa, but could see nothing suspicious. I moved my hand across it. "There, been again on it, old man, have you?" He did neither stir nor interrupt his snoring. I then ordered him to come out, and told him he was quite smart, but not enough so as to consider the animal heat his body had left on the sofa.

The following day I went away on purpose to see whether he would dare to try it again. My room was on the first floor, and I had to go a little way through a garden before coming to the house. "Johnny" certainly could hear me when I came along the sandy path. This time, however, I hurried over the lawn after I had banged the gate and looked through the window. He probably thought, as he did not hear me come, I had remained at the gate, and so he carried out his preparations. Of course, he had been again on the sofa. What do you think the animal was doing? He was standing with his fore-paws on the sofa and blowing with all his might at the spot where he had been lying, to cool off, so that I should not feel it. I let him blow a little while, and then knocked at the window. Like a flash he ran into his box, and when I entered, a minute later, he was sound asleep.—Lewiston Journal.

A traveler in Brazil writes to a horticultural paper telling of the crop of mistletoe that he found growing on telegraph wires near Rio Janiero. When he first saw it he thought that floods had left weeds hanging to the wires, but a nearer inspection and the heighth of the wires convinced him that the apparent weeds were thousands of little mistletoes firmly fixed to the wires. Many species of this plant grow in Brazil, and some, called "bird weeds," bear berries, which are eaten by birds. The seeds are deposited on the telegraph wires and take root. They are short lived, of course, but the constant deposits of seed cloth the wires with this curious fringe.

Freeman—"Don't you think this doctrine of infant damnation a horrible one?" Sours (slowly)—"Well, I don't know. I used to think that way, but since the Howler family and their new baby moved next door to me I am kind of wavering, kind of wavering."

Enormous Demand for Eggs.

An egg merchant, who goes from house to house buying eggs, told us a few days since, that he expected to have to pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs before Christmas.

This is remarkable, when we reflect that the poultry industry of this country last year amounted to nearly seven hundred million dollars; and even then, we had to import several million dollars worth of foreign eggs. Our own egg raisers ought to have this money. The demand for fresh eggs for food alone far exceeds the supply. At fifty cents per dozen eggs are as cheap as beefsteak for food. Many persons who keep hens will probably not have an egg to sell when they reach fifty cents. Some one may ask, "what can a body do, when the pesky old hens stop laying, and the pullets refuse to begin until spring?" Why do as Wm. H. Yeomans, of Columbia, Conn., editor of the Germantown Telegraph did last winter. He says: "Last fall I made an experiment worth giving our readers. Until about Dec. 1st, I was getting from twenty common hens, only one or two eggs a day. I decided to try Sheridan's Condition Powder. I confess I had but little faith in its value to make hens lay. Commenced feeding, and for nine days saw very little effect. Then the hens began laying and in three months laid 858 eggs. Part of the time the thermometer was 12 degrees below zero, and my hens were laying a dozen eggs a day, while my neighbors (who did not use the powder) were getting none. I now, without hesitation, believe it is a valuable aid to farmers for egg-production." Well might he believe, for nearly 72 dozen eggs, in three months, from twenty common hens, with eggs worth 50 cents, is worth having. I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., (the only makers of Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay,) will send, postpaid to any person, two 25 cent packs of powder, and a new Poultry Raising Guide, for 60 cents. The book alone costs 25 cents. For $1.00 five packs of powder and a book; for $1.20 a large 2 1-4 pound can and book; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send stamps or cash. Interesting testimonals sent free. adv

THE ROLLER SKATE CRAZE.

It Has Died Out, But Not Till Henley Made a Fortune.

The craze for roller skating died out so suddenly that a whole detective agency couldn't find it. Three years ago a man dare not get married until he learned how to walk on wheels with 140 pounds of calico on his arm. The craze for roller skating having died, of course the manufacture of roller skates is supposed to be entirely dead. But such is not the fact, says the waxed floor editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. While the trade is wonderfully smaller than formerly, the craze for roller skating still exists, or, rather, is just at its height, in Washington Territory and Oregon, and Manitoba, Canada. But the greatest trade in roller skates is carried on with Australia, where the craze is raging in all its pleasures and social sensations.

The trade is conducted principally through middlemen in San Francisco, who make the bargains between the American manufacturers and the Australian dealers. By the way, there is quite an interesting history as to the invention of roller skates.

In Richmond, Ind., lived Micajah Henley, a poor young man who sawed wood for a livelihood, but who was energetic and always looking around for a chance to trade and barter and make an honest dollar. Another poor man of the town invented a roller skate, which was crude in construction and not a success. Young Henley fortunately possessed an inventive genius, and he saw in a twinkling that the skate could be improved upon, or rather that it was merely an idea to work out to a full and complete invention. He purchased the right for a trifle and set to work to perfect the invention.

When he had worked out the idea and demonstrated that he had made a successful invention, he found he had no money to procure a patent on his improved model, which was entirely different from the patent right he had purchased. Henley tried to interest several moneyed men in the invention and get them to establish a manufactory, as he was confident of making a fortune out of it, but he was answered with laughter. His invention was looked upon as a foolish thing—a trifle too small for a dignified capitalist to become associated with, but Henley, with a wonderful will and a firm confidence that a fortune lay ahead of him, managed to scrape together a few hundred dollars, and then began to manufacture roller skates in an old barn. As the profits were immense—from 200 to 500 per cent—he soon increased his trade and capital many fold.

The craze started over the entire country, and orders poured in upon him so fast that in a few months he had no trouble in securing financial backing from the very men who had formerly laughed at his invention as foolish. He erected an immense brick building, than which no one commercial building of that state has more square feet of roofing, and established the greatest roller skate manufactory in the world. He prospered and, but two years after he had been sawing wood for a living, was worth $250,000 and owned one of the most costly and beautiful residences in the little city in which he lived. His phenomenal success inspired others to enter into the business, and American-like, there was an over-rush. No less than twenty-seven roller skate manufactories went up in the city, and it became the great center of the trade. But when the craze died they petered out with it. Henley's manufactory is the only one remaining, and it is now principally devoted to the manufacture of patent wire fencing and other inventions.

Helping Him Out of His Dilemma.

An unkind story, even if true, was told me while I was in England of a young lady who married a stuttering man.

The young man was undoubtedly a stutterer of the most positive order, for I have heard him go through paroxysms to get out a simple "Good morning!" The lady whom he subsequently married was of an eminently practical turn of mind. No maiden modesty or bashfulness clayed her methods. She spoke to the point, and never left a thought unexpressed if she deemed it pertinent. After he had called upon her some three or four times she decided that it was about time for her to know his intentions. So the next time he called, after they had seated themselves as usual on the sofa, she said quietly but firmly: "Mr. Smith, I am much flattered by the interest you have taken in me, and the flowers you have just given me are pretty, but I feel that I should not be doing my duty if I delayed any longer asking what your intentions are, whither do these intentions lead?"

Young Mr. Smith rose to his feet and a blush rose to his cheek. He essayed to speak. For a moment his lips and tongue seemed paralyzed. Then he managed to get out "M-M-M-M-M-y d-d-d-d-d" —but he could get no further. The d might have stood for any number of words, but Miss Smith justifiably, perhaps, interpreted it to stand for darling, and the youth's acute embarrassment to a modest confusion in making a formal proposal.

Any way, she took Mr. Smith by the hand and, looking into his eyes, exclaimed: "Mr. Smith, I appreciate your embarrassment, but I understand what you wish to say. You may speak to papa, and if he approves so do I."

They were married a few months later, but Mr. Smith has never explained satisfactorily to his friends whether he stuttered into matrimony of his own free will or against it.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Locomotive's Petticoat.

A little later, as we approached the end of the run, the steam-gauge dropped several points. The quick eye of the engineer caught it, and he found he was losing time. He tried every expedient to keep up steam, but it wouldn't work. He finally ran in two minutes late, with the remark that he would put her in the house and soon locate the trouble. The next time I saw him I asked him about his affliction. "Oh, yes," he said, "I soon discovered it. She dropped her petticoat." Of course, I knew what a petticoat was, but not the one worn by an engine. In railway parlance an engine is always referred to as belonging to the feminine gender. The petticoat referred to resembles a garment of that name, and is worn by the engine to aid the draft in the smokestack. We learn something every day, and now I realize that ladies do not have a monopoly on petticoats.—Omaha Republican.

DEEP-SEA DESOLATION.

The Ocean Bed a Desert of Slime After the First Mile in Depth.

Despite the fanciful picture which some writers have drawn of the ocean bed, its desolation, at least in its deepest parts, must be extreme, says the Cathedra Magazine. Beyond the first mile it is a vast desert of slime and ooze, upon which is constantly dripping a rain of dead carcasses from the surface, which carcasses supply the nourishment for the scanty fauna inhabiting the abyssal region, in some places more than five miles from the sunshine; and the microscope reveals that the slimy matter covering this deepest ocean bed is very similar in composition to the ancient chalk of the cretaceous period, while mixed with it here and there are minute metallic and magnetic bodies, which have proved to be dust from meteorites. At long intervals a phosphorescent light gleams from the head of some passing fish which has strayed hither from a higher zone. But it is not until we have mounted a good deal nearer the surface that the scene changes for the better. We now meet with forests of brilliantly colored sponges, while the phosphorescent animals swimming about are much more numerous; and the nearer we get to the littoral zone more and more phosphorescent lights appear, till at length the scene becomes truly animated. When only 1,200 feet separates us from the sunshine we come upon the first sea-weed and kelp (1,200 feet is the deepest limit of plant life in water); but we must rise still another 1,000 feet and more, and get as near the top as 120 feet before we find any reef-building corals. As plants do not live in deep sea, the deep-sea animals either prey on one another or get their food from dead organism and plants which sink down to them. Thus Maury says: "The sea, like the snow cloud with its flakes in a calm, is always letting fall into its bed showers of microscopic shells." And experiment proves that a tiny shell would take about a week to fall from the surface to the deepest depths. Since sunlight does not penetrate much farther than the littoral zone there would be beyond this but perpetual darkness except for phosphorescence. Many of the animals inhabiting the continental and abyssal zones have merely rudimentary eyes; but these blind creatures have very long feelers, which help them to grope their way along the bottom. Other deep-sea animals, on the contrary, have enormous eyes, and these very likely congregate around such of their number as are phosphorescent, and may perhaps follow the moving lamp-posts about wherever they may go. And so bright is this light on many of the fish brought up by the dredge that during the brief space the animals survive it is not difficult to read by it.

The reason why fishes and mollusks living more than three miles under water are able to bear a pressure of several tons is that they have exceedingly loose tissues, which allow the water to flow through every interstice and thus to equalize the weight. When the pressure is removed they perish. In the Challenger expedition sent out by the British government all the sharks brought up from a depth of a little less than three-quarters of a mile were dead when they got to the surface.

The Morgan Family of Horses.

I observe in the American Cultivator of recent date the first part of an excellent short history of Justin Morgan, the famous horse from whom the Morgan family is derived. It seems to be proved, though not perhaps quite conclusively, that the original Morgan was sired by a horse called the True Briton, or Beautiful Boy, and he in turn was descended from Traveller, an imported racer, very nearly pure Arabian. Nothing whatever, I believe, is known about the dam of the great Justin. A history of the Morgan family, written by Mr. D. C. Linsley, if I do not mistake, was published a good many years ago, and the account in the Cultivator agrees substantially with that, although some new proofs are supplied. Another history, or else a revision of Mr. Linsley's book, I am not sure which, is in course of preparation by a Vermont enthusiast, and I am looking eagerly for its publication. Everybody knows that the Morgans were, and are, celebrated for endurance, docility and toughness—all these qualities being distinctly Arabian. Of late, moreover, Morgan stock has proved an excellent foundation for trotting horses, and at the recent New England Breeders' meeting the frequency of this "cross" was remarkable.—Boston Post.

A Buffalo teacher of chemistry is reported to have discovered a method of refining Ohio petroleum, which till now has refused to give up its extra charge of sulphur.

LENGTH OF DAY	9:16		10 P. M

AN UNPLEASANT DAY.

Between the blinding clouds of dust and the biting wind which blew the dust about, the streets were not pleasant to be out in, Friday. The walking was good, though; could not well be better. Few persons were on the streets after nightfall; most of the stores closed early, and those that kept open did no business worth mentioning. The dust was so thick that the electric lights looked as though shining through a thick fog, and between ten and eleven o'clock most of them got tired of the unequal contest, and went out altogether.

THE CADETS.

The Portsmouth Cadets are holding regular weekly drill meetings, and are devoting extra time to their military exercise, preparatory to the "Court of King Jollyboy," and one act of the "Cadets' Picnic" (which will be given by request,) at the coming entertainment at Music hall. They are fully alive to the fact that this performance will inure to their benefit, and they are doubling their endeavors of a year ago, in an effort to excel all previous attempts. Judging from the splendid drilling they are doing now, it is anticipated that they, and the audience which will greet them, will be highly pleased. It seems as if brilliant success is bound to crown their labors, considering the hard, faithful work that is being put into the rehearsals and drills by each and every person interested.

MUSIC HALL.

Two entertainments, each the best of its kind on the road, drew but very moderate audiences to Music hall this week. "Keep it Dark," presented on Thursday evening, though it can hardly be called a play is crammed full of fun and ridiculous situations from first to last, and the mirth of the audience was continuous and boisterous from the opening to the close. On Friday evening the wholly pleasing Irish comedy-drama "Dan Darcy" was performed, in a manner to delight the small number of people who braved the cold wind and clouds of dust to see it. Both the companies are good ones, all through, and deserved better houses.

McNish, Ramza & Arno's Minstrels will occupy the stage at Music hall next Wednesday night. They started out in June, '88, for a two years circuit of the United States and Canada, and are now booking for the third year. From Portsmouth they go South and West to California.

POLICE COURT—BATCHELDER J.

FRIDAY, Dec. 14th.

Frank Daley, drunk, fine $3, costs $5.76; county farm in default of payment.

John Crowley, drunk, thirty days at the county farm, costs $6.90.

Michael Norton, for an assault on Officer Hobbs, was held in $100 for the April term of the supreme court.

PERSONAL.

—Mrs. Elbredge Gerry and Miss Bessie Gerry, who have been visiting in this city, leave in a few days for the Bermudas, where they will pass the winter.

—Mrs. D. H. Montgomery of Middle street is passing a few days in New York.

—Miss Annie P. Goodrich of Vaughan street is visiting her sister, Mrs. W. I. Lewis of Walpole, Mass.

MARITIME NOTES.

The big schooner T. A. Lambert, one of the largest merchant vessels which ever entered this port, and which early the present year brought in the largest cargo of coal ever landed here, about 2500 tons, it is supposed has made her last voyage, having probably been sent to the bottom by the great gale in November, while on the passage from Philadelphia for Boston. When she was here there was talk of her being made into a barge, but this project was not carried out. She was built in 1887 at Bath, Me., was 227 feet long, and registered 1630 tons. Capt. Hall and his crew of eleven men, concerning whose fate much anxiety has been felt, were rescued by the British steamer Gladowe, from Philadelphia for Genoa, Italy, and were landed at Gibraltar on Thursday, the 13th inst.

Fish fares as follows were landed at this port on the 13th, and bought by E. Newton & Co. and Edw. Jameson at good figures: Schooner Abbie A. Snow, 10,000 lbs.; Edith Conley, 9,000; Eva May, 1,000; Margaret, 1,000. On the 14th the schooner Etta, of Swampscott, landed 5,000 lbs., and the sloop Iris 1,000 lbs., both fares being bought by E. Newton & Co. at $5 per hundred pounds.

Capt. Symonds, having finished his dredging operations on the Cocheco river for this season, has hauled up his dredging flotilla at Liberty bridge for the winter.

The north and south mill ponds are closed to navigation.

The sale of fancy articles and refreshments, by the Court street Christian Benevolent society in G. A. R. hall on Thursday evening, was a great success, and the literary and musical entertainment was received with every indication of approval and pleasure.

Friday morning was the coldest of the season up to that time, the temperature being at zero in several places about the city, and one or two degrees below in some localities.

One of the notable institutions of Portsmouth, intensely local, interesting beyond comparison to every lover of the old Portsmouth which was the home of his childhood or to which he has become attached by years of adopted sonship, is Brewster's Rambles about Portsmouth. The chapters are all delightfully-told stories, perused with like interest by young and old, containing facts that had been extensely quoted by historians and some in poetic verse by such poets as Longfellow, Aldrich and Laighton. Our neighbor, L. W. Brewster of the Journal, who is the publisher of the book, has it for sale at his office. It is just the thing for a holiday present.

It has been found by inspection, that the best twenty-five dollars Seal Plush Sack in Portsmouth is the one offered by Lewis E. Staples. It even goes ahead of Boston.

"Miller's Gamecock."

The old established house of John Miller & Co., 298 Hanover street, Boston, offer a superior article of whiskey which for purity, flavor and smoothness is not surpassed by any other whiskey in this country. "Miller's Gamecock," now one of the leading brands of whiskey, enjoys the highest reputation among good judges, and may be implicitly relied upon as being of uniform excellence.

Duffield Osborne, the young Brooklyn novelist calls Amelia Rives a "physical writer." "The Quick or the Dead?" he says, "seems to be like what I might imagine the production of some intellectual animal—coarse to the last degree, yet utterly innocent of its own coarseness." That is a criticism which will surely puzzle Mrs. Chanler.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

What is Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It is an inflammation of the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

Masked Men Rob a Train in Mississippi and Kill one Passenger.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

GRENADA, MISS., Dec. 16.—Passenger train No. 2, on the Illinois Central road, was robbed Friday night, a mile north of Duck Hill at 10:15. When the train pulled out of Duck Hill two men boarded the engine and commanded the engineer, A. J. Law, to pull out fast and not stop until told to. The engineer, and fireman, George Evans, both being covered with navy six shooters, obeyed. When a mile north of Duck Hill the train was stopped and the engineer and fireman were ordered to dismount. They were then marcesf to the express car, and one of the robbers knocked on the door which was opened by the messenger after the firing of three shots. A man entered the car and took $3000, all there was in the car, from messenger Hill. The firing of the pistol and the stopping of the train attracted the attention of conductor P. B. Wilkinson, who rushed out and was immediately fired upon. He returned to the train. Chess Hughes, of Jackson, Tenn., then ran out with a Winchester rifle. As he stepped on the ground from the smoking car he was fired upon. One shot struck him in the left arm and another went through his stomach, inflicting a fatal wound. The death of the young man was very sad, as he was the only support of his widowed mother. He left Lexington, Miss., to meet his sister's family and younger brother all of whom were on the train and were much distressed by his untimely death. Nine shots were fired by conductor Wilkinson and travelling passenger agent Roban, three by Hughes and four or five by the robbers. The robbers were white men, and masked. Both ran into a swamp. A posse is being organized to join in the chase, and bloodhounds will be used.

Mahone Redivivus.

(Special to Daily Chronicle.)

RICHMOND, VA., Dec. 16.—The friends of ex-Senator Mahone have had several conferences during the past week, and finally decided to present his name to Gen. Harrison for a cabinet position. While Gen. Mahone has many warm and devoted supporters, he has just as bitter opponents, who will leave nothing undone to prevent him from getting any position under the next administration. There is a belief here, which is not founded upon mere rumor or mere guesswork but upon known facts, that had Gen. Mahone done his duty in the late campaign, and not split the party in his own district, the state would have given its electoral vote to Harrison.

Dakota is Pleased.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BISMARCK, DAK., Dec. 15.—The Tribune of today commenting on the action of the Democratic caucus at Washington says: "The Democrats of Congress have held one meeting in which they did not blunder * * * If the party does not disappoint the people in the hopes which it has raised, the Democrats of Dakota will be relieved of an odium under which they never could have hoped for success. The people of the territory stand ready to vote as soon as the election is called, and when it is called there will be no need of electioneering. Their minds are determined, and they will make Dakota two states with a whoop."

A Proposition for an Educational Test in South Carolina. It Will Disfranchise 70,000 Voters.

Special Despatch to Daily Chronicle.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 15.—The house committee on elections yesterday recommended a constitutional amendment to provide an educational qualification for voters. Under it voters must be able to read the constitution of the United States, and to write their own names. It is doubtful if the measure will pass, as the opposition to it comes principally from the white people of the middle and upper portions of the state. It will require a majority of two-thirds of both houses, and will, besides, have to be submitted to a vote of the people of the state. It is said that such an amendment would disfranchise over 13,000 white and 60,000 negro voters. Most of the leading daily newspapers in the state are supporting the measure.

A Peculiar Mania.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Dec. 15.—Oakley C. Johnson of Hackettstown, N. J., who has been visiting in this city for some time, was last night arrested for his peculiar mania for hugging women on the street. He would prowl about after dark, and should he meet a woman alone would hug and embrace her until her screams would frighten him away. He has been shot at several times, but never hurt. He is a finely educated man, and was formerly a professor in the Peekskill military academy.

Skaters Drowned.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 16.—Jacob Gorman, aged 17, skated into an air hole on Horseshoe pond this afternoon, and was drowned.

HAVERHILL, MASS., Dec 16.—While a nine-year-old son of William Allen of South Groveland was skating on Hale's factory upper pond this afternoon, drawing two children on a sled, he came to an air hole, and finding it impossible to avoid it, swung the sled to one side, saving the children, and went into the hole himself and was drowned. His body was recovered.

Wouldn't Squeal on Himself.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec, 16.—Edward Kennedy of Trenton, N. J., a horse dealer, was robbed of $2000 in Richard Cronin's opium den last night. Cronin himself notified the police, and caused the arrest of Job Hollish, a confidence man who was in the place when the money was taken. Cronin refused to give the location of the "joint," and the police do not know. The examination of Hollish was postponed to give the police time to complete the evidence.

Henry George Home Again.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec, 16.—Steamers arriving today report unusually tempestuous voyages. Henry George was on the Etruria. He reports the single-tax idea as rapidly growing in favor in England, and is confident that it will be put into operation there within a reasonable time, and that its good effect will be so apparent as to lead to its adoption here.

A Rumor From Indianapolis.

Mr. Harrison Said To Have Given Senator Allison the Treasury Portfolio.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 16.—Various rumors have been afloat since Mr. Morton's departure. Among them, one that the vice president elect left Indianapolis in a disappointed mood, having been told by Gen. Harrison he could not appoint Mr. Platt to the position of Secretary of the Treasury, but he might consider an offer of the navy portfolio and give Mr. Harrison an answer within the next two weeks, or not later under any consideration than January 15th. He told Mr. Morton candidly that the secretaryship of the Treasury had already been given to Senator Allison; the reason for selecting a western man, was the opposition in many eastern states to a New York man on account of alleged discriminations in matters of imports in favor of merchants of New York. Gen. Harrison said prominent gentlemen of Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore and other eastern cities, had written and talked to him on the subject, and while he did not know that their statements were true he certainly did not know they were untrue, and he had decided to select a Secretary of the Treasury from another and entirely disinterested section.

White Caps Scattered in Ohio.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Dec. 16.—Gov. Forraker yesterday made the following announcement: The so-called White Cap organization has been summarily disbanded, and there will be no more meetings, raids, threatening, whippings or terrorizing of any kind by those who composed the membership, but should there be any repetition of any such practices, the state is in command of the testimony and the facilities generally to enable it to promply bring the leaders to justice.

INHUMAN WRETCHES.

A Woman Whipped on Her Bare Back.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 16.—In Lamar county on Friday night, a crowd of masked men took Mrs. Jane Johnson from her house and administered 39 lashes on her bare back, and then warned her to leave the county within five days.

Death of a Lady Noted in Educational Circles.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—A Holyoke, Mass., special to the Tribune says that Mrs. Timothy Merrick, more widely known as Prof. Priscilla H. Bralstin, late of Vassar College, died of heart disease at her home here on Saturday afternoon, after an illness of five weeks. She was fifty years of age, and had been identified with Vassar for 22 years.

The Buffaloes Not All Dead Yet.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

WINNEPEG, Dec. 15.—That the buffaloes are not all extinct was demonstrated yesterday by the shipment of a herd of forty to Minneapolis. It is expected they will be distributed among the several Zoological gardens throughout the country.

They Meant Business.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Dec. 16.—Alderman Holmes, who was ordered by White Caps a few days ago to resign within 48 hours and leave the city, yesterday morning found a dynamite bomb on his piazza. The fuse had been ignited but expired before the explosion could occur.

FOREIGN.

Stanley a Prisoner and in Chains. All Doubt Removed. He Was Alive Oct. 11th. Will England Act Now.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SUAKIM, Dec. 16.—Khalifas' letter to Osman Digna stated that the steamer expedition to the equator, commanded by Osman Seleb, on arriving at Lado had Emin Pasha and a white traveller delivered to them in chains by Emin's officers and troops. Osman Selah in his letter to Khalifas stated that he reached Lado October 11th, and the Khedive had sent a white traveller named Stanley with a letter telling Emin to go with Stanley, and offering the remainder of the force the option of going to Cairo or remaining. They refused to enter the Turkish service and gladly received Osman Selah. Osman Selah found a large quantity of feathers and ivory. He heard that another traveller had visited Emin, but had gone and he was searching for him. Reconnoissance was made on the left and rear of the rebels' position today. The party was headed by Gen. Grenfell and advanced under a heavy fire from the forts. The rebels opened fire, but did no damage.

THE REPORTS DISCREDITED.

Stanley Believed to be Safe.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BERLIN, Dec. 16.—Freisinniga Zeitung and other newspapers argue that if Osman Digna's reports are true the Wissman expedition will be useless. The journals argue it would take at least four months to cover the distance, which the reports must travel from Lado, and therefore they must be false.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—A dispatch from Suakim to the Times says: The natives do not believe the equatorial provinces have submitted to the Mahdi. If they had, proclamations to the people of Emins territory and other official acts of the Mahdi would have been made public, and the surrender of Suakim would have been demanded, and that the coast guards leaguer, which has just arrived from the south heard nothing of the alleged capture of Emin.

BERLIN, Dec. 16.—Herr Menensky, chief of the African missions, thinks Emin may have been captured, but not Stanley. "It is more likely," he says, "that the white traveller referred to by Osman Digna is Capt. Casate, the Italian explorer."

SUAKIM, Dec. 16.—LATER—Firing continues on both sides and the Arabs earthworks have been damaged.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—A despatch from Morocco says that a deputation of notables waited upon the Sultan at Fez and announced their defeat with a heavy loss, by the French. They urgently asked for reinforcements.

Telegraphic Sparks.

Senator Beck will leave Washington this week for Aiken, S. C., and other points, in hopes of regaining his strength.

The house on Seminary Ridge, Gettysburg, where Gen. Lee made his headquarters during the battle, and which belonged to the late Thaddeus Stevens, has been sold for $740.

The principal horse railroads in St. Louis have been sold to a syndicate for $3,600,000.

Representative Cox expects to push through Congress this session his bill to establish a life-saving station at Point Barrow and at East Cape, Siberia, to succor shipwrecked whalers.

The 200th anniversary of the First Church in Dover, N. H., was celebrated yesterday by an historical sermon preached by Rev. A. H. Quint of Boston.

Condensations.

The Federation of Labor in session at St. Louis, on Friday took action tending to promote the eight-hour movement, favoring the Australian system of voting, calling upon the President-elect to appoint a union man as public printer, asking Congress to repeal all conspiracy laws, and to pass the bill now before Congress confining convict made goods to the state where manufactured, and prohibiting the importation of the same class of wares.

"White Caps" have appeared at Jamestown, New York. Friday night a party of men disguised by handkerchiefs tied over their heads, drove through the town, driving people in terror to their homes. It is reported that one man was taken from his house and given twenty-five lashes on his bare back.

Blood-red flags was on either side of the platform at Cooper Union, New York, on Friday night, when Mrs. Lucy Parsons addressed a meeting of anarchists.

The New England Conference of Christain Workers, last week, commenced its sixth annual meeting at St. Johnsbury, Vt., and among other subjects considered "Sabbath Desceration," in which Sunday trains, papers, and post office delivery, and kindred things, were denounced as detrimental to good morals and Christian living.

F. L. Harper, of Columbus, Ohio, ex-banker and convict, has become deranged.

The New Haven civil service association has adopted resolutions favoring the extension of the law, and expressing the hope that the incoming administration will execute it in conformity with the policy of the republican platform, as endorsed by Gen. Harrison

Mayor Hewitt of New York, in testifying before the State Senate committee investigating city affairs, expressed his opinion that Col Cockerill of the World was a liar. The Colonel returns the compliment in a letter by charging Hewitt with being a liar, blackguard and slanderer, and says, he can prove it by public record.

The Inauguration Ball tickets are to be in book form, bearing portraits of Harrison and Morton, and embellished with figures representing the Goddess of Liberty and the various arts, and are to be sold for five dollars each.

Samuel Allen, colored, forty four years old, a prominent member of the African M. E. church, and janitor of the Columbian National bank, has been arrested for stealing $4000 from the bank. He has confessed, and all but thirty dollars has been recovered.

The Union store and that of E. E. McEntyre, were entered on Thursday night, and small wares taken away. The thieves changed their socks for new ones leaving theirs in the Union store. They made a supper on sardines and crackers but did not disturb the safe.

The last amount received from the sale of tickets for the grand stand, by the Manchester base ball association last season, was $3.45, and the last from gate receipts was $37 10, both of which were at games in this city. The Manchester Union says it is improbable that there will be a club there next season, judging from the slim attendance at the association meeting on Wednesday evening, the 12th.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S

NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, uncut, by six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10½x13½. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12.50; tree calf, $12.50, English-seal style, $9.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver lettering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

MONDAY, DEC. 17, 1888.

Political union with Canada is attracting much attention both in the United States and across the border, and the advocates of the plan believe that in time the Canadian people will be as eager for it as they now appear to be against it. Five public questions of prime importance have already been mentioned as sure to be settled, easily and naturally, by the annexation of Canada to the United States. These are the fisheries, the fortification of the northern border, the complication arising from the inter-state commerce law applying to one country and not to the other, the navigation of the Canadian waterways, and the customs duties between the two countries. The New York Sun says that another blessing would come from such a union, and that would be the final and complete numerical overwhelming of the Solid South, in the sense in which that term is understood, and the normal, healthy, and rational development of the South's local disagreements in politics.

At the distance we are from New York it would seem that the quarrel between Mayor Hewitt and Col. Cockerill, managing editor of the World, is getting to be somewhat personal. The Mayor became offended because Col. Cockerill intimated that the Mayor was instrumental in causing one of his friends, suspected of wrong doing, to be whitewashed, and he promptly denounced the Colonel as a liar. Col. Cockerill now comes out in a card in which he says: "I have passed these insults by, because I made due allowance for your antiquity, your infirmity of temper, your stomach and your grievances against a newspaper which has not hesitated to show you up as a public fraud." We think it is quite time now that friends should be called in. The Mayor will find in this fight the same experience that other persons aggrieved have had, that the editor of a newspaper always has his antagonist at a disadvantage, and that the only way by which he can get even is to apply the law, if there is a just case, and if there is not, to use a horsewhip or the bludgeon. We have always held to the opinion that there is too much license and reckless journalism (if it can be called journalism) in this country, and that an occasional whipping of an editor would have a tendency to elevate the profession, and make newspaper men more careful what they write and whom they assail.

A special despatch to the New York Herald from Kingston, Jamacia, under date of the 14th, says the Haytien Government, alarmed on learning of the orders of Admiral Luce to visit Port-au-Prince with the North Atlantic squadron and demand the immediate dismissal of the steamer Haytien Republic, has contracted with the Atlas Steamship Co. to furnish a master and crew for the steamer, and take her to New York, where she will be delivered up to the United States authorities, the Haytien government thus avoiding the humilation of having to give up the steamer on a demand supported by force, and also, as they hope, avoiding some grounds of a claim for indemnity. Whether the report is true or not, or whatever bearing such action as is reported might have on the future consideration of the question, it is certainly lucky that the Haytiens got scared before they had a chance to get a good look at our navy.

Washington despatches generally discredit the stories so industriously circulated last week that Mr. Blaine has been offered a cabinet position, thus confirming the view taken by the CHRONICLE. The republicans who are supposed to be the closest to Gen. Harrison, all pronouce the report absurd, and some of them even go so far as to express the view that Mr. Blaine will be tendered a foreign mission, but not a cabinet place. A leading Western Republican senator who was interviewed about the matter said:

"I do not care to be quoted as saying anything about Mr. Blaine, for reasons personal to myself. In my judgment, Gen. Harrison well knows that a large part of the Republican party do not regard Mr. Blaine as a suitable man to go into the Cabinet, and would regret exceedingly to hear of his appointment. It would do the party no good, and would very likely do much harm. I cannot believe that Mr. Harrison has offered him a position in his Cabinet, or will do so. It would be an unfortunate blunder at the very outset of the Republican Administration. I speak what I know to be the sentiments of many members and senators in this Congress."

"On cream and good butter you'll fare lord,
Come out, for the sun's getting warmer warmer,
And it's only ten dollars a week for your board.

"Come out where the roses luxuriant are blooming;
Come out where the nights all invite to repose;
Come out where the poplars so leafy are looming;
Come out where the brook with soft melody flows."

"Come off," says the townsman with angry indignation,
Delights of the country no more will I seek;
Malarial chills, such as thrive in your section,
Are purchased too dear at ten dollars a week.

"Come off with your stories of nights made for sleeping;
At your promises golden I cannot but scoff.
Already mosquitoes their vigils are keeping,

—Merchant Traveler.

A Little.

So little made me glad, for I was young;
Flowers, a sunset, books, a friend or two,
Gray skies with scanty sunshine piercing through—
How little made me glad when I was young!

So little makes me happy, now I'm old;
Your hand in mine, dear heart, here by the fire,
The children grown into our hearts' desire—
How little keeps us happy when we're old!

And yet, between the little then and now,
What worlds of life, and thought, and feeling keen!
What spiritual depths and heights unseen!—
Ah me! between the little then and now.

For little things seem mighty when we're young;
Then we rush onward through the changing years,
Testing the gamut of all smiles and tears,
Till mighty things seem little; we are old.

—Alice Wellington Rollins.

SHORT-STORY WRITERS.

Some of the Best Known Contributors of Fiction and the Wages Which They Receive.

"A few days ago a local newspaper man fired this query at me," says a writer for the Brooklyn Eagle:

"How shall I go about it to have a serial story accepted by one of the popular weeklies?"

"Have you submitted this literary infant to any of them?"

"Have I?" A warm smile lingered on his countenance a moment. "For a year past I have been sending it from one to another. The usual answer I receive is: 'Your story is very clear, both in plot and construction, but still it is not suitable to the columns of our paper.' Knowing the long experience you have had in writing for popular periodicals, I come to you for advice. Now, I don't believe one of those accursed editors ever read as much as five lines of my story."

My friend was wrong there. In all the largest publishing houses from which cheap publications are issued, as much attention is given to the reading of manuscript as a city editor gives to looking over news copy a reporter outside his regular staff might bring him. The day city editor can, as a rule, after perusing one page of manuscript, determine whether it is worth while to read the article to the end. So it is with the professional readers on the story papers. In nearly every case they can tell whether a serial will suit after reading a few chapters. By this it must not be inferred that these gentlemen, to whom even the most popular authors have to bow down in reverence, are unerring in judgment.

A rule prevalent in nearly all establishments is that copy from a regular writer must pass through the hands of at least two readers—the second one being left in darkness as to the report of his fellow employe on the story. It frequently happens the opinions are diverse. Then a trusted writer, or, more generally, the proprietor of the paper passes final judgment on the matter, and very often that means that the author has to rewrite, perhaps more than one-half of his story, which is not very pleasant.

With very few exceptions a story is paid for in installments. In the case of a known writer the story is accepted or declined on the first two installments, and if accepted these installments are paid immediately. As to the amounts paid, they vary far more than the fame or the ability of the authors, many of the higher-priced authors having gained a secure footing through accident.

Harlan P. Halsey, of this city, claims to be the best paid story writer. Not long since he told me George Munro was paying him at the rate of $7,500 per annum for the "Old Sleuth" stories. Among the women writers Mrs. Southworth leads, with Mary E. Bryan a close second. Mrs. Southworth has something like $7,000 per annum from the New York Ledger. The other lady, who came not so very long ago from below Mason and Dixon's line, attracted the attention of her present employer by her work on the Sunny South. Her pen yields her over $5,000 a year. Speaking of the South, there is another lady living there who makes a living writing for Northern weeklies, and her pen is probably the most prolific in the business, but yet she does not earn as much as Mary E. Bryan. This is Mrs. E. Burke Collins, of New Orleans. I believe the first paper on which she earned money was the New York Clipper, to the columns of which she furnished several serials and many sketches. I have known a serial from Mrs. Collins' pen to be running in the New York Weekly, another in the Family Story Paper, and a third in the Saturday Night. Besides she furnished a sketch weekly to the Family Story Paper, and also did other literary work. It is said of Mrs. Collins that she has never been seen by any of her Northern publishers. Still another Southern lady whose romances are highly popular with the masses is Mrs. Emma Garrison-Jones, who is employed by Norman L. Munro. This lady is an invalid, and has not left her home in years. Her salary is about equal to that of Mary E. Bryan, and to earn it Mrs. Garrison-Jones is not required to write as much as the former. As a rule, persons who write of the salaries of actors or writers are given to exaggeration.

At the time of the death of Colonel E. Z. C. Judson (Ned Buntline) it was said that for many years Messrs. Street & Smith had paid him $12,000 salary. As a matter of fact, the most Buntline made in his halcyon days was about $5,000. To the writer's personal knowledge the late George G. Small (Bricktop) was paid $5,000. But there was a time in poor Small's history when his income amounted to triple that sum, and it came from the half interest he held in a once very popular paper, now defunct, named Wild Oats. Small was originally a carpenter and worked for years at the bench. His first writings were published in the Police Gazette. He was a warm-hearted man and helped many a struggling writer to attain at least a fair meed of [illegible] for bad [illegible] the paper would be alive and prosperous to-day.

Small made this city his home. Another Brooklyn man immensely popular as a story writer is Denis O. Sullivan, who, when he don't sign his own name to his productions, uses the nom de plume, Corporal Morgan Rattler. His forte is Irish stories and romances for boys. He is a printer by trade. Many of the men who pose in the higher ranks of literature secretly envy the final success of their less pretentious brethren, and not a few of these moguls have sent stories to the cheaper publications only to have them refused. A case came under my notice not many months ago that is worth describing. I was shown a letter from a prominent member of the Author's Club, who offered to write a sketch weekly—under an assumed name, of course—for a popular paper for a ridiculously small sum. The would-be contributor was informed by return mail that his offer could not be entertained.

Every now and then it is chronicled by the daily papers that a party of boys having had their minds inflamed by reading Indian stories have robbed their parents and started West to have a "go" with the red men. As a matter of fact not an Indian nor a pirat story has been published by any New York weekly in years—one paper of rather limited circulation excepted. There are plenty of so-called "boys' libraries" where gore is served up in plenty and of endless variety for a nickel. None of the larger houses will publish such matter, even if it was demonstrated to them that there was money in the scheme.

Both the Munros—they are brothers—come from an inland town in Nova Scotia. The elder (George) was intended for the ministry, but gave up that idea and came to New York, where he obtained work in a publishing house. He eventually engaged in business for himself, and sent for his brother Norman, who entered George's employ. A wide difference in age exists between the two, and their natures are not similar. George, with out being penurious, is said to be saving. Norman is open-handed and generous, and yet he is probably the more wealthy of the two. When he started in business it was on a very meager capital, and just about sixteen years ago. To-day Norman L. Munro is worth over a million dollars. Two years ago he swore in a suit where he was plaintiff for infringement on his rights that the year previously he had spent $350,000 in advertising alone. James Elverson, proprietor of Saturday Night, is also very wealthy. He was once Washington correspondent for the Public Ledger, the owner of which, George W. Childs, gave him considerable help at the outset of his career as a publisher. Both members of the original firm of Street & Smith are dead. Previous to starting the New York Weekly they were employed in the office of the Dispatch. Both died rich. Without exception, however, Robert Bonner, who retired from the Ledger quite recently, is the most wealthy of any of the publishers named.

With all his wealth the life of a publisher who attends punctually to his business is far from being a happy one. He is worried from the moment he reaches his office in the morning until he leaves at night. No class of business men are so annoyed by advertising canvassers. But there is another pest that for pure cussedness can give the most cheeky advertising agents points. This species is ladies who have had stories rejected by the editor. They abuse the latter to their hearts' content, and then insist upon reading the rejected manuscript to the publisher, promising in advance to prove that the aforesaid story is one of the best of its kind evolved from human brain. The publisher doesn't stop to listen. He discovers with alarming suddenness that he has an engagement with an ink manufacturer around the corner and leaves. Does the crushed authoress take herself off? No, she doesn't. Instead she waits for hours, if need be, the return of the publisher, and if he fails to come back she will be on hand bright and early next morning. I've known a publisher in a fit of desperation to purchase a story he did not want from one of these persistent persons. He thought so little of it that he gave it away in pamphlet form as a supplement to his paper.

That was some years ago and the writer of the story has since improved so much in the character of her work, and her services are so largely sought after, that she is able to dictate large terms, which are seldom refused.

Not Much of Anything in His Carpet Bag.

"I was the only passenger one day last summer with a Helderberg farmer," a gentleman said to a Journal rambler yesterday, "on the Knowersville local train, and I think I ache yet with laughter. The farmer was an unusually bucolic-looking fellow, with four years' mud on his heavy boots. We hadn't got far out of Knowersville—excuse me, Altamont — when Baggageman McChesney burst into the car and stalked up to the farmer with an expression on his face that might have betokened anger or curiosity or sorrow. I afterward found out it involved all three. He said:

"'Say, what in —— have you got in that carpet bag of yours?' The countryman shrank back in his seat, while a half-grieved, half-fearful expression spread over his good-natured face. 'I—I—well—I only got a—a—a couple o' skunks in it.' It transpired that he had caught two skunks, and decided that the best way to get them into the city was to put them in his carpet bag and check it to Albany. Of course, as it was checked, Mac couldn't throw it off; so he tied it by a string between the cars and left it there to bump along over the ties and air itself."—Albany Journal.

Some News About Brushes.

Most brushes are made by machinery, though the hand-made article is said to be the best.

Painting brushes are made of the hair of camels, badgers, and goats and consist of but one "tuft."

The bristles of coarse brushes are fastened to the back by wire made of copper and tin, the back containing holes for the purpose.

Tooth-brushes are not made much in this country, the business being confined to France. There the girls get 7 cents for drawing the bristles through 1,000 holes.

Brushes made for toilet use should not be permitted to remain wet long. Standing them up makes them dry quickly and the water should always be shaken out on getting through with them.

Enormous Demand for Eggs.

An egg merchant, who goes from house to house buying eggs, told us a few days since, that he expected to have to pay 50 cents a dozen for eggs before Christmas.

This is remarkable, when we reflect that the poultry industry of this country last year amounted to nearly seven hundred million dollars; and even then, we had to import several million dollars worth of foreign eggs. Our own egg-raisers ought to have this money. The demand for fresh eggs for food alone far exceeds the supply. At fifty cents per dozen eggs are as cheap as beefsteak for food. Many persons who keep hens will probably not have an egg to sell when they reach fifty cents. Some one may ask, "what can a body do, when the pesky old hens stop laying, and the pullets refuse to begin until spring?" Why do as Wm. H. Yeomans, of Columbia, Conn., editor of the Germantown Telegraph did last winter. He says: "Last fall I made an experiment worth giving our readers. Until about Dec. 1st, I was getting from twenty common hens, only one or two eggs a day. I decided to try Sheridan's Condition Powder. I confess I had but little faith in its value to make hens lay. Commenced feeding, and for nine days saw very little effect. Then the hens began laying and in three months laid 888 eggs. Part of the time the thermometer was 12 degrees below zero, and my hens were laying a dozen eggs a day, while my neighbors (who did not use the powder) were getting none. I new, without hesitation, believe it is a valuable aid to farmers for egg-production." Well might he believe, for nearly 72 dozen eggs, in three months, from twenty common hens, with eggs worth 50 cents, is worth having. I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House street, Boston, Mass., (the only makers of Sheridan's Condition Powder to make hens lay,) will send, postpaid to any person, two 25 cent packs of powder, and a new Poultry Raising Guide, for 60 cents. The book alone costs 25 cents. For $1.00 five packs of powder and a book; for $1.20 a large 2 1-4 pound can and book; six cans for $5.00, express prepaid. Send stamps or cash. Interesting testimonals sent free. eow1y

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1yeow1,w1,f1,cu1d

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush on the druggists still continues and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to give entire satisfaction. Price 50c. and $1. Trial size free. dec30

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the Balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle today to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at all druggists. But [illegible] Leila Wharton [illegible] again [illegible] at her [illegible] with her elbows on the [illegible] and her head in her hands. [illegible] watching her, and she hasn't stirred for five minutes."

"What on earth do you suppose she is thinking about?" said Alice Fortescue.

It was on a cheerless October afternoon, and the last dull rays of daylight were illuminating the deserted schoolroom, where Miss Barley—nicknamed by the giddy girls of Appleonook Seminary "Barleycorn," simply because in a school-girl atmosphere it is absolutely necessary that everyone should have a nickname—sat there all alone.

Leila and Alice had been out to get autumn leaves, and now in the dusk they were flattening their fresh young faces against the window-glass, watching her on the sly.

"Isn't she plain?" said Leila, with a shudder. "And so old, too! Why, she's eight-and-twenty if she's a day!"

"That at least!" declared Alice in a whisper.

To these fifteen and sixteen year old "slips" eight-and-twenty summers represent quite a venerable old age.

"I do wonder, Leila, what she is thinking about?"

"Her lover, I suppose," said little Miss Wharton with a grimace.

"I don't believe she ever had such a thing in her life!" cried Alice. "She, indeed! With such a crooked nose, and eyes just the color of a green-clouded marble!"

"She had, though," said Leila; "I know, because old Mrs. Blackmore told me. And he went away somewhere and never came back. Or else he forgot all about her—I don't really recollect which it was. He must have been a perfect gorilla, or he never would have fancied her! And his name was John Bates! Think of that—John Bates!"

"Everybody can't have three syllabled names," observed Alice. "And—oh, how cold the wild wind sweeps up from the lake! Let's go in."

"And rouse Barleycorn?"

"She can't sit there pondering all night."

The lamps were lighted, the sound of the clanging tea-bell summoned the hungry young swarm of damsels to a repast of freshly-baked brown-bread, apple-sauce, and mugs of milk.

Miss Barley looked up from her desk as Alice and Leila came by, arm-in-arm, with clusters of scarlet leaves in their hats.

"Miss Fortescue," said she quietly, "these French exercise are disgraceful. You will have to do them over again before bedtime."

Alice Fortescue's pretty brown brows knit themselves together petulantly.

"Before bedtime? But I can't, Miss Barley. I'm to sew bows on my new silk dress to-night. I shall want to wear it at the fortnightly reception tomorrow."

"The French exercises must be attended to first."

"Must!" impatiently cried out Alice.

"Yes, must. But remember, Miss Fortescue," the teacher gently added, "the rules are not of my making, and I have my orders to see that they are enforced."

Alice brushed by without a word of reply, her fair brow clouded over, her rosebud lips twisted into a pout.

"Cross old thing!" she muttered to Leila; "to spoil my evening so!"

"It's just what she likes to do," said Leila, full of sympathy; "but I'll tell you how you can manage, Alice. Cleora Field will do the exercises for you if you give her some of those cream chocolates you bought to-day, and you and I will play a lovely trick on old Barleycorn."

The cloud vanished from Alice Fortescue's forehead; the lips became a perfect Cupid's bow of coral once more.

"We'll write her a note," whispered Leila; "we'll make her think that her lover wants to see her again. Fancy old Barleycorn wending her way to the Chapel Pond by moonlight, to meet somebody who isn't there! Fancy her disappointment! And oh, Alice, only think what a capital story it will make for the girls!"

And the two malicious young conspirators giggled together in an ecstasy of glee.

It was a cruel plot, but Alice and Leila were very young, and had never known the envenomed pangs of hope deferred. That was their only excuse.

Miss Barley had finished her share of the daily treadmill of lessons, a day or so afterwards, and had gone out to get a breath of fresh air in the dreary poplar walk at the north end of the house, when a rough-looking little boy, with frost-nipped fingers and toes, and great black eyes, like those of a gipsy, sidled up to her and slipped a folded bit of paper into her hand.

"Iwas told to give it to you, miss," said he, and vanished like a human squirrel into the shrubberies.

Ruth Barley looked after him in surprise, and then she opened the note. In it were printed, in rude imitation of Roman letters, the words:

"In the old place beside the Chapel Pond at nine to-night. John Bates has returned."

Miss Barley grew very pale; then the blood rushed in a scalding torrent through every vein in her body.

John Bates! Was she dreaming? Or was the thread of that sweet old love-story to be taken up again at the old place, just where it had been broken off seven long years ago?

Ruth's heart beat, her breath came quickly, and a sense of wild exultation filled all her soul. For it never once occurred to her that all this might be only a hoax.

Chapel Pond was a deep glittering sheet of water lying in the heart of the woods about a quarter of a mile away, and deriving its name from the steep rocks which walled it in on three sides, which were supposed to bear some resemblance to the Gothic pillars of a chapel. On the fourth side the woods fringed the shore, and close by was a secluded dell where the violets blossomed earliest in the spring-time, and great clusters of maiden-hair fern grew in rich profusion.

How happy Ruth Barley had been then, in the old days, before her lover went away—how wretched afterwards!

She pressed the crumpled bit of paper to her lips again and again.

"Oh," she murmured to herself, "I am the happiest woman in the world! What right have I to expect a second blossoming time in my life? and yet it has come."

Half the girls at Appleonook Seminary had been let into the secret of this "excellent joke," and were watching Miss Barley from one vantage point or another, as she threw a black Shetland shawl over her head, and slipped out of the house just when the hands of the clock in the hall were nearing a quarter to nine.

[illegible] laughed as the door [illegible] behind the English governess, who fondly supposed herself to be unnoticed; some whispered, one or two looked grave.

Only the other teachers gossiping around the fire, and Madame Appleton herself, writing letters in her own sanctum, remained in ignorance of what was going on.

Little Louis Belville started to her feet.

"Girls," she cried, "it's too bad! It's cruel—that's what it is! It shall not go on! I'll run after her, and tell her that the whole thing is a deceit!"

But Leila Wharton pulled her back as she was springing to open the door.

"It's too late," she said. "You couldn't overtake her now. And it is such a splendid joke! Just wait until you see the expression of her face when she comes back. We shall be avenged for Barleycorn's viciousness now!"

Slowly the time-tarnished minute-hand of the venerable clock travelled around the dial. Nine o'clock came, half-past nine—ten. Still no Miss Barley returned.

The governess on duty for that particular evening, one Pugsley, with eyes that looked different ways, rose up with a yawn at last.

"Time for evening prayers and bed, girls," said she.

"Oh, not yet!" pleaded the girls with one accord.

And each had some special reason to give for desiring five minutes' more delay.

"It's past hours already," said Miss Pugsley, "and——"

Just then the door opened: Miss Barley came in.

But instead of a pale discomfited face, she wore a most radiant aspect. Her eyes sparkled, and her cheeks were crimsoned with an unusual glow. She went up to Miss Pugsley (who was a good soul, although not fair to look upon), and Alice Fortescue could hear her say in low tones:

"Dear Harriet, congratulate me. My lover has come back, and we are to be married next week. I have just seen him down by Chapel Pond. I'll tell you all about it by-and-by. I am going to see the madame now."

Like wildfire the news spread through the room. The girls looked blankly at each other.

"It can't be possible!" cried Leila Wharton.

"I only know what I heard her say," declared Alice, looking half-frightened.

"I am so glad!" exclaimed Louise Belville, joyously clapping her hands—"oh, so glad!"

While in madam's little sanctum, Ruth Barley was telling the worthy preceptress how John Bates had traveled half around the world—how he had been a prisoner in the heart of Africa for months—how at last he had established himself in a good business in South America, and had finally come back to claim the promise Ruth had given him long ago.

"He has written again and again," she said, "and he can't understand how it is that he never got any answer. But how could I reply to letters that never reached me?"

Madame kissed the fluttering little governess in her slow and stately way.

"My dear, I congratulate you," she said. "Of course, deeply as I regret losing a good teacher, I shall not object to cancelling your engagement with me, under the circumstances!"

And she smiled and nodded, and looked preternaturally wise.

* * *

"How did it happen?" said John Bates.

"Why in the most natural way in the world. I came in on the evening stage, and when I got to the little stone stile and footpath that led down to the old spot, I told the driver to leave my traps at the hotel, and I'd take the short cut through the woods, seeing that it was such a fine night and the moon at full. Just an excuse you know to look at the remembered haunt. And as I stood there, thinking of the happy old times, who should come right into the glade but Ruthie herself, just as if it were only yesterday that we parted!"

"But," cried Miss Barley—Mrs. Bates she was now—"who could have sent me that note? John declares he didn't. How could he, when he didn't even know that I was teaching at the seminary?"

"Why of course it was he!" said everyone.

And deny it vehemently as he would, no one believed him.

But the young ladies of the Appleonook Seminary kept their own counsel. And Alice Fortescue and Leila Wharton declare that they will play no more practical jokes.

SOCIETY NEWS AND PERSONAL NOTES.

—Dr. Frank L. Benedict has again set Portsmouth society in a buzz by the announcement to his intimate friends that he will be married on next Thursday, the 20th instant. He starts for New York city on the morning of the 19th and expects to return to his apartments at the Rockingham with his bride on the 21st, his professional duties not permitting his taking an extended trip. The Dr. shows his good sense by not waiting until the spring to be married, as was his first intention, and he is to be congratulated on the speedy consummation of his plans. His wife will receive a warm welcome by his many friends and admirers in this city.

—On Wednesday evening, 12th inst., Capt. and Mrs. Robert F. Bradford gave a card party at their residence on the Navy Yard. These delightful little parties are becoming quite fashionable in Navy circles, and the Commandant of the yard and Mrs. Bradford, who enjoy having their friends around them, are constantly throwing open their hospitable home. The other officers of the yard are inclined to follow the precedent set, and the frequent interchange of social civilities will make this winter quite a gay one on the yard.

—Miss Alice Thompson is in Boston, and if rumor be true, she has a lovely trousseau being made which will excite the envy of many of our Portsmouth young ladies. It is understood that her marriage with Mr. Chas. Rollins Jr. will occur on the 17th of January, and that the wedding will be one of the most brilliant ever seen in Portsmouth. Over two hundred invitations will be issued. It is regretted on all sides that Portsmouth society is to lose Miss Thompson, who is a great favorite. Her home after her marriage will be in Idaho, where Mr. Rollins is engaged in business.

—Miss Elizabeth Foster of Middle street gave a progressive euchre party on Wednesday evening, which was one of the prettiest parties of the kind ever given in this city. The favors, or prizes as they are called, were very dainty, and the winners were indeed fortunate in securing such exquisite souvenirs. Besides the young ladies from Miss Morgan's seminary, there were present Miss Edith Burbank, Miss Carrie Treadwell, Miss Margaret Wildes, and Miss Marion Fendall, and among the gentlemen present were Mr. Harry Yates, Mr. Frank Cosby and Mr. Ned. Higbee.

—Mrs. James P. Bartlett gave a euchre party at her spacious state street residence on Friday, the 14th inst., from four to seven, which was a very enjoyable affair. Among those so fortunate as to be present were Mrs. Richter, Mrs. Winder, Mrs. Gooding, Mrs. Treadwell, Mrs. Cosby, Mrs. Cogswell, Mrs. Frank Hatch, Mrs. Decatur, Mrs. Gerry, and the Misses Goodwin, Hatch, Gerry, Foster, and Miss Emery of Portland.

—A large dancing party was given at the Boston Navy Yard last Saturday evening by the young ladies connected with the yard. The affair was held in the Armory and was a most brilliant success, the full band being in attendance. Lieuts. Winder and Shipley served in the capacity of floor managers, and covered themselves with glory. Miss Melcher, so well known in this city, and at present visiting in Boston, was the guest of the Misses Carpenter for the occasion, the latter young ladies having originated the idea of giving a party on so large a scale.

—Mr. and Mrs. Thos. F. Carter are located for the winter at Wingate's, they having arrived in the city on Tuesday evening, the 11th inst. Mrs. Carter is a very charming woman, tall, dignified and gr[illegible] beauty. She will undoubtedly [illegible] a favorite in Portsmouth so[illegible]

—A postponed meeting of the young lady participants in the Pirates of Penzance, was held at the residence of Mrs. Lyon on Middle street, Friday afternoon last, to make final arrangements in regard to costumes. Those selected are to be extremely unique and the whole opera will undoubtedly be a great success, from both a musical and artistic standpoint.

—Mr. and Mrs. Dole Wadley have been expecting to spend Christmas with their daughter, Mrs. Capehart, at Annapolis, but owing to the delay in the completion of the improvements to their house, the visit has been postponed until spring. Their house, by the way, when finished will be one of the handsomest and most complete in the city.

—Mrs. W. W. Wishart, nee Miss Helen Kimball of this city, and now of Devil's Lake, Dakota, is in Washington with her little son, having come east to spend the winter there with her mother and father.

—Mrs. Dr. Oliver is confined to her room at the Rockingham, having been indisposed now for some weeks. Her friends are extremely anxious as to her condition, but hope to see her around soon again.

—Miss Ball and her sister Miss Julia, who were called to Connecticut early last week on account of the death of their aunt, Mrs. Britton, returned home last Saturday evening.

—Mrs. Winchester and her daughter, Mrs. Hackett, spent last Wednesday and Thursday in Boston, staying at the Clement House.

—Play Inspector and Mrs. George A. Lyon spent last Thursday in Boston, where they went to make their Christmas purchases.

—Hon. Frank Jones and Capt. Bradford were in Washington last week. The former was registered at the Riggs House on Friday, but will be home tonight.

—Dr. William K. Shea and wife, of Philadelphia, arrived in this city on Friday. Mrs. Shea will remain over the holidays on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Mendum, but Dr. Shea returns at once to Philadelphia on account of professional engagements.

—Mrs. Fannie Beaumont, widow of Rear Admiral John C. Beaumont, U. S. N., who died Aug. 2d, 1882, was married Dec. 13th, at Washington, to Mr. Reinholm Halm, ex-Mayor of Hagerstown, Md. Mr. Halm is a prominent lawyer of western Maryland. The bride and groom, after the ceremony, left for Hagerstown, which will be their future home.

—The family of Paymaster Joseph Foster will probably go to Norfolk, Va., to live soon after the first of the year, he having been ordered to the Norfolk Navy Yard as General Storekeeper, in which event it is quite likely that Dr. M. H. Simons will take their house on Middle street and bring his family from Portland where they now are.

—The condition of Mr. Thomas F. Flanagan continues quite serious, and his attending physician, Dr. Clark, describes the trouble as a pronounced type of typhoid fever. It is to be hoped that Mr. Flanagan will not have a long run of this dread disease. He lies at the residence of Mr. Fred F. Moses on Islington street, where he will receive every attention possible.

THE COURT OF KING JOLLYBOY.

The first stage performance of "The Court of King Jollyboy" was held at Music hall on Saturday afternoon, and the run of the piece was very smooth and easy, each part being assigned with particular regard to a conception of its requirements by the individual impersonator, as well as an ability to display that conception by word and act. That Mr. Preston has been successful in this task, making careful selection from the young people of our city, we venture to assert, and believe that our opinion will receive a hearty endorsement from the public after it has witnessed the performance of this most pleasing and entertaining operetta by the young misses and gentlemen who are devoting every spare minute to the study and rehearsal of their parts. The music is bright and charming, several of the prettiest airs that have made light opera so popular for the past few years being introduced. The dialogue is witty and entertaining, and receives a certain natural delivery from the little folks, with a consequent effect that is enlivening and captivating.

To forestall our entertainment-loving people regarding "King Jollyboy" would be unkind to them, and also unjust to the management, but a few slight allusions to the more notable and agreeable features will not be trespassing at all on the domain of the eager public, or the director. The first act is short and purely introductory, with a very pleasing effect to the eye, the entrance of the King, Queen and their retinue, affording a display of beautiful costumes. During the second act the lights in the hall are extinguished, the scene being laid in a dark forest, where Titania the fairy appears to the three Princes. The young lady taking this part has already captured the hearts of our people by her sweet, artistic singing, and it is a safe conclusion that she will hold her captives closer and dearer than ever, after "Jollyboy" has been seen and heard. Act three opens with a hall in Kitty Castle, and a maid of honor [illegible] that continues through the Ca[illegible] which is performed by Poll, Moll and Sallie of the Royal Ballet. This is a feature that must be seen to be appreciated. It is one of the hits of the piece, and the dancing of Poll is exceedingly light and graceful. A case of love at first sight, between the owl and one of the cats, and their courtship, carries the operetta merrily and all too hastily along. Titania charms us again, and then the princesses render a trio which is thought by many to be the prettiest thing produced during the evening. The act closes with a gavotte and march that are really fine; the only feature about them to be regretted is that they are far too short.

After the curtain drops on King Jollyboy, Masters Ross and Jacobs do some very clever club swinging, and again the curtain rises on a reconstructed act from the "Cadets' Picnic," which was such a pronounced success last season and which will be given by special request.

The instrumental music will be rendered by Miss Lizzie Davis, Mrs. Charles K. Wadham and Miss Helen Pearson, accompanied by Mr. Clarence Joy on the violin. As we have before announced, Mrs. Frank Williams is superintending the vocal training, and Capt. Frank Williams is fast bringing the Cadets to a proficiency in drill that is marvellous.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

Capt. Robt. F. Bradford has been to Washington for a few days. It is current rumor that he was called there to be consulted as to what duty he prefers at the expiration of his present detail. He is well up on the list of captains and his friends say he could undoubtedly remain in his present position for another year if he so desires, but that he prefers to waive all claim to it, as he has always held that an officer should take his turn on shore and on sea, as the case may be.

The venerable Mr. McCaffery of Wibird street has been sick for the last week with the measles, and his wife and youngest son, Benjamin Harrison, who arrived in this world on the morning of the 11th inst., have both broken out with the same trouble. They have the sympathy of many friends, who wish them a speedy recovery.

MARITIME NOTES.

Steamer Pinafore, Capt. Oscar Laighton, came in from the Isles of Shoals on Saturday afternoon, and went out again after a short stay.

The schooner Sarah, bound from Deer Isle, Me., for Boston with a load of stone, in making this harbor on Friday evening last was in collision with another eastern schooner, bound to Boston with a cargo of pressed hay. The latter had several bales of her deck load knocked overboard, but apparently sustained no other [illegible] was slightly in[illegible] other[illegible] was towed up to the [illegible] on Saturday [illegible] repairs.

The schooner Etna, of Swampscott, on Saturday brought in 10,000 lbs. of cod fish, averaging larger than any other fare brought in here this season, and sold the take to E. Newton & Co. at $6 per hundred, stocking $500 for the trip. Newton & Co. shipped over 200 boxes of fish to the metropolitan markets last week.

Prof. Gasseford's lecture and entertainment on the Wonders of the Heavens will be given at the Universalist church tomorrow (Tuesday) evening. The wonderful discoveries by the new Lick telescope will be presented. It is highly commended as a very worthy entertainment. Read the programme, and go to the Universalist church Tuesday evening.

Elder William P. Israel, pastor of the Advent church in this city, was conducting protracted meetings in the Advent church at Seabrook last week.

A dancing school is to be commenced in the town hall at Hampton on Friday evening of this week.

No dyspepsia or headache in the house where Laxador is kept. This valuable remedy drives off all diseases arising from impure blood. Price 25 cents.

Mrs. Alice Shattuck and her husband, Herbert L. Shattuck, were held in the Concord police court on the 14th in $1000 each, the former for perjury, and the latter for subornation of perjury.

Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by expelling impurity from the blood, which is the cause of the complaint. Give it a trial.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

CLEVELAND BROTHERS, ALBANY, N. Y.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO. 106 Wall Street, New York.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

Hunger from Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It is an inflammation of the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn. "N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Mr. Hale offered a resolution authorizing the committee on the next census to hear statements, and take testimony of experts. Referred.

The conference report on the bill as to the Chippewa Indian reservation in Minnesota was made by Dawes and fully explained. It was agreed to.

HOUSE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—In the House today Sowden of Pennsylvania from the committee on accounts, reported a resolution appropriating $2000 out of the contingent fund of the House to pay the expenses of the Ford Immigration committee. Debate ensued as to whether this was not a junketing affair. Mr. Cox argued against going to extremes in excluding contract labor. He thought Ministers and Actors ought to be admitted. The resolution was adopted.

Hooker of Mississippi and Barnes of Georgia filibustered to prevent the House from considering the Oklahoma bill today. Warner of Missouri gave notice that he was willing that the bill be laid aside temporarily. Hooker suggested that it be laid aside eternally. Mr. Warner: "I know the gentleman would like to see it laid aside eternally, and I know many people interested in cattle syndicates who would say 'amen.'"

Many bills were introduced under the call of States, among them one by Grout of Vermont to enable people to choose their own postmasters.

Mr. Springer of Illinois, on behalf of the committee on Territories, moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution making the Senate bill for the admission of South Dakota a special order for tomorrow, and from day to day until disposed of, providing that the omnibus bill may be offered as a substitute therefor, and thereafter that other bills relating to the admission of Territories be disposed of in the order fixed by the committee. Mr. Reed of Maine regarded the resolution as an effort on the part of the majority to appear to desire to admit Dakota, while complicating the question with other matters. Mr. Cox hoped the gentleman would be wrong in his anticipations. This was patriotic work in which both parties could join. The motion was agreed to and resolution adopted.

House then adjourned.

News Expected today from the Galena and Yantic.—The Richmond to go to the Chinese Squadron, and the Boston to be disinfected in New York.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—In consequence of the announcement that Legitime intends sending the steamer Haytien Republic to this place instead of delivering her up at Fort-au-Prince, it is expected the orders for the U. S. S. Richmond to get ready to proceed to Hayti will be countermanded, and the vessel sent to China for duty as flagship of the Asiatic squadron.

It is expected that news will be received tomorrow announcing the arrival of the Galena and the Yantic at Port-au-Prince, unless they have encountered bad weather and been delayed. The news of the next two or three days will probably determine whether we are going to have any trouble with Hayti or not.

Secretary Whitney has issued orders for the disinfection of the new cruiser Boston at the navy yard, and it is probable that Asst. Surgeon William Martin will supervise the work. By order of the Secretary, Rear Admiral Gherardi designated Medical Directors Delavan Bloodgood and Albert Gihon, and Medical Inspector E. S. Bogert to conduct an inquiry as to the origin of the fever and whether further disinfection was necessary, and it is upon their recommendation that the disinfection is to be made.

Railroad Accident.

Special to Daily Chronicle.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 17.—A new shifting engine named Titan was discharged from the shops here today, and at once ordered to Manchester for service there. She had proceeded but a short distance when she collided with the Gov. Stearns, a passenger locomotive, which had been doing shifting at the Pulp mill two miles below Concord station. There was a thick fog at the time, and the engineers could not see far enough ahead to avert the accident. Engineer John Williams of the Titan was thrown through the forward cab window, and instantly killed. His fireman, Quimby, received a bad scalp wound. The engineer of the Gov. Stearns was badly injured. The accident occurred about one o'clock. Both engines were badly smashed.

Appealing for Vindication with His Foot in the Grave. Ex-Governor Holden of North Carolina Wants to Die with a Clean Record.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 17.—Ex-Governor Holden who was impeached by the legislature in 1871 and found guilty of high crime and misdemeanor, has made a very pathetic appeal to be exonerated before he dies. He says he is very old and feeble and declares his innocence of wrong intention. He concludes his petition as follows:

"I am not now a party man. Both parties have disowned me. I appeal to you solely on the ground of justice. I have never been an enemy to the State. On the contrary, I have loved her well, and do now, and am her loyal son, though proscribed and banned."

Matters Quiet at Birmingham.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Dec. 17.—Dick Hawes, the alleged murderer of his wife and child, and on whose account the recent riot occurred, expects to get a change of venue if his case ever comes to trial. Many persons believe he will never leave the jail alive, although since the terrible tragedy of the 8th all fears of further attacks upon the jail have abated. The rage of people who talk about the affair seemed to have turned entirely toward Sheriff Smith, and many ugly threats have been made against him.

Senator Hearst Has Not Invested $58,000 in the Horse Ormonde. The Derby Winner to go to South America.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—Senator Hearst authorizes the statement that he has not bought the celebrated horse Ormonde, the winner of the Derby races. It is understood here that the horse was purchased by a syndicate of wealthy men living in Buenos Ayres, South America.

It Could Not be Otherwise and Represent the Country.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Assistant Secretary of state Rives denies the report that the United States has asked for the appointment of a successor of Lord Sackville, under a threat that unless one is made Minister Phelps will be recalled. He says that the state department is perfectly indifferent whether a British minister is sent here or not.

No Political Significance.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Dec. 17.—Gen. Alger denies the report that he went to Augusta with an important message from Harrison to Blaine, but says he has not seen Harrison since the election. His visit had no political significance whatever, as he went to consult with Blaine about some Atchison stock he and friends were interested in.

Mrs. Cleveland at Philadelphia.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 17.—Mrs. Cleveland arrived this evening, and is the guest of Rev. Dr. Wood and wife of Germantown. She comes to take a rest, visit friends and do Christmas shopping. Tomorrow evening she dines with Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Childs.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—The President today sent to the Senate the nomination of Lyman S. Strickland of Maine, to be collector for the District of Aroostook, Maine.

We Guess Not; Tell it to the Marines.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Dec. 17.—The Register prints a story to the effect that a friend of President-elect Harrison visited the city recently and sounded leading politicians as to the acceptability of Hon. N. D. Sperry in the event of the Postmaster Generalship being tendered him. The Register mentions no names, and story is not altogether free from the element of vagueness.

The Train Robbers Got Only $3,000. If They Had Waited One Train, Would Have Secured $139,000.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Dec. 17.—The officials of the Southern Express company say their loss by the train robbery Saturday night near Duck Hill, Miss., will not exceed $3000. The train which followed had $139,000 in the express car.

The Big Schooner Wrecked.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

GLOUCESTER, MASS., Dec. 17.—J. P. Davis, a passenger on the schooner Governor Ames, from Waldoboro for Baltimore, on arrival here today on the schooner Ethel Maud said that the Ames called at Round Pond, sailing from there Sunday. She had moderate weather until Tuesday, when she encountered a gale, 50 miles southeast of Cape Cod, carrying away the foremast. The rigging became loose and all the other masts went by the board, some falling aft on deck. The weather was very cold and the vessel became unmanagable and drifted some hours, when she was fallen in with by schooners Ethel Maud and Governor Butler, which were unable to tow her in. Soundings were made on George's, anchors let go, and the vessel brought up in 20 fathoms of water. On arrival, Davis telegraphed Collector Saltonstall to send a revenue cutter to the Ames' assistance. The vessel was in good condition, having plenty of provisions, with Capt. Davis and 14 men on board. They were all cheerful, and expected to get her into port. Capt. Buckhart of the Ethel Maud said he entertained no fears for her safety, so long as the wind kept to northward and westward, but she was anchored in a bad place, being close to George's shoal, and should a gale come from the northeast it would be impossible for fishing vessels to render any assistance towards towing her, she being of such enormous size. It is understood that the Ethel Maud got $600 for coming in for assistance. Considerable rigging and sails were saved. Davis said there was only small insurance on the vessel. He left this afternoon for Boston to interview the collector and go out in the revenue cutter.

HYANNIS, MASS., Dec. 17.—Arrived schooner Mary J. Lee, Rockland for New York, with cargo of lime on fire; vessel sealed up.

Schooner Foam, Flint, Lubec for New York, lost part of her deck load, anchor and chains, and split sails.

Terrible Fight Between Blacks and Whites in Mississippi.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

COLUMBUS, MISS., Dec. 17.—Near Wahalak station on the Mobile & Ohio railroad near Macon, Miss., last Fridey, a negro and white boy had a fight. The white boy's father attempted to separate them, and was set upon by the negro boy and his father and terribly beaten. Yesterday the white man swore out a warrant for the negro's arrest. Constable Seth Cobb went to the negro's house to execute, when he was attacked by a number of negroes and beaten. He summoned a posse of 12 men and went last evening to arrest the negro. The posse was fired upon from ambush, and five killed, and six wounded. The news spread rapidly. The negroes were strongly reinforced. Wahalak telegraphed along the line for help. Meridian responded with 75 armed men, who were reinforced at every station, and on reaching Wahalak they marched immediately to the scene. The negroes were barricaded and refused to surrender, or give up the dead of the whites. At noon the forces were supposed to be about equal.

LATER—The negroes retreated to swamps, while non-combatant negroes fled to the woods in terror.

CLEVELAND CAUSES A SENSATION.

A Reward for Dirty Political Work.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—The appointment of Leon O. Bailey to be United States Attorney for the district of Indiana, sent to the Senate today, is regarded as one of the most important political appointments by this administration. It created a sensation among Indiana people at the capital. Bailey is the man who during the recent campaign collected the affidavits of Gould and others affirming the charges that Mr. Harrison said that $1 a day was enough pay for a workingman, and that Harrison had ordered strikers to be shot down. These charges were incorporated in a speech made by Bailey, and thousands of copies of the speech were cirpulated as a campaign document. Bailey has been assistant district attorney for Indiana. It is certain that every effort will be made to prevent his confirmation, and the chances are in favor of rejecting the nomination, or at least, of its suspension until adjournment.

A Mail Bag with Money Disappears at Ottawa.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

OTTAWA, ONT., Dec. 17.—Monday a mail bag containing over $1650 cash, and several letters containing money, was delivered at the Grand Trunk railroad station here, but disappeared. There is no clew.

Could Tranship, But Not Sell, His Fish.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 17.—The Gloucester fishing schooner Flora Dillaway put in here this morning to go on the marine slip for repairs. She is leaking badly, and had her mainboom carried away and foresail split. She has 5000 pounds of fresh halibut on board. Her captain asked permission to sell the fish, but was refused. He has a license issued at Canso, which allows him to tranship cargo, but not to sell it here.

The Sackville Episode Comes Up in the Commons.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—In the House of Commons today Labouchere moved that a reduction of 1000 pounds be made in the salary of the British Minister at Washington. He then censured Salisbury for the delay in appointing a successor to Lord Sackville, and for the unfriendly attitude to America, which the speaker maintained was especially shown in the Premier's speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet. Ferguson said he regretted the tone of Labouchere's remarks, and that it was impossible to enter fully into the matter now, because it was only within the last two days that the government had been placed in possession of the reasons for Sackville receiving his passports. He denied the truth of Labouchere's assertion that there was a disposition to sneer at America, and said he believed that sympathy and friendship between the two nations was too sincere to be affected by this incident of the minister's return. No declaration of any intention to delay the appointment of a successor until the new president was installed, had been made. Sir William Vernon Harcourt was pleased to hear the last statement; he urged that a successor to Lord Sackville be immediately appointed.

Col. John B. Clarke of Marchester and Warren F. Daniell of Franklin have been elected New Hampshire vice presidents of the New England association of trotting-horse breeders, which now has 547 members, a gain of 140 during 1888.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty-six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10¼x14¼. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12 50; tree calf, $12.50; English-seal style, $6.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver lettering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, DEC. 18, 1888.

It is announced as a terrible possibility by some, that if the British government does not at once, or shortly, fill the place in Washington left vacant by the dismissal of Lord Sackville, the American government will call home Minister Phelps, and diplomatic intercourse between the United States and Great Britain be practically suspended. Just what damaging effect might result from this action, should it take place, is not clear, any more than is the great benefit rendered this country by Mr. Phelps during his residence in London. Time was, that a mutual dismissal or recall of diplomatic agents by two nations was most likely to be immediately followed by a discussion with cannon balls; but this is not so likely now, and probably the recall of Mr. Phelps would not lead to the wasteful expenditure of a single ounce of powder, nor of a great deal of ink. In the British parliament for many years, "naming the gentlemen" was a very effective bugaboo. If an honorable member, under the influence of too much beer, or zeal, or wrath, persisted in making himself obnoxious, the chairman's threat "unless the gentleman immediately comes to order I shall be compelled to name him" was for many years sufficient to reduce the most reckless disturber to instant quietude. A speaker of the House of Commons, on being asked "What would happen should a member be named by the chair?" responded "I really don't know;" but at length, not many years since, the experiment was tried, and the member named, instead of being "named," kept right on as before, and nothing happened at all,—except that Parliament as soon after as was possible passed an act which, by providing a penalty, made the "naming" of a member a real power in the enforcing of order. Any slight interruption of diplomatic relations between this country and England, at the present day, is likely to turn out as did the naming of the member of Parliament, a very trifling matter, unless followed by other action, which in this case is not even among the remote probabilities.

But little credit should be attached to the rumors telegraphed from Indianapolis from day to day regarding cabinet appointments. The agent of the Associated Press and the special correspondents stationed in that city are expected to furnish about so much matter daily, and the only way they can do so is by guessing and indulging in speculations. Their facilities for obtaining reliable news are not half so good as enjoyed by the newspaper men in Washington who are brought into daily contact with Republican leaders who are in correspondence with Gen. Harrison. We venture the prediction that the first authentic news regarding Gen. Harrison's cabinet will come from Washington and not from Indianapolis. Gen. Harrison has thus far positively declined to talk with the reporters who have flocked to Indianapolis, in expectation of getting inside information about the construction of his cabinet, and this being so it is absurd to attach any importance to the stories telegraphed from there. When the proper time comes Gen. Harrison will take counsel of experienced and trusted leaders as to the formation of his cabinet, but until this is done the cabinet talk is mere guesswork on the part of the newspapers.

The Democratic administration is undergoing just now an experience similar to that of the closing days of President Arthur's term. Postmasters from all over the country are sending in their conditional resignations; that is, they tender their resignation in favor of the appointment of a certain named Republican, practically enabling him to name his successor. This same scheme was tried four years ago, but did not succeed, President Arthur refusing to embarrass the incoming administration by commissioning a Democratic postmaster for four years just on the eve of his going out of office. It is to the credit of President Cleveland that he does not give this proposition his support, but has refused to accept any of these conditional resignations. If Republicans are to go into the postmaterships it is proper that they should be appointed by a Republican administration and not by a Democratic one, and any Republican who now seeks to obtain an [illegible] for the fourth of next March.

Rev. Mr. Dacosta, in a sermon at New York on Sunday attacked the Sunday papers, and declared that their suppression was as necessary as that of houses of ill fame. He also said the week-day papers were as good as could be expected, with the exception of one which printed Bible texts at the head of its columns, and sporting news beneath!

Literary Notes.

Competent critics have frequently remarked that the author of "Ben-Hur" had in him the elements of a dramatist. Their judgment upon General Lew Wallace will be sustained by his play "Commodus," in Harper's Magazine for January. The action of the drama develops several powerful scenes, the vigor of which J. R. Weguelin, the artist, renders with fidelity in as many illustrations. One of the drawings, entitled "This Baiting thou shalt rue," forms the frontispiece of the Magazine. There is a suggestion of the Greek chorus in the band of Bacchantes. The refrain of their song, "On to Rome," dominates the whole drama; it catches together in a phrase the leading thread of the plot.

Is there any more delightful spot in all America than old Concord? It is indeed the American Mecca. The birthplace of American liberty, the home of the Minute Men, every rood of its green meadows sanctified by memories of Hawthorne and Emerson, of Thoreau and the Alcotts—who does not like to read of it, who does not wish to know still more of its varied story? Margaret Sidney's beautiful volume devoted to this purpose, "Old Concord: her Highways and Byways," is certain to find a public ready to welcome and enjoy it. It is a beautiful piece of book-making, too—alike in paper, printing, binding and illustration. Published by D. Lothrop Company. Price $2.

"The Adventures of a Chinaman in China," from the French of Jules Verne, in new edition, has been published by Lee & Shepard, Boston. The book has fifty illustrations, and portrays the tribulations of a Chinaman in China, and the reader is permitted "without fatigue" to "glance over the City of Shanghai," and "without fatigue" to "travel through four cities by visiting only one," and to follow Kin-fo and his friends, all philosophers, in their various experiences and adventures in the "Flowery Kingdom." For sale by M. Goodrich.

Frances Eaton's delightful story of sweet American girlhood, "A Queer Little Princess," is proving one of the "hits" of the season. Mothers enjoy it fully as much as do the children. The little "princess" is a creation of fiction, worthy to be classed with "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and she does not need to go title-hunting in England to establish her claim to her rank. Published by D. Lothrop Company. Price $1.50. For sale by M. Goodrich.

There is a certain significance in the first four words, "A spirit of unrest," in Archdeacon Mackay-Smith's article in Harper's Magazine for January. It is an evidence that the actual state of the religious world to-day is now openly recognized by many of the clergy. The author fearlessly, but sympathetically, discusses the readjustment which the churches must make to meet altered conditions of life and thought in this country.

Henry James has said that if her next novel was as great an advance upon "East Angels" as "East Angels" was upon "Anne," Constance Fenimore Woolson would make a permanent addition to American literature. Her "next novel" is "Jupiter Lights," which begins its course as a serial in Harper's Magazine for January. The first instalment seems to promise that the author has fulfilled Mr. James' hypothesis.

Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine for January, continues his series of papers on the West in one entitled "Comments on Kentucky." This is not a conventional descriptive article, but the work of a thorough literary artist. It is interspersed with such charming bits of humor as the paragraph upon the virtues of blue-grass.

Indian stories are among the things that boys and girls never tire of. Lizzie W. Champney's narrative of "Howling Wolf and his Trick-Pony," is said by western people to be almost the best Indian story yet written. It is picturesque, romantic and thrilling. Published by D. Lothrop Company. Price $1.00.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s leading holiday book for this season is "The Courtship of Miles Standish." The woodcuts are from George H. Boughton, Reinhart, Shapleigh, Smillie, and others, and there are also six full page photogravures after designs by F. T. Merrill.

A line of booklets published by Lee & Shepard, Boston, for the coming holiday trade is styled "Art Scale Souvenirs," this title being given to the booklets because of the handsome floral ornaments with which the covers are embellished. For sale by M. Goodrich.

Annie Porter contributes to Harper's Magazine for January a thrilling tale entitled "Isabel's Story." The interest increases gradually but steadily up to the startling climax at the close.

Rev. Edward Hale is writing a story entitled "The Catskill Camp," being a narrative of the fortunes of four young college students.

In February next Mrs. Humphrey Ward, the author of "Robert Elsmere," is expected to visit this country.

George Kennan has, it is said, received and refused more than 500 invitations to lecture in this country and abroad on Russian and Siberian topics.

The Mikado and The Shogun.

Twenty-one years ago, the Emperor of Japan was a mere figurehead, and his predecessors for more than five hundred years had been little more. They lived in strict seclusion and exercised no ruling power. Only a few nobles of the highest rank had the privilege of beholding the Emperor's face. The Japanese throne has never been bandied about from one dynasty to another. Their history begins twenty-five hundred and forty-nine years ago, before Nebuchadnezzar conquered the Jews. During this time, one hundred and twenty-three sovereigns have sat on the throne, nine of whom have been women; and all have belonged to this one dynasty. It is a nameless dynasty, for it is beyond the need of a family name.

The form of government was an absolute monarchy, and the early emperors were the direct executive heads. The empire was divided into (goon), or provinces, and these subdivided into ken. This was called the gun-kin system, and the whole was under the rule of the Emperor.

There was, from very early times, a Shogun, or general; but at first his power was small. Yoritomo, one of the most celebrated men of Japanese history, obtained great power during a civil war in the twelfth century by restoring order and establishing firm government. He became the most powerful subject in the empire, and the Mikado appointed him Sei Tai Shogun (say ti sho-gun) in 1192. This title means "Barbarian-quelling Great General," and it was the greatest honor that could be bestowed upon a subject. The whole country was placed under military rule, and this was the beginning of the double system of Japanese government. Gradually, more and more power was concentrated in the Shogun's hands, while only empty dignities and numerous titles were left to the Emperor.

That "son of heaven," however though often a child, was the source of all rank and dignity; and though the office of Shogun became hereditary in certain families, and though the Shogun lived with the pomp and splendor of a king, he always owed his appointment to the Emperor. The Shogun assumed the protectorship of the Emperor.

This form of government was called the Shogunate.

Under this double system of government, the Mikado and Shogun, the outside world supposed there were two emperors, one a spiritual, the other a temporal emperor. This "temporal Emperor" was merely the Mikado's general. The Mikado, the "son of heaven," lived at Kioto, a city beautifully situated, in a palace much like a temple in outward appearance, but with little of the splendor of a European palace. Magnificence of display might do very well for upstart generals, but was unseemly for the semi-divinity of royalty. The Shogun lived at Yeddo, which was thus the real seat of government.—Ida C. Hodnett, in St. Nicholas.

An Eastern Monarch.

A French missionary who has just returned from Unganda shares the opinion held by so many authorities that Stanley is safe. He declares it is absolutely impossible that, if Stanley had succumbed to an attack, the news should not have reached the missions. It seems that when the intrepid traveler started from the falls a report was spread that he was going to "eat up Uganda," according to the expression in fashion in those benighted regions. The missionary thinks that Stanley is keeping quiet for the present, either because he has some political project in view, which is not yet ripe, or because he fears that his appearance might lead to the massacre of the English and French missionaries, particularly the former, who are now at the court of Monanga, the sovereign of Uganda. This same Monanga is described by the London Telegraph as a puissant negro King, ruling over 10,000,000 subjects, and as ferocious as he is powerful. He is accredited with being the happy possessor of 1,500 wives, five of whom he daily kills off for his own amusement. Some time ago Monanga received from Asia Minor, through the medium of slave dealers in Egypt, intelligence of the acquisitions made by England and Germany on the Zanzibar coast. He at once assembled all his couriers and made them swear that they would exterminate all the whites who might seek to "eat up Uganda." The first result of the ceremony was the imprisonment of Mr. Gordon, an English missionary, who had unluckily selected that very day to read out to Monanga a letter from Mr. Parker, a fellow-missionary, reproaching that monarch with his enormities and exhorting him to turn over a new leaf. Mr. Gordon is, or was, in durance as a hostage. Monanga's very unpleasant behavior toward him warned the French missionaries to withdraw from his dominions, the only one who has remained behind being M. Sourdel, whose medical skill is highly appreciated by the tyrant, who has decided horror of death. Monanga is the largest slave trader in Central Africa. He supplies the Mohammedan dealers annually with about 150,000 slaves, which are transported from the Zanzibar coast to the Persian Gulf and the Euphrates. Landed on the shores of Arabia, the victims are sent on to Asiatic Turkey, where they are sold "on the sly" through the medium of pashas, who receive about 10 francs per head for their trouble. Many, however, die on the road, and sometimes a whole cargo of these poor people is carried off by sickness. In short, the story related by this missionary is simply heartrending, and he evidently inclines to the view that Stanley has been "keeping dark" through the fear that the whites whom Monanga has in his power might be summarily put to death, with insult and torture.

Lesson for Parents.

"I don't like Sundays; I like morrows," said a little 4-year-old, whose playthings had been put away "until to-morrow." He was kept indoors without any means of amusing himself. He was too young to read, and his mamma is too busy with necessary duties to give him any attention, and he was left to spin out a long Sunday as best he could without playmates or playthings. In some families a class of playthings are individualized as Sunday toys, a Noah's ark, blocks, a different doll than that played with during the week, or something of this kind, brought out to afford amusement to the children during Sunday, and at night put out of sight until the return of this day. The child looks upon such toys with a certain degree of reverence that is not felt for the toys that are lying around all the week.—Detroit Tribune.

The Fast Young Man's Mistake.

A fast young man decided to make a young lady a formal offer of his hand and heart—all he was worth—hoping for a cordial reception. But he was a cautious young man, and felt his way by putting a few questions to her.

Did she love him well enough to live in a cottage with him? Was she a good cook? Did she think it a wife's duty to make home happy? Would she consult his tastes and wishes concerning her associates and pursuits in life? Was she economical? Could she make her own clothes? etc.

The young lady said that before she answered his questions she should assure him of some negative virtues she possessed. She never drank, smoked, nor chewed; never owed a bill to her laundress or tailor; never staid out all night playing billiards; never lounged on the street corners and ogled giddy girls; never "stood in" with the boys for cigars and wine suppres.

"Now," said she, rising indignantly, "I am assured, by those who know, that you do all these things, and it is rather absurd for you to expect all the virtues in me, while you do not possess any yourself. I can never be your wife," and she bowed him out and left him on the cold doorstep.—Health Journal.

Cigarettes Superseding Cigars.

It is a fact which will astonish a great many people that cigar-smoking is on the decline in New York. The Cigar-Makers' Journal says that during the month of August the number of cigars manufactured here was 69,185,437, against 74,433,100 during the same month of 1887, a decrease of 5,247,663 cigars. Since Jan. 1, 1888, 505,178,019 cigars have been made in New York, a decrease of 18,927,587, compared with the output for the same length of time in 1887. The sad truth is brought to light that the popularity of cigarettes is on the increase, while cigars are slowly giving way before their pernicious rivals.—Philadelphia Record.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

The Astonishing Tribute of Mrs. Barton to Her Deceased Husband.

Mrs. Parthena Barton of Vergennes, Vt., has just completed a remarkable wreath in memory of her husband, who died several years ago. Every color produced by art is employed in the memento and the articles of its composition would puzzle a junk dealer.

"Taint nateral," said Mrs. Barton, "to build monyments an' put flowers on the graves of friends. What you want is a memento that's a reminder. That's why I made that wreath as it is. Every piece of it has got a hist'ry."

In the upper right hand of the wreath are stuck a dozen or more raisins, and Mrs. Barton's description begins with these.

"The raisins," she writes, "are the last Mr. Barton bought, and kindly said to me, "eat every one of these youself and use none of them for cooking." The first flower is a piece of the lining of his coat, and the white in it a piece of his collar. All the buttons, watch-keys, and pencils were his. The second flower is a piece of his stock, and the third, with a red button, the same. The button is one that was on his cushion at church, and the black a piece of his necktie. All the leaves but two are pieces of his clothes. The plain cloth in the flower on the outside is a piece of his mother's dress. The bristles are those he often handled while mending his boots.

"The little spoon by the leaves is one he used in taking his catarrh remedy; he made it himself. The little plaid flower on the outside and the striped flower on the inside were pieces of his pants. The flower with a key in the center is a piece of the lining of his coat. The black and white flower is a piece of his necktie made with a piece of my dress. The red flower inside is a piece of his handkerchief that he wore in the winter. The brown flower on the outside is a piece of his coat collar.

"The white flower is some of Mrs. Lemuel Eldridge's hair, and the brown hair around it some of her daughter Julia's, Mr. Barton's first wife. The beans, melons, squash, and orange seeds are some he saved. The cloth of the bird is a piece of the shirt in which he died, and the feather next to its head is from a fowl he raised. The purple and white flower is made of a necktie and a piece of my dress.

"The buckles fish-hook and line, and little saw were all his. The camlet flower below the bird is a piece of his father's cloak, which he wore after his father's death. The shavings in the center of the flower were taken from Mr. Barton's coffin, and the leaf at the right side of the flower is a piece of his boot. The black silk flower inside is a piece of his coat lining. The white-edged flower with a black button was a piece of his hat band; the red silk a piece of his pocket handkerchief. The buff and white flower was a piece of his necktie, and the velvet in it a piece of his coat collar. The center flower is some of his pants, and the pegs on the stamen he often used while mending his boots. The dark flower inside is a piece of his coat. The black silk flower on the outside is a piece of his necktie.

"The blue plaid with a white button is some of his mother's dress that she spun and wove. The inside flower is a piece of his stock and suspender. The dark plaid flannel flower is a piece of his undershirt and the black inside a piece of his necktie. The thick petals in the gray flower were his hair and the edging mine. The teeth and the toothpick that came next were his. The piece in the end of the wreath grew on the wood that was on his farm where he was born and lived seventy-two years. The wall paper on the sides and bottom of the vase was some he bought for our parlor."

The astonishing wreath is inclosed in a frame which is as fearfully and wonderfully made.—New York Sun.

A Complete Transaction.

The ability of little folks to arrive at logical conclusions was well illustrated in a Lawrenceville primary school recently. A teacher in one of the lowest grades had been impressing the meaning of easy fractional terms upon the minds of her little pupils. Her statements were clear and so easily comprehended that even their infantile intellects seemed to grasp all that was given them. One little fellow, however, was a little slow, and the teacher repeated her explanations for perhaps the fifteenth time. Holding up four pennies, by way of illustration she said: "Now, Charlie, if I have four cents and give you half," suiting the action to the word, "how much will I have left?"

"The other half," replied the tot, with an air of the deepest conviction. —Pittsburg Press.

Southeastern Oregon is almost a terra incognita yet, except to cattlemen, swamp land grabbers and people of that ilk, says the Portland Oregonian. In the numerous lawsuits between swamp land men and settlers who have taken up claims on the alleged swamp lands, there have been many instances of persons swearing in direct opposition to others in regard to the character of land which would lead unbiased persons to suppose that flat perjury had been committed.

There may have been no idea or intention on the part of any of the witnesses to testify falsely in these cases, as the following will show:

Warner Lake, in Southeastern Oregon, is a shallow body of water covering a large amount of land. It is divided by low ridges of land into three or four divisions. Last year a gentleman cruising through that country found one of these divisions to be a lake eight miles long and four miles wide, and from four to five feet deep. This summer the same gentleman visited that section and found this lake totally dry and drove his team across it without trouble. He is now prepared to swear that the site of the lake is suitable for cultivation, whereas last year he would have sworn with a clear conscience that there was a lake there.

Last year Mr. Neil had a contract to make a survey of the meander line of Warner Lake, which he did, and this year Mr. Martin, a government inspector of surveys, visited Warner Lake to inspect the surveying done by Mr. Neil. He found the work all right, but it did not conform to the water line in that part of the lake above mentioned.

Responsible parties who were at the lake when Mr. Neil made his meander, confirmed its truthfulness as to the water line when it was made, and Mr. Martin became convinced by their testimony that a wonderful change had taken place.

The probable cause of the disappearance of this large body of water is the light fall of snow in that section for several years past, as all the lakes in that section are lower than ever before since the settlement of the country.

It will hardly be safe to settle on the bottom of a dried up lake or close to low-water mark, as in case of a long, hard winter, with a great fall of snow and late rains in the spring these lakes will likely expand themselves to their original size.

The fact that the lakes in that section are of this character is probably the cause of all the trouble and misunderstanding in regard to swamp lands.

Surprising an Englishman.

A few months ago an Englishman ambled into a jeweler's store in Lampasas, Tex., when the following conversation ensued: "Ave you got hany good, hold Henglish timepieces in the nature of clocks?" asked the Englishman. "We have nothing but American-made clocks," replied the jeweler. "They are by far the best, and of superior workmanship." "Ho, no, you are mistaken. If I cawn't get me a Henglish clock I must send hover to Hengland and 'ave me own family piece sent hover by steamer, you know." The jeweler said very well, and the Englishman went home and wrote for this marvelous timepiece. In due course of time it arrived, and as the Englishman was conveying it up from the express office he dropped into the jeweler's to exhibit it. "Aw, now," he said, with his face wreathed in smiles, "look hat this for a minute. 'Ere's a timepiece which as been in our family many a year and has always kept perfect time. Look hand see hif you don't consider it hinferior to American clocks." The jeweler examined the exterior of the clock and then opened it. Brushing the dust from a dimly printed label in the back he revealed to the astonished Briton the following label: "Seth Thomas, Bridgeport, Conn., U. S. A., 1859—Texas Siftings.

A Bible in Shorthand.

There are many curious copies of the holy writ in the various collections of books in the world, but there is considerable doubt if there is one as rare as that owned by Dr. Williams, a London physician. It is written entirely in shorthand, and is on exhibition in its owner's library on Clifton street. The volume, for the amount of reading matter it contains, is remarkably small, and the characters are exquisitely written. It is said to have belonged to an apprentice, who, suspicious of James II.'s intentions regarding protestantism, wrote the whole for himself, fearing that he might be deprived of his printed copy.—New York Telegram.

Weather Indications.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17th, midnight.—Raid, decidedly colder, northwesterly winds, higher on the coast. Cautionary storm signals from Norfolk section to Eastport.

TUESDAY, DEC. 18, 1888.

PERSONAL.

—Mr. Frank M. Hatch and wife, of Honolulu, Sandwich islands, who have been visiting Mr. Hatch's mother, the wife of the late Hon. Albert R. Hatch, for a few weeks, sail from New York on the steamer Etruria next Saturday, intending to make an extended tour of the British isles and the continent before returning to their home in the Pacific.

—Miss Mary E. B. Miller leaves this city on Thursday to pass about six weeks in Lowell, Mass.

—Mr. Adolph Nelson, formerly of this city, has been promoted to a $2000 position in the New York custom house.

—Miss Alice Gregg, daughter of Mr. M. H. Gregg, has gone to Malden, Mass., to make an extended visit to relatives and friends in that city.

—Mr. George Woods and wife, of Russell street, started for Boston on Monday, and will pass Christmas in that city.

TEMPLARS' ELECTION.

De Witt Clinton Commandery of Knights Templar of this city, conferred the degree of the Temple on one candidate on Monday evening, after which it proceeded to its annual election of officers, with the following result:

John Hatch, Eminent Commander;
Wm. G. Billings, Generalissimo;
Richard I. Walden, Captain General;
John Christie, Prelate;
Albert R. Junkins, Senior Warden;
Frank J. Philbrick, Junior Warden;
Wingate N. Ilsley, Treasurer;
James L. Parker, Recorder.

The late Hon. Albert R. Hatch, father of Sir Knight John Hatch, was Eminent Commander of DeWitt Clinton Commandery from 1849 to 1873. Sir Knight Ilsley has been treasurer since 1869, and Sir Knight Christie has served as prelate since 1874.

YOUNG MEN'S REPUBLICAN CLUB.

The Young Men's Republican Club of Portsmouth met at the headquarters on Monday evening, and continued the work of organization by the adoption of a constitution and by-laws, and the election of an executive committee as follows:

George C. Gray, Clement M. Waterhouse, ward one;
Joseph A. Randall, Fred A. Duncan, ward two;
Joseph J. Wain, John G. Jellison, ward three;
Gilman B. Randall, Charles W. Humphreys, ward four.

There was a large attendance despite the heavy storm, and much enthusiasm continues to be manifested. The rooms are to be fitted up and provided with reading matter, and after the club gets fairly under way will be a pleasant place of meeting for the members, from a social point of view.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

The men employed in the navy yard under the bureau of construction and repair—some thirty in number—were discharged yesterday on account of the appropriation becoming exhausted. It is expected that the suspension will be only temporary and that most of the men will go to work again the first of January.

Commander A. G. Kellogg, U. S. N., formerly for several years on duty at this navy yard, now commanding the Ossipee, has purchased a fine lot in the western portion of Rockville, Md., paying therefor $1000. He proposes to improve his property in the spring by the erection of a fine house, to cost in the neighborhood of $6000.

The house of Charles Chase in Hampton was burned Saturday morning, presumably from a grass fire kindled by a spark from a locomotive, it being near the track. A freight train passing at the time was stopped and side-tracked, and the trainmen worked over an hour in aiding to save the outbuildings, which was effected, though the house was burned to the ground. The property was insured. A house on the same site was burned a year or two since.

MUSIC HALL.

The Wemyss Concert Co.'s entertainment at Music hall, announced to be given on Monday evening, was given up on account of the inclemency of the weather. The hall was opened, but so few people appeared that it was decided to refund whatever money had been received.

McNish, Ramza & Arno's minstrels at Music hall tomorrow evening.

MARITIME NOTES.

Coal rates from Baltimore for this port were on the 15th inst. quoted at $1.80 and $1.85 per ton; to Boston or Portland, $1.75. The schooner Lizzie J. Call of this port, Call master, is loading coal at New York for this port at $1,25.

The schooner Yankee Lass, of St. George, Me., eight tons register, has been bought by Portsmouth parties, and will be used in winter fishing out of this port, under command of Capt. William H. Randall.

A despatch of the 17th from Hyannis, Mass., reports the Dover Navigation company's schooner Jonathan Sawyer, and the schooner John Stroup, at that port with loss of anchors and chains.

The new five-masted schooner Governor Ames, 1800 tons register, while on the passage from Waldoboro, to Baltimore, lests all her masts fifty miles off Cape Cod on the night of the 11th inst., and drifted on to George's shoal, where she anchored. The fishing schooner Ethel Maud arrived at Gloucester on the 17th for help for the disabled vessel, whose captain and fourteen men remain on board. The Gov. Ames is a new vessel, on her first trip, and the largest schooner in the world.

The discourses and music at the Unitarian church next Sunday, morning and evening, will be appropriate to the Christmas season. In the afternoon there will be a Christmas service for the children, in the church.

The revival meetings at the Pearl street church will be continued through this week; they commence promptly at 7:30 o'clock each evening.

The serious illness of Mr. Thomas F. Flanagan, who was to have taken a prominent part in the "Pirates of Penzance," will necessitate a change in the cast, much to be regretted by the public as well as by Mr. LaBrie, who will find it no easy task to fill the place and give the same satisfaction that would follow Mr. Flanagan. We understand that Mr. LaBrie is negotiating with a Boston gentleman with a view to closing the gap caused by Mr. Flanagan's sickness.

The newly-erected storm-houses at the post-office are so constructed that the vestibule doors, which formerly swung both ways, can now only be opened inwardly, but this does not prevent anybody and everybody who visits the office from attempting to push them open toward the outside when leaving, no matter how often they may have calls at the building; they will get used to it by and by.

The fair and festival given by the Court street Christian society in Grand Army hall last week netted $80 for the building fund of the church.

The railroad commissioners have investigated the accident which occurred at the Boston & Maine station in this city on the 29th of October, and resulted in the death of a person supposed to be James Fitzgerald, and report that no blame can be attached to the corporation, or the employes who were handling the train. A similar report was made in the case of the section man who was killed on the Dover & Winnepiseogee railroad a few weeks ago, and brought into Dover on the cowcatcher of the engine.

There seems to be a diversity of opinions regarding the reports published to the effect that preliminary surveys have been made with a view to extending the Manchester & Lawrence railroad to Concord, thus giving the Boston & Maine a line of its own into Concord. Hon. J. W. Sanborn, of Wakefield, superintendent of the northern division of the B. & M. road, says there is no truth in it. Hon. James F. Briggs, of Manchester, says if it has not already been done, it will be, by the B. & M. road. It is known, however, that engineers of the Boston & Maine have examined plans of the land across the river at Manchester, and that stakes are up, evidently for a railroad line on the west side of the river near Manchester.

How to Save the Eyesight.

Next to sunlight the incandescent light gives the best illumination for reading, and all notions of the injurious effect on the eyes of the electric light are erroneous.

The vast majority of people who wear glasses can see well without them. They use them to avoid a constant strain on the eyes. The act of focalization is a muscular one and uses up nervous energy.

The oversighted eye, in which the focus comes behind the retina, has to perform this muscular act continually. The results are headaches, irritability, and nausea. The only remedy in such cases is to wear glasses.

The near-sighted child should wear spectacles, because they are the best preventive against increase of near-sightedness, and also because he loses a great part of his education in not being able to see more than a few feet away.

For the eyes in a healthy state there is but one pure wash—pure cold water. When the eyelids are inflamed the best lotion is a weak solution of salt and water. Never apply poultices to the eyes or use "eye-waters" without the advice of a physician.

At the first symptoms of near-sightedness spectacles should be worn. There is a great deal of popular prejudice against spectacles, but there are two reasons why they should be worn, and only two—one is that we see better and the other that the strain on the eyes may be relieved.

In reading the book or paper should be held at a distance of from ten to fifteen inches from the eyes. The reader's position should be such that the light may fall on the book and not on the eyes. The light itself should be sufficient. Nothing is so injurious to the eyes as poor light in reading.

The Women of Central America.

The country women evidently believe in "beauty unadorned," the universal garb of the mestizas (of Indian and Spanish blood) being a single short, scant skirt over a low-necked chemise. Perched behind their sacones of fruit and vegetables, their wedges of cheese and loaves of coarse brown sugar, or beside a double row of bottles of guarpo (the fermented juice of the sugar cane), they expatiate upon the merits of their merchandise in glib Castiliano. The young women of Costa Rica are decidedly handsome, with regular features, fine complexions, and full, round figures. The exhilarating air of the mountains tones down the carnation richness of the Spanish blood and suffuses it with a pearly hue. There are some bronzed and mottled faces even among young girls, and not a few cases of the horrible goitre, but beauty is the rule. The old women, however, including those on the sunny side of 40 years, are extremely ugly. Why in this charming climate females become octogenarians at an age which in Northern regions has only served to give color and dignity to perfected womanhood I am at a loss to comprehend. Probably it is due as much to excessive eating and smoking, little exercise, and no thinking at all, as to the fact of early maturity.—Costa Rica Letter.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—In the senate today a long discussion ensued on the resolutions for evening sessions, and an amendment offered by Mr. Morrill providing (until otherwise ordered) that the daily hour of meeting of the senate shall be 11 A. M. and at 5:30 P. M., and on each day a recess be taken until 8 P. M.

Vest, Harris and Vance opposed the amendment. They disclaimed any desire to make factious opposition to the senate tariff bill, but wanted a fair legitimate investigation and discussion. They could not be forced to sit day and night, and the democratic senators had no opportunity to examine the details of the bill.

Vance referred to hearings given by the sub-committee of the finance committee to manufacturers and their representatives; who had stood, he said, around the door of the committee room like hungry dogs around a kitchen door waiting for the cook to shake the table-cloth. The bill had been framed in their interests, while the interests of the consumer were not being consulted, nor those of the government, and it was not fair, proper, just, or right to hurry the bill through by caucus action.

Morrill and Allison defended the amendment as intended to enable the senate to do the business of the session intelligently and properly. If the senate was not through with the tariff bill by the middle of January it would have to be laid aside to make room for the appropriation bills.

Sherman reminded the democrats that in 1883, when the previous tariff bill was under discussion, the senate sat through the holidays, on a resolution introduced by Senator Garland, (dem.,) and there was just as much surplus a year ago and just as much necessity for the passage of the tariff bill.

Mr. Vance referring to tariff legislalation of 1883, said it had been introduced and carried with a great flourish of trumpets, and when it went into effect, it was found it "reduced average taxation from 42 per cent to 47 per cent."

The discussion was continued at great length by Voorhees, Hawley, Hoar, Blackburn, Aldrich, Vest and Cockrell. The resolution was finally postponed till tomorrow.

Morrill reported back from finance committee the house concurrent resolution for holiday recess with an amendment restricting it to the house representatives, and it went over without action until tomorrow.

The senate then resumed consideration os the tariff bill, and after some discussion adjourned.

HOUSE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—In the House today Mr. Springer of Illinois stated that he would not call up the Territorial bills. There would be a meeting of the committee on Territories tomorrow, and it would then be determined when those matters would be considered.

There was a brief contest between Mr. Blanchard of Louisiana, in charge of the river and harbor bill, and Mr. Randall of Pennsylvania, in charge of the legislative appropriation bill, for the precedence of their respective measures, Mr. Randall being successful and the House proceeding in committee of the whole, Mr. Blount of Georgia in the chair, to the consideration of his bill.

The legislative appropriation bill was read until Mr. Holman of Indiana offered an amendment increasing the number of messengers in the "Soldier's Roll" of the House, from 14 to 20; rejected.

Mr. Henderson of Iowa moved to increase the clerical force of the civil service commission, and was opposed by Mr. Randall. Mr. Henderson said the increase was asked by the commissioners, and should be granted if Congress desired to enforce the law in good faith. The spirit of the law had not been carried out in good faith by the present administration, and the verdict recently pronounced by the people would certainly give the country a commission which would give the letter and spirit of the law a proper enforcement, and he thought everyone should give heed to that verdict.

Mr. Randall said he had never agreed that there should be fastened upon the country any class of office-holders, but since the civil service law was enacted, he had always voted for an appropriation necessary to operate it. His friends on the other side would soon be in charge of the executive department and Congress, and could make the civil service law spread all over the country, and embrace all the office-holders; and he was waiting with a good deal of anxiety and expectation of amusement to see their attitude in the next Congress, when they would profess to execute their extreme anxiety in connection with the civil service law.

The discussion was then continued by Cummings and Spinola of New York, and Buchanan, and finally Henderson's amendment was rejected.

Republican Senatorial Caucus.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The Republican senatorial caucus this morning decided that the senate shall continue in session without a holiday recess until the tariff bill is disposed of, letting the house take a recess if it so desires. It was also decided to hold two sessions daily, beginning at eleven A. M. and eight P. M. There was a large but not complete attendance of Republican senators, and the action is said to have been taken by unanimous consent.

The Storm Causes Heavy Damage at Scranton.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SCRANTON, PA., Dec. 18.—The heavy rain of Sunday night and Monday caused a rise in the Lackawanna River, and the debris borne down by the stream was blocked by the Jersey Central Railroad bridge, in process of construction, and the water thus dammed up, overflowed the banks and submerged one of the principal thoroughfares for a quarter of a mile. When the people awoke this morning they found their property covered to a depth of several feet, and themselves imprisoned in their homes. The wildest consternation prevailed for a time, but several young men finally secured boats and came to their rescue, and no one was injured. The damage to property will amount to $90,000 exclusive of the loss to the Jersey Central Railroad which will reach $75,000. Two railroad bridges were swept away, and tracks destroyed for 100 yards. Several mines are flooded, and a large number of men and boys are thrown out of employment.

Industrious Bath.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BATH, ME., Dec. 18.—Bath ship-builders have done a good year's work in launching twenty-five vessels, with a gross tonnage of 12,205 tons. The largest vessel was the Gracie D. Buchanan, a schooner of 1040.63 tons, and the smallest the Burgess yacht Monhegan, 23 tons. The value of the build was about $400,000. There is a good outlook for next year, there being seven vessels on the stocks, including C. V. Minot's ship, the only vessel of that rig being built in the country. Two steamers and seven schooners are under contract.

A New Trial Refused a Wife Murderer and He Must Die.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HARTFORD, CONN., Dec. 18.—The Supreme Court has refused a new trial in the case of John H. Swift, sentenced to hang in April next, for the murder of his wife. She left him on account of misconduct, and he shot her in the street on her refusing to return to him.

Gone Wrong.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

GREAT FALLS, N. H., Dec. 18.—Chas. Sanborn, aged 18 years, and George Emery, 19, of this town, arrested for burglary at Bagley's store Sunday night, have both confessed and turned over the balance of the money to the officers. They are bound over to the February term of the supreme court in $1000 each. Both belong to highly respectable families.

Arrival of Senator Quay at Indianapolis.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 18.—Senator Quay and his private secretary, F. W. Leach, Gen. G. F. Williams, and Col. A. E. Britain, chairman of the inaugural committee, arrived here tonight and drove immediately to the new Dennison hotel, where quarters had been engaged. Ex-President Hayes came on the same train.

The Bailey Nomination.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—In a secret session of the senate this afternoon, a resolution was offered calling on the attorney general for information on file at his office, concerning Leon O. Bailey, whose nomination for United States District Attorney for Indiana was sent to the senate yesterday. This is said to be the first step looking to the rejection of the nomination.

AFTER THE FIGHT.

Hunting the Negroes Down But None Found. Their Cabins Burned and Their Stock Killed.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MERIDIAN, MISS., Dec. 18.—There is no change in the situation at Wahalak. This village was crowded this morning with people from the surrounding country. Parties are searching the swamps for negroes who aided in the killing Sunday night, but not one has been found It is supposed that they left the country. All parties who left the city yesterday for the scene have returned, and report everything quiet there. Nothing remains of the cabins but smouldering ashes. All the stock owned by the riotous negroes was killed, and evrrything burned around their premises. Henry Mawry and Seth Cobbs' remains were brought to this village yesterday, and their funeral will probably take place tomorrow. John Dew, who was severely wounded in the groin is still alive, but in a critical condition. It is not known what further action will be taken by the men now on the ground.

The Lake Shore Railroad.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

DOVER, N. H., Dec 18.—The last shovelful of earth for the grading of the Lake Shore Railroad was put in place this afternoon in West Alton. The rails and ballast will not be laid until spring.

Generous Act of The Reading Railroad.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—The Reading Railroad has given two months extra pay to the women whose husbands were lost on the steam collier Allentown, off the Massachusetts coast last month. Arrangements are being made for the free passage to Sweden of Mrs. Johansen and children, the family of the seaman Martin Johansen, of the ill-fated steamer. The Allentown was not insured.

Republican Gain at Meriden, Conn.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MERIDEN, CONN., Dec. 18.—The annual city election was held today and the democrats were victorious by largely reduced majorities, Wallace A. Miles, dem., being elected mayor by a plurality of 258.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Dec. 18 — The Susquehanna is higher to-night than before for ten years, and many bridges on the Pleasant Valley route of the Lehigh railroad were swept away. At Pittston River there are flooded cellers in many houses. All communication between this city and Kingston is cut off to-night, the water running over the road ways and all low lands are submerged.

FOREIGN.

The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Disbanded. The Queen Did It.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 18 —The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, the oldest military body in the world, a portion of whose members visited America recently, has been disbanded. The Prince of Wales became discontented with the manner in which the finances of the organization were managed, and also with the lack of discipline in its ranks. He had urged the members to abandon their charter privileges, and become a part of the regular volunteer forces. This suggestion was opposed by a majority of the officers, and as a consequence the Prince, Duke of Portland and others sent in their resignations and forwarded a complaint of the condition of the company to the Queen. Her majesty withdrew the company's warrant, and the effect of her action is to dissolve the company as a military body.

The Canadian Collector Did Not Reflect, and the Yankee Fisherman Transhipped.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

OTTAWA, ONT., Dec. 18.—The Minister of Customs has received a report from the Collector at Halifax stating that the United States fishing schooner M. A. Batowe entered that port on the seventh instant for repairs, which would take several days. The vessel had a cargo of fresh halibut which would have spoiled if not landed or transhipped. The Collector without due reflection and without consulting the department gave permission to tranship, for which he expresses regret.

STANLEY.

Greatest Doubt Shown in the Report of His Capture.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—The greatest doubt is thrown here on the report that Stanley has been captured. The alleged fight must have occurred between Lado and Wadelai. The distance to Omdurman, Osman Digna's headquarters, is 1200 miles, and thence to Suakim another 400 miles, and the swiftest messengers would take four months to cover the entire distance. The Emin relief committee has postponed the departure of Lieut. Wissman until definite news is obtained of Emin's fate. If the news is true important modifications in his plans will be necessary.

Bombarding Cape Haytien.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—Passengers of the steamer Saginaw just arrived from San Domingo, report that on Dec. 5th, Legitime's men-of-war bombarded Cape Haytien after granting 36 hours for foreigners to leave the place. The natives were fleeing to the mountains when the Saginaw sailed.

Four vessels participated, about 50 shots being fired, which tore through the town, demolishing the frail structures. The bamboo huts succumbed easily, but the stone buildings in the central and more elevated portions of the town were not so easily destroyed, the heavy walls resisting the fire for several hours. Despite the warning, many residents clung to their habitations, while it was impossible to remove many of the sick in the city within the time allotted by Legitime. On the tops of all houses in which sick persons were known to be a white flag was placed, but shot and shell were no respectors of appealing emblems. It is thought that 15 or 20 persons at least were killed.

A Rumor from Paris that Mr. Blaine Will Succeed Mr. McLane.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The Chronicle's Paris correspondent says Mr. Blaine is freely mentioned as the successor of Minister McLane.

A Conservative Gain.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—At a Parliamentary election in Colchester division today to fill the seat made vacant by the death of Mr. Trotter, Brooks, Conservative, received 2123 votes, Guidon, Gladstonian, 1689. In the last election the Conservative candidate received 1996, Liberal 1701.

The News regards the result of the Colchester election as a serious defeat for the Liberals, and one that will check the tide of victory.

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—Msgr. Kirby telegraphs from Rome that the story that the Pope refused to bless reliquaries sent by an Irish priest is an impudent fabrication.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S

NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems"

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty-six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10½x14½. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12.50; tree calf, $12.50; English-seal style, $8.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver lettering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 19, 1888.

The telegraph informs us that one of Forepaugh's elephants which had become vicious—and killed seven men—was strangled to death in Philadelphia on Monday by an ingenious method. A noose was slipped around his neck, the ends having been made long enough to enable each end to be fastered to an elephant on either side. At a given word these two elephants were started in opposite directions, and the result was that in twenty seconds the vicious elephant dropped dead. This is a true story, and upon reading it we came to the conclusion that Mr. Forepaugh had obtained the idea of a sudden death from the New York democracy in the late political contest. They placed a political noose around Mr. Cleveland's neck, and fastened the ends to Mayor Hewitt and Mr. Grant. When the signal was given on election day Hewitt and Grant pulled for all they were worth, and Mr. Cleveland dropped politically dead. If we are correctly informed that death caused Mr. Forepaugh's pocket to suffer to the amount of about $50,000. The telegraph does not tell us how much he lost on the elephant strangled on Monday, but taking the two losses together, the veteran showman has had an unlucky year.

While the Democratic leaders of the House profess to be anxious to have immediate attention given to the bill providing for the admission of North and South Dakota as states, yet their action in insisting that the question of dividing the present territory of Dakota shall be again submitted to the people, savors a little of demagoguery, and arouses suspicion that while they realize that it is no use to fight the inevitable they want to let matters move slowly.

It will be a hard pill for the democratic party to swallow, but it has been prescribed by public sentiment, and it must be taken no matter how unpalatable. With their great undeveloped mining and coal industries the new states when admitted will stand up firm against the theory of free trade, and knowing this the democratic leaders are somewhat reluctant to hurry along their admission.

Senator Chandler, according to a despatch in the Boston Journal, in speaking of the election outrages in South Carolina, says that he proposes to expose the damnable election frauds that are being perpetrated upon the colored voters in that state, and also to show up their ballot box system and other practices used in preventing legal voters from exercising the elective franchise. He declares that the Harrison administration intends to see that the provision of the fifteenth amendment to the constitution is respected and enforced in South Carolina and other southern states. The Senator has already presented several petitions from citizens of that state asking for an investigation by Congress.

The democrats have professed that they wanted a tariff reduction bill passed this session of congress, yet in face of the fact that the session must expire the 4th of March by limitation, and every day is valuable, they coolly pass a resolution providing for a two weeks recess. The republicans of the senate have wisely refused to sanction such a proposition, and decided to hold the senate in continuous session, in order to push along the tariff measure. If the latter fails to become a law it will be due entirely to the opposition of the democratic senators, who are interposing every objection possible to prevent the senate from getting to a vote

The liberal territorial committee of Utah have issued an address to the country that they represent both political parties, and say the Gentiles of Utah are opposed to the Mormon statehood scheme recently endorsed in democratic congressional caucus at Washington. It also sets forth that polygamy is not dead, and that the law is not supreme, and calls upon patriotic citizens everywhere to protest to congress against the action proposed to admit Utah to statehood.

The federal grand jury reconvened at Indianapolis on Monday, and it is alleged there are some election fraud indictments ready for action. One man has sued to recover $30 promised for his vote. He proved his case, but necessarily convicted himself.

A very emergent potentate when a political emergency arises. He recently caused his premier and six children, and their people, to be massacred, because he supposed them to be concerned in a plot to dethrone him in favor of his brother.

The legislature of Georgia has appropriated the sum of $20,000 for the establishment of a state bureau of immigration with the view of encouraging the immigration to that state of farmers, mechanics and laborers.

It did not take Governor Foraker long to suppress the White Caps in Ohio, when he set to work. Why cannot the same energy be displayed in other states, where there are democratic governors?

Literary Notes.

James Otis is a prime favorite with all boys and girls. His latest story, "Little Joe," published by D. Lothrop Company, is one of his brightest and best. Otis is the historian of the New York gamin, the laureate of the newsboy and the bootblack, and "Little Joe" is one of the fraternity and a most engaging member, too, with a story of mingled fun and pathos. For sale by M. Goodrich. Price $1.00.

No jollier story-teller than Charles R. Talbot writes for young Americans. His plots, his situations and his conversations are brim-full of American life and humor. One of his latest books, "A Midshipman at Large," published by D. Lothrop Company, puts his Annapolis "middy" into all sorts of scrapes and adventures in the disguise of a common sailor lad on an American yacht, and is certain to be read and re-read with avidity by all the boys who are lucky enough to get hold of it. For sale by M. Goodrich. Price $1.50.

The sea is always fascinating. The sailor is always a favorite character. But no complete story of the real American tar and blue jacket existed until the volume just issued by D. Lothrop Company appeared. It is by Elbridge S. Brooks, and tells the whole "Story of the American Sailor." It is picturesque, exhilarating, stirring and truthful, is elegantly printed and illustrated, and will readily prove the most popular book of the year among all readers, young and old, who love to recall the deeds of American seamen on blue waters. For sale by M. Goodrich. Price $2.50.

Sidney Luska is recognized as one of the most promising of the later American romancers. He has the strong endorsement of such acknowledged critics as W. D. Howells and E. C. Stedman. His "Mrs. Peixada" and "Yoke of the Thorah" have interested thousands of readers. And now his first essay in the telling of stories for young people, "My Uncle Florimond," has been pronounced as worthy a place on the shelf that holds these "classics" for children, "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "Jackanapes." It is strong, manly, pure, breezy and intensely interesting. Published by D. Lothrop Company. For sale by M. Goodrich. Price $1.

The Sun.

FOR

1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

THE middle Tenement, No. 23, in the Kenney Block on Pleasant Street. Apply to J. F. HART.

Through the "make-up" we give our faces the appearance of age and youth, of health and sickness, of race and blood. To be natural it is necessary only to follow the suggestions given without taking further thought; to be accurate demands study and hard work. In doing this kind of work the actor sits before a mirror, and uses his face in it as a canvas upon the easel. And here good work tells. The audience who sit delighted with some charming piece of art seldom realize the study and labor which the actor has expended upon the part.

It should be remembered that in making up the idea of the actor is to produce a symmetric whole. He or she who confines the change to paint and a wig has not yet learned the A B C of the profession. Thus, in representing an old man, the hair and beard are easily taken care of. The whitish but valcose complexion of old age presents no greater obstacles. The wrinkles and folds of the skin increase the difficulty, but can be handled without too much trouble. All thus far has been done with pigments. In treating the teeth all sorts of expedients are employed. The way adopted by many comedians is to cover them with black silk.

This throws the uncovered ivories into bold relief and gives an effect that is extremely ludicrous. Wax, black and green, is used for the same purpose. The most curious thing in this line I ever heard of was a conscientious French player, who presented "old man" parts, and who, to be accurate, had all his teeth extracted and a dozen sets of false ones made by some clever dentist, imitating what nature produces in the various stages of old age. I would hardly recommend this to the profession as a good precedent, however, though the hero of the action certainly deserves special mention and praise for his fidelity to art.

As to the effect of "make-up"—that is, of paints—upon health, a word may be of both interest and use. The opinion that they are very deleterious is just about as unintelligent and false as the opposite, which proclaims them innocuous. The mere mechanical action toughens the skin and enlarges the pores. I question if there be a professional of five years' experience whose epidermis has not assumed a tint and hardness inconsistent with the highest beauty. But this is the limit of the injury as far as the vast majority of stage pigments is concerned. On the other hand the perspiration induced by excitement, hard work, and, it may be, heated dressing-rooms, and the repeated washings and scrubbings to which the face is ever subjected, keep the skin in excellent condition and prevent the eruptions and blemishes so common to the outside world. In many cases when actors are naturally careless of their appearance and neglectful, "make-up" is a blessing and bestows upon them a healthier and handsomer complexion than they would otherwise have.—Drake's Magazine.

An Emperor's "Flame."

An hour ago, says a letter from New York to the Albany Argus, I saw a small, plump and handsome woman of 30, with bleached hair, false complexion, and flamboyant attire, who has become famous throughout the world for an adventure with royalty. It was she of whom it was told by cable telegraphy that Emperor William of Germany had ordered her out of his country because his grandson, the present emperor, had fallen in love with her. Her name was Sophie Pferdner, and only a little while before she had sung in the chorus of German opera at our Thalia theatre in the Bowery. At that time she had been considered by those who knew her as no better or worse than the average of minor actresses, nor possessing special attractiveness. But she bewitched as famous a masher of the stage as Frederick de Belleville, who married her. But he had a wife already and so the second union was invalidated. Then Sophie went back to her native Germany, fell in with the heir apparent, captivated him completely and for a year enjoyed all the luxury of a princess. After her ejection from the country she drifted about Europe, and this week she is singing in one of the New York concert gardens. She is a baroness, too, having at one time in her career been the legitimate wife of a Vienna baron.

"My dear Willie," she coolly remarked to the writer, "was a love of a fellow. We were sweethearts, genuine and true. He doted on me and I was mighty fond of him. I believe, to tell the honest truth, that he would almost rather give up his place as Emperor of Germany and live a private citizen with me. That sounds egotistical? Well, but you don't know how much he loved me. How did we get acquainted? It was a little street flirtation in London. Willie had come from Berlin to see his grandmother, Queen Victoria. One afternoon he was riding in Hyde park in an open carriage on his way to the palace. I was a member of a German opera company, then playing in London, and I happened to be out for a walk. Willie gave me a look of admiration. I returned a shy glance and looked down—as the song says—but I didn't make it too shy and I raised my eyes again as roguishly as I knew how. Only a month or so later, when both of us were in Berlin, I got as close as possible to the royal pavilion at the races, one day. Willie sent his adjutant with a bouquet to me, and—well, there wasn't much time lost after that in getting intimate. He put me into a fine residence within a hundred feet of Bismarck's palace. I had a carriage and everything that I asked for. Where am I living just now? I board at a German hotel in Third avenue, and the street cars are my chariots."

Well-to-do Neighbors.

The talk of the town for the past twenty-four hours has been about the purchase of the magnificent Stout estate by Mr. William K. Vanderbilt as a gift to his wife. It adds another to the millionaire property-owners. The estate is situated on Bellevue avenue, and runs back to the cliffs, commanding a magnificent view of the ocean.

Upon the north side of the estate is the residence of William Astor, and on the south side is "Beaulieu," the lovely summer-house of William Waldorf Astor, whose father, John Jacob Astor, presented him with it for Christmas last year. This is worth $350,000. Mr. Vanderbilt gave $200,000 for the Stout place.

It is doubful if in any place in the world can be found three estates in succession owned by three such immensely wealthy people as the two Astors and one Vanderbilt. They have over $320,000,000 between them.—Boston Courier.

MUSIC HALL.

The lovers of fine minstrelsy will undoubtedly avail themselves of the opportunity presented tonight at Music hall of witnessing the entertainment of McNish, Ramza and Arno. Every feature of the show is first-class, clean and fresh, while their special features have made the company famous. The Cincinnati Times-Star said: "The audience caught on to the spirit of the performance, and laughter and encores were continuous until the curtain fell." The Toledo Bee says they are to minstrelsy "what Booth and Barrett are to tragedy, or Jefferson and Nat Goodwin to comedy."

The third lecture in the Star course takes place at Music hall tomorrow evening, and will be delivered by Mr. George Makepeace Towle, one of the most popular lecturers now on the platform, his subject being "Bismarck." The lecture will be not only interesting but highly instructive.

Y. M. C. C.

Mr. M. H. Purrington, at present first astistant secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Providence, R. I., has been invited to accept the general secretaryship of the association in this city, and has accepted. His present engagement at Providence does not expire until January 1st, and consequently he will not be able to take charge here until after that date.

Mr. Purrington comes to Portsmouth under very high recommendations from the community where he is now laboring, and the gentlemen who have been influential in establishing a branch of the Y. M. C. A. in this city are pleased at being able to secure the services of an officer with a reputation for efficiency and moral worth of the highest character.

A few repairs will be made at once to the building lately secured for the association—the Hackett house on Congress street—and it will then be fitted up for immediate use, and will probably be occupied early in January.

THE REPUBLICAN CLUB MEETING.

The Republican Club held a meeting at their hall on Tuesday evening, with a pretty full attendance of members; the president, Mr. W. Scott Smith, presided, and Mr. George B. Wallace was at the secretary's table.

A verbal amendment to the constitution was unanimously agreed to, and the president was authorized to appoint a canvassing committee of one from each ward, to obtain signatures to the constitution and by-laws before the first annual meeting in January. A number of short speeches were made, looking to the future welfare of the club and urging the republicans to become thoroughly organized for next year's campaign.

A motion was adopted authorizing the president to arrange a programme for the next meeting, so as to bring out the best thoughts of the members of the club in discussion of live issues.

The club adjourned to the second Tuesday in January, (the 8th,) unless sooner called together by the president.

IT HELPED DEFEAT CONGRESSMAN McKINNEY.

The Boston Journal says: "The influence of the craven Bayard-Cleveland fishery policy was unexpectedly far reaching. A Virginia delegate told the fishery convention in New York the other day

[illegible] treaty
[illegible] and
[illegible] h."

That craven policy was a [illegible] under to the democratic party in the first congressional district of New Hampshire. There were nearly enough fishermen, always previously democratic, who voted the republican ticket in this city at the late election, to have re-elected Congressman McKinney had they voted the other way. Of one fishing schooner's crew of fourteen, seven voted republican, and of another crew, five; and of the shore-boat fishermen and those employed in the business along the wharves, who showed their disapproval of the administration's fishery policy by voting against it, the number was very large. Had those votes been given for instead of against McKinney, the slender plurality of less than 400 against him would haae been cut down to a very small number, if indeed it had not been reversed.

WRY OLD TIMES IN RYE.

RYE, Dec. 18th.

An audience that nearly filled the Town Hall on Thursday evening of last week, were amused by an original burlesque on the closing exercises of a district school of half a century ago. The title of the piece was, "The last Day of the Deestrock School at Podunk, with examination and speaking pieces." The teacher on this occasion was Mr. G. H. Jenness, who was also the prime mover in getting it up, and as he has had years of practical experience in the business, it was not a difficult task for him to "keep school" on this occasion, and the scholars, about thirty in number, had probably all been to school before, some of them perhaps about the time that this school was intended to represent. To see the matrons with the dresses on which they wore when they went to school, made them look so young that it was difficult to tell them from those who are attending the High school this winter. Some very ancient articles of apparel, bonnets and hats were exhibited as the procession of scholars tramped through the hall to the stage; the tall black hats sported by the Parson, the selectmen and the teacher, especially looked as though they had been through the war, and evidently the old revolutionary war at that. The questions asked and answered, were undoubtedly original, and consequently so much additional information was thrown upon the market, to be added to the next edition of text books for our schools. The girls brought their dinners in calico bags, and the base of supplies seemed to be apples and salt fish, though the supply of chewing gum was apparently unlimited. Among other original things was a poem by one of the bright scholars, and while all the scholars had their lessons well learned and did themselves credit, the Parson, who was committeeman of the town, showed on the blackboard that he had pretty much forgotten all he ever did know, about "figgers." After intermission came the speaking of pieces, and reading compositions, and very wonderful were some of the latter. The examination closed with remarks to the scholars by the Parson, and teacher, after which a little dancing was indulged in. The proceeds, about forty dollars, after deducting expenses, will be used to procure needed fixtures for the stage of the Town Hall.

An entertainment called a Polgrama was given at the Congregational church on Saturday evening, to a good sized audience, and part of the proceeds went to the Sunday school of the society.

The young republicans are making preparations to have a big clam chowder and dance at the Town hall on Wednesday evening of this week.

The Festival which the ladies of the Congregational society thought to have this month has been postponed until January, probably about the 10th.

The ladies of the Christain society are also planning to have one in the near future.

The winter terms of the schools commenced last week, with Miss Drake as teacher at the Centre, Miss Cook at the South, Miss Wilkinson at the West, and Miss Marston at the East. None of the above are natives of Rye.

The death of Mr. Sheridan Jenness takes from our midst one of the best known and most esteemed citizens of the town. While invariably declining to accept any official position, in affairs of the community, he was still at all times ready to lend a helping hand whenever his assistance could be of any benefit. His funeral was largely attended, the services being conducted by Rev. Mr. Holmes of the Congregational church, of which society he was a member.

The Sunday school at South Eliot will give a Christmas concert on Sunday evening following Christmas, Dec. 30th. All [illegible] as they will be given by the little peop[illegible]

The death of Elias A. Stapies occur[illegible] on Dec. 11th, after a sickness of a[illegible] six months. He leaves a wife and two children, a daughter and son about ten years of age. Mr. Staples was a good citizen and neighbor, also a mechanic who was hard to equal, and he will be very much missed by his family, mother, two brothers and two sisters. The funeral was held on Thursday, Dec. 13th, and was largely attended; Elder G. W. Brown officiated.

The supper given by the Republicans of this town on Wednesday evening, Dec. 12th, was a most elegant affair. The hall was largely filled, the tables were very beautifully arranged, and the hall was decorated with flags and evergreens, and lighted by Chinese lanterns. Medcalf's Orchestra of Portsmouth furnished the music while the supper was being served. After supper a few speeches were listened to from Mr. Howe Call of Portsmouth, and Rev. Mr. Waldron of Boston, which were very appropriate. The latter portion of the evening was occupied by a ball, which was enjoyed both by the old and young. It was the most successful time known in town for a number of years; no rudeness was carried on, and there was no occasion for the officers of the law to interfere.

B. E. Dixon left home on Tuesday morning, for his home in the West.

Dr. E. H. Dixon will be at home on Christmas week; any one wishing to consult him professionally will please call at his house or leave word at the post office, South Eliot.

The sidewalks are not often more slippery than they were on Tuesday morning at daylight, the pouring rain of the early part of Monday night having been succeeded after midnight by a misty sleet which turned to ice as it touched the bricks.

Mr. Charles Spinney of Kittery, employed at the Portsmouth machine works, in his too eager haste to land from the steamer Tuesday morning as she neared her landing on this side of the river, miscalculated either the distance or his own powers, and jumped overboard. He was fished out unhurt, but very wet.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

A useful Christmas present, Green's Saponaceous Tooth Powder.

As to His Fortune.

A young Boston man, one of the traditional New Englanders such as Emerson described in one of his essays as being worth a host of mere college-bred fellows, one who can turn his hand to many things and always light on his feet like a cat, had left home for the west, and had not been heard from for as many as three years. His family was anxious, the more so because the young fellow, with all his capabilities, had in his composition not a little of the "Sam Lawson" talent for shirking work when he could.

Finally, when the family, especially the women portion of it, had about made up their minds that he was dead, his mother received a letter. Here is a portion of it:

"Of course you'll want to know all about how I've progressed toward earning a living. On the whole, not very well, as you'll see from a brief outline. Fact is, to make a living out west you need money to start with, even more than in the east, and little as they think of you without it in the east they think less of you out here.

"The first frontier settlement I struck I could find nothing better to do than coopering cider barrels; the second I found a chance to turn my hand to school-teaching. After seeing no chance at getting ahead at that I turned my face eastward a little, lit upon a larger town, and there I came down a peg, for I found nothing better to do than house-painting—and even from that I was very soon dismissed on suspicion that I had never learned the trade. In Kansas City I taught school again, became a dry-goods salesman in Omaha, a hotel clerk in Idaho, mended clocks in Colorado; but this proving irksome as well as uncertain, I went farther out on the frontier and became a sort of handy-man attache of the regular army.

"Tiring of this, I returned again and went to piano-tuning in Denver. It was while engaged in this occupation that I fell in with a young lady who gave a decided turn to my fortunes. I suppose it will in no way surprise my mother to learn that she admires my talents, took a fancy to the cut of my phiz, and so worked upon her father that he has taken me into his business. In short, mother, the west has made my fortune, though not in the way I once fancied it would. However, Boston in general need know nothing about this when I make a flying visit home next winter with my bride."—Boston Record.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. [illegible] the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When [illegible]

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEACH, Putnam, Conn.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. eow,w4,P,M,Sat

Do not throw away your hard earned cash for every new cough syrup, when that standard remedy for coughs, Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, is 25 cents.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

One of the graveyards located at a cemetery in Minneapolis the other day, said a reporter of that city that in nineteen coffins the remains were found turned on their sides, and in one case lying face downward; the latter was that of a full-grown woman, with long jet black, beautiful tresses scattered over the shoulders and tangled about the neck, indicating that, after being consigned to her last resting place, the latent spark of life quickened, and conscious of the awful hopelessness of her situation, and with the strength of desperation she began the frightful struggle, vainly turning and twisting within the narrow walls of her prison, until exhaustion finally overcame her and brought relief.

When the ancient cemetery east of Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn, was dug up and the remains taken away to allow of the extension of Raymond street, the writer saw numerous indications of premature interments.

The most hideous and blood-curdling of these was that of a body found in the old Presbyterian public receiving vault. It had been placed there about four years previously, and the lid or top had been strained so that some of the screws were torn half out, the end and lower part of the top had been wrenched outward, and the right foot and part of the leg had been forced through, and was so found, protruding. Upon further examination the entire body was found twisted, the skull turned under, and the fingers of one hand were thrust through and wedged in under the lid—evidently in the last straining, hopeless effort for liberty. In scores of graves the coffins were found to contain bodies that were turned and twisted more or less to one side—positive proof of having been buried alive.

It is a well-authenticated fact that the mother of the poet Scott, while lying in a trance and declared by the physicians to be dead, was laid away in the family tomb in the great vaults under the parish church. At night the ghoulish sexton stealthily entered the tomb, opened the casket, and proceeded to rob the elegant and wealthy lady of the jewels which were on her person, according to the then prevalent custom. Finding some finger rings too tightly fixed, the unconscionable thief took his pocket knife and slashed the flesh from the fingers. The sudden shock and flow of blood caused a reaction of the vital forces, and the benevolent madame opened her eyes, uttered an exclamation of amazement and attempted to rise up. The guilty and horror-stricken rascal's hair rose straight upon his head, and, with the yell of a desperate madman, he rushed forth, thus raising the alarm which brought help and rescue to her. She lived many years subsequently, none the worse from her awful adventure, which occurred five years previous to the birth of Sir Walter.

The mother of General Israel Putnam, of revolutionary renown, was placed in her coffin and the funeral services commenced, when she revived, and six years afterward gave birth to the child Israel.

Long years ago three medical students, who had paid an extra sum of money to a professional "resurrectionist" for the purpose of procuring an extraordinarily desirable subject entered the college dissecting-room one night to review their purchase, which had just been received.

Lifting the cloth cover, they were more than pleased to discover the remarkably fresh, fine, desirable young corpse of a young and lovely maiden lady. It was the form of a Juno and the features of a Hebe. Round, plump, splendidly developed, perfectly symmetrical, with a wealth of dark chestnut tresses, and chestnut-colored eyes, pink, creamy-tinted complexion, brilliant ivory white teeth, thin delicate ears, mouth and nose, eyebrows and eyelashes beautifully long and shapely.

One of the two fingered about the body apparently as one held under the spell of a strange, undefined fascination.

The girl had been ill and was supposed to have died of some heart disease, and had lain in her family vault about twenty hours. The young student, filled with admiration, gently lifted the magnificently molded arm. It was not chilling cold, although cool. The muscles were not hard and fixed severely as in a rigor mortis. He raised the eyelids and saw now one of the glassy and ghastly peculiarities. He was aroused, and laid his eardown over the region of the heart. Then he was puzzled and startled, and applied the stethoscope.

Then he repressed his growing excitement and summoned assistance. Evidence of latent life in the body were discovered beyond a doubt. Vigorous efforts were then made for resuscitation, and successfully, too. Then the hapless girl, while yet unconscious, was wrapped in blankets and tenderly removed to the residence of one of the professors near by. Her relatives were sent for, and in time she regained perfect health, and subsequently wedded the student, who afterward became president of the Philadelphia Medical College. She is now a widow and resides with the youngest of four stalwart sons.

An Estimate of Some "Interest."

In order to give his hearers some idea as to how great a period of time 6,000 years is—the time elapsed since the Egyptians lived whose mummied bodies are being found—the Rev. Charles S. Robinson, whose lectures at the Madison Avenue Reformed Church are proving so interesting, invited answers to this problem: What would be the present value of a chain found about the neck of a mummied princess at compound interest at 6 per cent., assuming the original value at $20. The answers show a row of some ninety figures.—Albany Journal.

Age of Locomotives Discussed.

The average age of locomotives is about twelve years, yet many, through proper habits of living, taking their meals regular, and avoiding all intoxicating beverages, attain quite a respectable old age. The oldest running engine in Germany has been on the road since 1845, and is consequently 43 years old a Methuselah, in fact. With regard to its habits, it has always confined itself strictly to water, though it has been addicted to smoking all its life. It is said to see a locomotive grown prematurely old by getting on trains and running all night, but they are often met with, in collisions.—Texas Siftings.

A man near Washington, Ga., has the cost he was married in twenty-five years ago, and says it is his mascot, as when he puts it on good luck attends all he sets hands to.

sang, as we comprehend the term, as Walt Whitman eulogizes and employs it—namely: as the riotous medley of the under languaged, is unknown. One may in a week hear more oaths and more slang of the coarse and stupid sort in Wall street, at the seaside, in the hotel corridors and street-cars, and along the sidewalks of New York and Philadelphia, say, and in public generally among us, than in the length and breadth of France in a year. There is not the same burlesque of "heartiness," the same slapping on the back, the same insistent invitations to drink, the same brutality; in fine, there is infinitely more gentleness. Their occasional savagery strikes us as ineffective and amateur, their fury seems fustian. The "rapier thrusts" of sarcasm, the kind of writing and talking to which some of our newspapers apply their most eulogistic epithet, "scathing," the bitter banter to which not a few of the best bred of our young girls seem just now especially addicted, would excite amazement in France.—W. C. Brownell in Scribner's.

When Men Cross Their Legs.

Men generally cross their legs when there is least pressure on their minds. You will never find a man actually engaged in business with his legs crossed. The limbs at those times are straighter than at any other, because the mind and body work together. A man engaged in auditing accounts will never cross his legs, neither will a man who is writing an article, or who is employed in any manner where his brain is actually engaged. When at work in a sitting posture the limbs naturally extend to the floor in a perfectly straight line. A man may cross his legs if he is sitting in an office chair discussing some proposition with another man, but the instant he becomes really in earnest and perceives something to be gained his limbs uncross as quick as a flash, he bends forward toward his neighbor and begins to use his hands. That is a phase that I believe you will always observe.

Men often cross their legs at public meetings because they go there to listen, or to be entertained; they are not the factors in the performance, and they naturally place themselves in the most comfortable position known to them—namely, leaning well back in their chairs and crossing their legs. A man always crosses his legs when he reads a newspaper, but he more apt to lie down when he reads a book. If reads a paper, of course, to inform himself, but at the same time the perusal of its contents is recreation to him, and his body again seeks its position of relaxation. When a man is reading a newspaper and waiting for his breakfast his legs are always crossed, but as soon as the breakfast is brought to him he puts the paper aside, straightens out his legs, and goes to work—that is, begins to eat, his mind now turning on the duties of the day before him.—Liverpool Courier.

The Boston's Big Gun.

Naval officers are delighted with the new eight-inch rifled gun on the Boston. This gun is a howler, and can throw a large projectile nine miles as easy as winking. The charge for this gun is 125 pounds of powder, and the government orders it to be fired for practice five times every three months. No jewelry in a woman's casket is kept more beautifully bright than this gun. It is cleaned so carefully that not a speck would be left on a lace handkerchief if passed through it from breech to muzzle, says the New York Sun, and nothing less than the purest glycerine is used in the automatic cleaning process. It is screwed not only through the gun deck, but through the orlop deck as well, for one discharge from its mighty jaws would tear a single deck all to pieces. It has an engine of its own down in the bowels of the ship to turn it on its pivot. It stands to-day as the equal, if not the superior, of any piece of naval ordnance in the world. There are other rifled guns on the Boston that have a range of six miles, three miles and a half, and three miles, and some little guns worked like an old-fashioned coffee-mill that can make things hot at a mile and a half. But when the eight-inch rifled gun begins to shoot she does not need to shoot very often, as she can make a big hole in 16-inch armor plating nine miles away, and the armor-plating would probably roll up itself if the gun got any closer.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Mr. Evarts, from the Committee on Library, reported back with verbal amendments, the House bill to incorporate the American Horticultural Association. The amendments were agreed to and the bill passed.

Mr. Edmunds introduced and had referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the government of the United States will look with serious concern and disapproval upon any connection of any European government with the construction or control of any ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien, or across Central America, and must regard any such connection or control as injurious to the just rights and interests of the United States, and as a menace to their welfare.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate the expression of the views of Congress to the governments of the countries of Europe.

The Senate, at 12:40, resumed consideration of the Tariff bill, of which three pages were disposed of, after which the Senate went into Executive Session, and at 4:55 adjourned unil. 11 A. M. Thursday.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Mr. Gear of Iowa submitted a conference report on the bill for the retirement of General Andrew J. Smith, which was agreed to. It authorized his retirement with the rank of colonel of cavalry.

Springer of Illinois stated that at a meeting of the Committee on Territories this morning, it had been determined that the Senatorial bills should not be reported for consideration until January 15th.

A conference report on the Senate bill regulating appointments to the marine hospital service was submitted by Phelan of Tennessee and agreed to.

The Democrats Will Not Compromise.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Republican Senators held a caucus this morning, as a result of which Messrs. Morrill and Sherman submitted to Messrs. Vest and Harris, representing the Democratic side of the chamber, a proposition to agree to a recess from next Saturday, the 22d inst., until January 2d, with night sessions of the Senate till adjournment. This the Democratic conferees refused to accept, and it is said another conference will be held tomorrow.

Bailey Will Probably Be Rejected.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The information asked from the Department of Justice respecting certain criticisms made upon Leon O. Bailey, recently nominated to be United States Attorney for the District of Indiana, has been placed in possession of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and it is understood that an adverse report will be made upon the nomination in a few days.

HIGH WATERS.

Six Feet Over the Dam at Nashua. The Merrimac does Not Abate.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NASHUA, N. H., Dec. 19.—An immense volume of water is flowing over the Jackson company's dam in the Nashua river tonight, the river having risen to a depth of six feet on the dam, with evidence of having reached the highest point. The Merrimack still maintains its height, but no damage is reported hereabouts beyond the flooding of cellars.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE OF A DRIVER.

His Team Ground Up by a Train, But He Runs Away.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Dec. 19.—The New York express tonight struck a peddler's team near Williams bridge, grinding the horse and wagon into very small pieces. When the trainmen went back with a stretcher to pick up the driver he jumped up and dashed off across the fields as fast as he could run, evidently crazed with fright.

THE SITUATION AT WAHALAK.

No Trace of the Murderers Yet Obtained. Excitement Abating.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MERIDIAN, MISS., Dec. 19.—The situation at Wahalak remains unchanged. The negroes implicated in the killing of Maury and Cobb and other citizens of Kempa County have all disappeared, and no trace of them has been discovered up to the time of this writing. A number of men have been diligently searching for them since Sunday morning, but not one has yet been found. The county is quiet. Rumor obtained circulation yesterday that there was trouble anticipated at Shuqualak station, some miles north of Wahalak. This originated from a request made to the Sheriffs of Noxube County to send 25 men to that point, as there were fears of the destruction of property belonging to innocent negroes in that vicinity. The excitement is all over and the people are anxious to arrest the perpetrators of the tragedy. Cobb and Maury were buried yesterday, and the wounded are all doing fairly well. The rumor that several negroes were killed in or near Wahalak yesterday, is entirely without foundation.

LATER.—Three leading actors in Sunday night's tragedy are in the hands of the avengers, and six more are hedged in so that escape seems impossible.

Investigating the Charges of Debauchery in Alaska. Damaging Testimony.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Several witnesses subpenaed by the House committee on merchant marine and fisheries, to testify regarding the alleged outrages in Alaska, were on hand when the committee met today.

Wm. Gavitt, special treasury agent to Seal Islands, Behring Sea, was the first witness called. He was detailed for duty on the Island of St. George last year, and remained there until August of the present year. His testimony went to prove that the accounts already published of immoral conduct on the part of the agents of the Alaskan Commercial Co. were not without foundation. The witness said that the whole Island was a place of prostitution, and gave several instances regarding charges of prostitution against the company's agents. At one time A. M. Kirk said he would whip any government officer who interfered with his business, meaning his business with women. Another case was that in which the agent of the company had declared he would break a man's head if he refused to bring his wife to him. Witness said that if he owed any apology to the government it was that he did not have Webster, the company's agent, shot. Witness admitted that the social relations of the natives on the Island were peculiar, and that the women were probably loose characters. He asserted that he would rather serve a term in the penitentiary than go through again what he and his wife did on the Island. The witness offered several affidavits which he said supported the statements he had made concerning the conduct of the company's agents.

Sequel to the Gardiner Divorce Suit.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ROCKLAND, ME., Dec. 19.—In the case of Mrs. Helena Lawrence Gardiner of Philadelphia, the defendent in a libel for divorce, brought by William H. Gardiner of Camden, for the custody of three sons, Judge Libby yesterday announced a decision giving her the youngest son, a boy ten years old.

ARRIVALS AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Senator Quay and Others Call On the President-Elect.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 19.—The morning trains from Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Cleveland, brought many Loyal Legion veterans to attend the banquet tonight. Col. Wm. C. Goodlow of Kentucky is among the arrivals.

Senator Quay accompanied by John C. New, Gen. Williams, and Col. Britton, chairman of the committee to arrange for the inauguration, drove out to Gen. Harrison's residence this morning. After half an hour's general consultation, Messrs. Williams and Britton concluded their call, leaving Chairman Quay and Col. New closeted with the president-elect.

Republican League's Convention.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The Republican League of the United States met at its headquarters in this city today. President Foster occupied the chair. The place and date of the national convention was set for Baltimore, February 28th and March first, in order to give members from all over the country a chance to see Harrison's inauguration.

THE HOOKSETT DISASTER.

Three Lives Known to Have Been Lost. None of the Bodies Recovered Up to Dark.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 19.—Ice and high water were the causes of a fearful disaster at Hooksett this forenoon, in which three men lost their lives. The Concord railroad bridges spanning the Merrimack river on the Suncook branch, at that point have been undergoing repairs, and on account of high water it was necessary to stay them with heavy timbers. Under the heavy pressure of the ice and water, these gave away at eleven o'clock, precipitating the bridge and eleven workmen into the water, and they were carried over the falls, with loss of life as above stated. None of the bodies had been recovered up to dark, the high water and ice making the search extremely difficult.

Later—The latest theory is that the collapse of the bridge was caused by the starting of a car of stone, which had been placed on it to weight it down.

FOR BREACH OF PROMISE.

A Case which has been the Subject of Much Public Gossip.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ST. JOHNSBURY, VT., Dec. 19.—In the Caledonia County Court today the case of Emily Cheney against Dr. H. S. Calderwood for $1600 damages on account of a breach of promise was commenced. A jury was secured with difficulty, the case having been the subject of much public gossip. Calderwood denies the charges in toto.

No Immunity from Arrest for Axworthy.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Dec. 19.—The compromise effected with Axworthy, the absconding city treasurer, does not include his immunity from arrest if he returns to America.

Train Discontinued Between Boston and New York.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Dec, 9.—After Saturday, Dec. 22d, the train heretofore running between Boston and New York, leaving either city at 11:30 P. M. via the Hartford and the New York & New England Railroads, will for the present be discontinued. This becomes necessary in consequence of the loss of the transfer steamer Maryland.

Would Purify Elections by Checking the Corrupt Use of Money Thereat.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Representative Holman intends to secure, if possible some affirmative action by Congress that will tend to check the corrupt use of money at elections. Today he introduced a bill which will put the matter before the house in a well defined shape.

The Territorial Question.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The territorial question was brought up today at a meeting of the house committee on territories and it was unanimously determined to call up the bill of Representative Baker, for the admission of South Dakota, on the 15th of January, under a resolution of the house making the question a special order from day to day. After the Baker bill is taken up it is proposed to substitute for it the Omnibus bill agreed upon by the democratic caucus, and bring the latter up every day until it should be finally acted upon by the house. The committee decided to give a hearing Jan. 9th, to all persons interested in the bills for the admission of Utah.

Reported Wreck Discredited.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—The report telegraphed from Rockland, Me., today, about the loss of the British steamer Almira, is discredited.

FOREIGN.

COUNTESS COSTA.

Stabbed to Death in Her Carriage.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

FLORENCE, Dec. 19.—The Countess Costa was stabbed to death in her carriage today, by an army captain, who committed suicide by shooting.

MOST SNOW FOR YEARS.

Traffic Interrupted on the Intercolonial Railway. A Train Snowed Under.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Dec. 19.—The snow storm yesterday was the most severe for years, but no damage is reported in this Province. The only inconvenience felt, is the partial suspension of train service along the northern division of the Intercolonial Railway. At Moncton more than a dozen trains were held because of the blockade north of Campellton. A snow slide at Metapedia covered a special train, but no one was hurt. A crew of shovellers dug out the train, and it is slowly making its way to its destination.

FROM HAYTI.

Official Advices to the Government. Cape Haytien Bombarded.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Department of State is informed by our Consul at Cape Haytien, under date of the 5th of December, and written just as the steamer Saginaw was leaving, that after an absence of 10 days the Haytien steamer Toussaint L'Ouverture appeared off that city Monday morning, Dec. 3d, and began bombarding the city for two hours. The consular corps immediately protested against this action, and upon receipt of the protest the commander of the vessel granted 36 hours for the foreigners to leave. This period of time would expire at six A. M. on the 6th inst.

Defaulting Treasurer Axworthy Agrees to Pay $160,000 and Surrender His Property. Legal Proceedings Stopped.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 19. — Three actions which were brought against Ex-City Tresurer Axworthy of Cleveland, Ohio, were settled today in the Court of Queen's Bench. The actions arose from banking disputes. With the sanction of the Court, Axworthy agreed to pay 32,000 pounds and surrender his property in America, in settlement of the actions.

Telegraphic Notes.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—John Bright has rallied somewhat.

QUEENSTOWN, Dec. 19.—The woman Gallagher, who was arrested at Queenstown when landing from the steamer Umbria from New York last Saturday, and found to have a number of cartridges concealed in her dress, has been fined two pounds 10 shillings and costs.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Manchester Chamber of Commerce, by an overwhelming majority, passed a resolution holding that all foreign goods similar to those produced in England should pay the same proportion of the Imperial and Local tax which they would have paid, had they been manufactured in Great Britain.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty-six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10¼x14¼. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12 50; tree calf, $12.50; English-seal style, $9.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver lettering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

THURSDAY, DEC. 20, 1888.

In voting against the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission in the House, Tuesday, Representative Gallinger was not entirely forgetful of the fact, we suspect, that a Senatorial election is to come off in New Hampshire next June, and that he would be in a better position for that contest, if he took a stand on the Jacksonian platform of "To the victors belong the spoils." If we are not mistaken the New Hampshire contingent of applicants for appointments after the 4th of next March will be large enough to satisfy the country that the Republican party in this State is still alive and in vigorous condition.

There is considerable feeling reported to exist in medical circles in Illinois, over the recent action of Gov. Oglesby in reversing a decision of the State Board of Health. The board revoked the license of a physician—not, it would seem, from any lack of skill or professional attainments on his part, as in that case he would have received no license in the first place—but because he, a "regular" physician, resorted to the advertising columns of the papers to spread among the people the knowledge of what he has done and thinks he can continue to do, his investments in this line of enterprise it is said reaching the very respectable sum of $40,000 a year. For this breach of professional custom the board revoked his license to practice in Illinois, but the governor withholds his approval, so the offending doctor can keep on advertising and gathering in all the shekels that present themselves, and as a regularly licensed physician, too. The prejudice of the medical profession against the average "advertising doctor" is by no means without foundation, many a quack making a fortune by his impudent assumption and his skill in advertising, while at the same time his "skill" as a physician would not have sufficed to keep him from starving. But we have never heard of any objection being made to a notice of an important and successful operation by any physician being inserted in the papers—in the reading columns, of course, and equally of course, without charge—and yet this is as distinctly an advertisement as though it was put in the regular advertising type and columns, and paid for at so much a line. Long established customs are very tenacious of life, and we do not expect for many years yet to see the social and professional ban removed from the physician who advertises; but why it should be so hopelessly improper for a reputable and skillful doctor to make a modest announcement of his business, his whereabouts and his specialties, if any such he has, will no doubt at some period in the future be regarded as a conundrum for the country debating societies to solve.

Stories connected with the great Civil War in America—filled with romance though they may be—have an irresistable attraction. The incidents of the mighty struggle were so innumerable, the experiences so thrilling, the vicissitudes so manifold, the suffering and the sorrow of those four years of bloodshed so terrible, that a story, having for its basis some affecting circumstance in the lives of any of the combatants, meets with popular approval on its appearance. A famous story which ran through a series of the Rural New Yorker, with the title of "Andersonville Violets," written by Mr. Herbert W. Collingwood, the able editor of that great journal, is now to be published in book form by Lee & Shepard, Boston. Price, cloth $1.00; paper 50 cents. For sale by M. Goodrich.

J. T. Trowbridge's stories for young people have been read by the boys and girls of the country for many years; and each succeeding story has been more eagerly read by his host of admirers than the ones which have proceeded. The enthusiasm which he has kindled in young hearts is wide-spread and genuine, because confidence has been gained that what he writes will have its counterpart in others' lives; that it will be of real interest; that it will point in an unobtrusive way a healthy moral; and so there is an outstretched hand from American homes to welcome whatever he has to say. Two volumes of the "Start in Life Stories" are ready for the public, from Lee & Shephard's Boston publishing house, their titles being respectively "A Start in Life," and "Biding His Time." Price $1.00. For sale by M. Goodrich.

A... pædia" the peanut is a leg... plant, botanically known as ... chis hypogæa. It has several ... common names than that by which we are accustomed to call it, among them being ground pea and ground nut. In the southern states it is known as pindar and goober, while by the French it is called the pistache de terre. It is generally believed to be indigenous to Africa, although there are five or six species of the genus found growing wild in Brazil. It has been successively introduced into Spain, has for several years been raised in the states of Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee, and has been more recently cultivated in California. A small variety also grows in China.

The culture of the peanut is not difficult. Good corn land is generally selected in this country, care being taken that there is nothing in the land that would stain the shells. In this state, says the San Francisco Chronicle, a sandy loam that never suffers from drought should be chosen. In fact, good melon land is good peanut land. The bottom lands on the borders of rivers that receive a winter or spring overflow are admirably adapted for the growth of this nut. Planting-time may be had in March if there is no frost or from April 1 to 15. The ground should be plowed five or six inches deep and then harrowed. The nuts, which are, of course, to be planted raw, must be taken out of the pod without breaking the skin, the best plan being to crush the shells with a light wooden hammer. The kernels are then planted in rows four feet apart and twenty inches from hill to hill, with three or four kernels to each hill, covering them about two inches deep.

The plan of planting adopted in the south is to mark off the land in furrows three feet apart and in these two peas are dropped at intervals of eighteen inches and covered an inch and a half deep.

When the nuts are ripe, which will be in October, the California peanut farmer runs a furrow on each side of the row of vines with a bull-tongue plow, close enough to loosen the soil and the plants. Then he takes a light and narrow grubbing-hoe, digs up the vines and turns them over to dry, taking care never to gather in rainy weather or when the ground is very wet. After allowing the vines to lie in the sun for a day the best plan is to stack them, after the dew has dried, in the following fashion: Drive a stake of four or five feet long firmly into the ground, spreading dried grass around it so as to keep the vines from the damp ground. Then lay the vines around the post, with the roots inward, taking care to leave a space around the stake for the purpose of ventilation, and when the stack is of a proper height, thatch it with a straw cap tied to the stake. Let the vines remain in the stack from three to five weeks, and then pick the nuts and send them to market.

A clean, bright appearance of the pods is largely to be desired, and to get this the nuts are sometimes put into a sort of winnowing cage, which is turned either by hand or power. There are two sorts of peanuts grown in California—the white and the red—and to make the white variety still whiter the nuts are sometimes treated to sulphur fumes. The red variety, by the way, is more easily cultivated and sells for about the same price. The white variety runs along the ground, while the red grows upright in a bunch. The picking is a rather arduous task, but the labor will in all probability be modified by the use of machinery.

The peanut is an easy crop to raise—the demand for nuts has trebled within the past few years—and has never yet equaled the demand. The quantity of peanuts used in this country may be set down at 3,000,000 bushels per annum; but as far back as 1867 there were imported into Marseilles alone from Africa more than 6,000,000 bushels, valued at $25,000,000 francs. At present the average price of peanuts may be set down at five cents a pound. So that by setting down America's product as 3,000,000 bushels of twenty-two pounds a bushel, it represents a product valued at $3,300,000. Contrast with this the value of California's yield—say $37,000—and it will be seen how infinitesimal is the share which this state enjoys of a great business.

About the Big Sunflower.

One by one the roses fall and one by one the bright delusions of our youth are dispelled. The struggle for existence year by year knocks the poetry out of lives, and as if this were not enough of that sort of thing there is always some crank at work to the same end. The latest development in this line has been made by a fellow who has spent all summer watching a row of sunflowers in his garden to prove that these gorgeous and esthetic flowers do not turn their faces to the sun all day long. Who has not read Tom Moore's beautiful lines in which he sings, "How the sunflower turns to her god when he sets the same look that she turned when he rose," and exclaimed, What beautiful poetry! And how the lines were recalled every time a sunflower was seen nodding over a garden wall or a back-yard fence, and whoever thought of being so critical and unpoetical as to watch the flower all day to see whether it really did turn or not?

But, according to the Oregonian, a fellow has been found out in Portland with no poetry in his soul who has undertaken this job. He drove stakes and set a compass, and took regular observations, and visited the flower three times a day, morning, noon, and night, and he says:

"Well, I found no twisting of the peduncle in a circle; no turning of the flower after the sun, none whatever. My flowers faced, respectively, north, south, east, west, northeast, and southeast, as they did when I set my marks at them. So far as facing toward the sun, there was no movement that I could detect. One slight alteration I did notice in some, but not all, of the flowers with which I was experimenting—a tendency of the head to droop or incline toward the earth as the seeds began to form. What I call my vertical indication showed this, but there was no return to the original position; the inclination remained permanent. Moreover, this insignificant movement was not toward but actually away from the sun, and appeared a provision for keeping the crowded seeds dry as they rapidly formed and began to ripen.

"If it were the case that the sunflower every twenty-four hours twisted its peduncle and brought its flower constantly toward the sun every sunflower ... and they face... those in my garden are ... while I write), some even ...rd the wall."

That settles it, and another poetical sentiment is knocked higher than Gilderoy's kite. Next!

The Hessians in the Revolution.

The hiring of these troops was bitterly condemned by Lord John Cavendish in the House of Commons, and by Lords Camden and Shelburne and the Duke of Richmond in the House of Lords; and Chatham's indignant invectives at a somewhat later date are familiar to every one. It is proper, however, that in such an affair as this we should take care to affix our blame in the right place. The king might well argue that in carrying on a war for what the majority of Parliament regarded as a righteous object, it was no worse for him to hire men than to buy cannon and ships. The German troops, on their part, might justly complain of Lord Camden for stigmatizing them as "mercenaries," inasmuch as they did not come to America for pay, but because there was no help for it. It was indeed with a heavy heart that these honest men took up their arms to go beyond sea and fight for a cause in which they felt no sort of interest, and great was the mourning over their departure. The persons who really deserved to bear the odium of this transaction were the mercenary princes who thus shamelessly sold their subjects into slavery. It was a striking instance of the demoralization which had been wrought among the petty courts of Germany in the last days of the old empire, and among the German people it excited profound indignation. The popular feeling was well expressed by Schiller, in his Cabale und Liebe. Frederick the Great, in a letter to Voltaire, declared himself beyond measure disgusted, and by way of publicly expressing his contempt for the transaction he gave orders to his custom-house officers that upon all such of these soldiers as should pass through Prussian territory a toll should be levied, as upon "cattle exported for foreign shambles."—Atlantic.

Preaching from a Text.

Why should the clergy always preach from a text? asks a writer in the New York Tribune. I can understand the propriety of a preacher taking a chapter or a passage from the bible and giving an exposition of it. But I own that I can see little advantage in the almost universal practice of taking a few stray words out of the bible as the basis of a discourse. In the first place the preacher who follows this course is very apt, without at all intending it, to give a partial or distorted view of the real meaning of the bible. Indeed such preaching inevitably leads the people to regard the bible simply as a store-house of proof-texts in favor of their theological hobbies. In the next place textual preaching dwarfs and cramps the thought of the preacher and begets that conventional type of sermonizing which is so capitally satirized in the well-known discourse on Mother Hubbard. Having only a few words to comment on, which words oftentimes convey but a broken and incomplete idea without the context, the texts preacher soon gets into the way of seeing far-fetched meanings and suggestions in these few words. Or, worse still, perhaps he doesn't see anything that can not be stated in a good-sized paragraph; and so he pads out the rest of his sermon with frothy rhetoric and meaningless word-chopping. Instead of this poor, thin stuff, I would like to see the old style of expository preaching revived. The average hearer doesn't object to bible preaching. On the contrary, he wants more of it than he gets in the ordinary texual preaching of the day. There is a lack of proportion and perspective in such preaching that often leads, as I have said, to an actual misrepresentation of the meaning of the bible, and confines the hearer to a few little ruts of hackneyed thought.

Variety in Diet.

There is a postive virtue in a certain amount of routine in diet, and a positive sacrifice of happiness in the continual craze for variety. One falls into a way of looking forward pleasurably to a dinner that he knows is coming, and sits down to it with a kind of eagerness—provided, of course, it does not come too often. The people who live to a great age generally account for it by the regularity of their life. M. de Chevreul takes his two boiled eggs for breakfast every morning of his life, and, for all anybody knows to the contrary, has taken them every morning since he was of age—which was just eighty-two years ago. The Listener has never noticed that the people who eat certain dishes with unfailing regularity seem to enjoy them any less than other people who pick and haggle over a bill of fare every day, looking wearily for something new. Not every person is born with the gift to be an epicure, and the mass of us who were not born with that gift had better adapt ourselves to a cheerful and comfortable routine. Even the born epicures are seldom happy. If they could always get just what they want to eat, and were not made miserable by the cooking of at least two meals out of the three, they would not be happy, because good digestion seldom waits on highly accomplished palates. It was Brillat Savarin, the Listener believes, who said that "heaven is where we eat," and the place where we digest he called by another name.—Boston Transcript.

The Doctor's Prescription.

"What would you advise, doctor?" groaned the young man the next morning after the banquet.

"My advice, sir," replied the physician, after feeling his caller's pulse, examining his tongue, and pondering deeply a few moments, "is that you give up all thought of business for the day, return to your residence, retire to your own apartment, have some water heated to the boiling point, procure a number of clean cotton badages, dip them carefully in the water, apply them to the head as hot as you can bear them, and keep them constantly moistened, replacing each bandage by a fresh one as soon as it becomes noticeably reduced in temperature. Maintain this method of treatment for six hours and you will be relieved."

"Christopher Columbus!" ejaculated the young man, an hour or two later, while carrying out these instructions. "I paid the doctor $5 for telling me to go home and soak my head!"—Chicago Tribune.

Good women are sentinels: in the darkest earth's night
They hold with stout hearts, silently, life's outposts towards the light,
And at God's Almighty roll call, 'mong the hosts that answer "Here,"
The voices of good women sound strong, and sweet and clear.

Good women are brave soldiers; in the thickest of the fight
They stand with stout hearts patiently, embattled for the right,
And tho' no blare of trumpet or roll of drum is heard,
Good women the world over are an army of the Lord.

Good women save the nation, though they bear not sword nor gun;
Their panoply is righteousness; their will with God's as one,
Each in her single person revealing God on earth,

Dost talk of woman's weakness! I tell you that this hour
The weight of this world's future depends upon their power;
And down the track of ages, as Time's flood tides are told,
The level of their light is marked by the place that women hold.

AN INSECT AVENGER.

Details of a Remarkable Tragedy Enacted by Dumb Creatures.

"I witnessed a strange tragedy in insect life a few days ago," said a Pittsburg gentleman to a Dispatch reporter yesterday. "It was a pleasant day and I was strolling about the grounds near my house when my attention was attracted to a big ugly looking spider, that jumped upon a board lying on the ground just in front of me. I paused to watch the spider, and then I noticed that he was watching something else at the other end of the board. A wasp was there, busily engaged in gathering material for its nest or for some other purpose from the wood, and the spider had marked it for its prey.

"Creeping up stealthily, and frequently stopping to reconnoiter, the spider drew near to his victim, the latter remaining entirely unconscious of danger. All at once the spider made a sudden leap, caught the insect, gave it a bite, then retreated a few inches. A few moments the legs and wings of the wasp trembled violently, and then all was over. The insect lay flat upon its back, motionless and dead. This was act first of the tragedy.

"In act second, to adopt theatrical parlance, the slayer of the wasp was discovered running around his victim. Evidently fearing that the wasp might not be dead but playing possum, the spider acted with great caution. He moved slowly around in a circle, now stopping and eyeing the insect to see if it remained in the same position and now gradually approaching a little nearer.

"Next appeared upon the scene a third actor—another wasp. A glance at the board showed him what had been done by his enemy, and at once he became wildly excited. Flying rapidly around, grieving no doubt over the death of his comrade, he seemed for a time to be in doubt as to what he ought to do. But his mind was soon made up. He buzzed out: 'Here at thee, villain!' or something like it and pounced down upon the black spider. There was no struggle. At the first touch of the wasp's sting the ugly creature rolled over and over in the throes ofdeath. This was the end of the second act.

"At the beginning of act third the dramatis personæ were all on the stage—two dead and one of them living. After surveying his fallen foe with a proud and satisfied air for a brief period the wasp arose from the board and flew a short distance—perhaps twenty feet—to a spot where the earth had been lately disturbed, sought out a soft spot, and began digging a grave. Two small pebble stones with a hollow between them, which had been washed by the rain, afforded a good place for a sepulcher, and in about fifteen minutes the wasp had his task completed, apparently to his entire satisfaction. Then he entered upon a small job of engineering He flew back and forth between the grave he had dug and the dead spider a number of times, as if to select the best course for the road over which the body must be dragged and to fix it firmly in his mind; the road chosen had no crooks or turns, but was a 'bee line.' Satisfied with his survey he at last settled down to the hardest part of the work he had undertaken.

"The spider must have been several times as heavy as the plucky wasp that killed him, but the little fellow knew his own strength and how to use it. Seizing the creature by the head the wasp began dragging it over the board and then over the ground, crawling backward. Now and then he stopped, rose on his wings and again looked over the route he had marked out as if to make sure that he was not deviating from the course that led to the grave of his victim. Then he would return and renew his difficult work.

"The wasp kept a straight line turning out for nothing. Several sticks and stones lay in his way, but instead of going around them with his burden he dragged it up one side of every intervening obstacle and let it roll down the other. He persevered, and I watched him with much interest, keeping far enough back so as not to frighten him, until he had hauled the carcass of the spider fully twenty feet and rolled it into the hole he had prepared for it. Then he covered the body over with earth until it was completely hid from sight. This was the last act of the performance—or, at least, all that I witnessed. Whether the wasp kept on and buried his dead comrade or not I am unable to say, as my duties called me away before I had a chance to see more."

The forgoing is not a fiction of the imagination, but a fact. The gentleman who related the story is a well-known Pittsburger, who would not allow the use of his name, but whose veracity is unquestioned. The incident illustrates in a striking manner the instinct, or reasoning power, of some of the most despised and inferior of God's creatures.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Dinner at Teneran.

There are tiny lambs roasted whole; salmon which has been brought packed in ice upon the heads of runners from a distance of a hundred miles; appetizing kababs of lambs and venison, fowls and partridges (in silver bowls), stewed to rags and served with strange-colored sauces of the richest kind; great heaps of boiled rice in steaming pyramids, white rice, green rice colored by an artful admixture of herbs, rice boiled with saffron of a ruddy gold color; omelets and sweet dishes; innumerable little china cups of toothsome pickles; small china bowls containing various thick soups; but not a single joint to be seen. Everybody eats away as if he had never tasted food before. There are no forks, no spoons, no plates; but every man's hand appears to be dipping at once into the innumerable dishes. Occasionally our host, with his mouth half full of some savory morsel, all is over, iced rosewater is poured upon the fingers of each guest from a silver ewer, and he wipes them upon a delicately embroidered napkin. About a tenth of what has been provided has been consumed by the party; the rest is removed and gobbled up with surprising celerity by the tribe of hungry servants. Pipes are brought again, but there is little or no conversation; the Persians say that "to talk after a good meal is the act of an ill-bred man or a fool." And then we get up and bid our hospitable friend good night. And as we leave we see that the mysterious covered tray is being taken to the banqueting-room, and we know that our fellow-guests and our host will drink, smoke and gamble until an unholy hour in the morning. And then we mount our horses and ride slowly through the silent, unlighted streets, preceded by our lanterns, which are an absolute necessity, and we don't meet a soul upon the road save an occasional military-looking policeman, who armed to the teeth, keeps watch and ward over the silent city of the King of Kings, for this is one of the innumerable titles which the shahs of Persia arrogate to themselves.—Good Words.

"Yankee Doodle" in Ghent.

After the American and British plenipotentiaries had signed the treaty of peace in 1814, the authorities in the city of Ghent proposed to give a grand musical entertainment in honor of the event. Of course they wished to have the national airs of the two countries performed by the bands.

Accordingly the band-master called upon the American gentlemen to get our national air. The Envoys were divided between "Hail Columbia" and "Yankee Doodle," but a majority finally voted for the latter. Then the band-master, turning to John Quincy Adams, said:

"Please give me the air."

Mr. Adams looked at Mr. Clay, and said, "Please give it to him. I can't; I never sung or whistled a tune in my life."

"Neither did I," said Mr. Clay.

Mr. Bayard and the other Envoys all answered in like manner. No one could sing nor whistle, and the situation became embarrassing. Finally Mr. Clay said, "Call John"—his colored man.

John came in, whistled the air as he would be wanted.

"John, whistle 'Yankee Doodle' for this gentleman."

John was more musical, or less bashful, than his white brethren, and at once struck up the tune.

The musician took down the air, arranged the harmony, and on the next day "Yankee Doodle" was performed in grand style as the national air of the United States.

The Wedding.

How interesting it is to hear an account of a wedding from the lips of the happy, chattering little bride herself as she recounts the whole affair to one of her intimate friends, who listens eagerly while the bride says:

"And, oh, everything went off perfectly lovely! There wasn't a single hitch from beginning to end, although I was dreadfully nervous, and Will was so nervous himself that I was in mortal terror all the time for fear he'd drop the ring or make some horrible mistake when he came to saying, 'I, William, take thee, Annabelle, etc.,' but he didn't, although his voice trembled and so did his hand when he took mine. It's a mercy we didn't drop the ring between us! What if we had? I'd have died! But we got through the ceremony without a single mistake. And, oh, the church was lovely! Then came the reception and all that—and the congratulations. And it did sound too funny to hear Will saying 'my wife,' at first—he'd give my hand a little squeeze every time he said it, and I'd come awful near giggling right out, and what if I had? Then the supper! Oh, it was elegant! Everything went off perfectly beautiful. And as for the presents—oh, o-o-h! They——"

The short time allotted to our readers for their sojourn on this terrestrial globe moves us to cut this story short, but the remaining ten or more chapters will be sent, on request, to those who are particularly interested in this subject.—Time.

WARD COMMITTEE MEETING.

A meeting of the members of the Republican committee of Ward two will be held tomorrow (Friday) evening, at half-past seven o'clock, at the hall of the Republican club, Daniel street. A full attendance is desired.

KING JOLLYBOY'S MARCH.

The grand march of "King Jollyboy's Retinue," in the third act of that truly jolly entertainment, will prove to be one of the most pleasing spectacles ever seen upon our local stage. The bright, carefully chosen colors of the costumes, with the original stage setting with calcium light, and the evident pleasure that the participants take in their various roles, will convince the most skeptical that local entertainments, properly managed, are the most satisfactory after all.

MUSIC HALL.

McNish, Ramza & Arno's Minstrels made a very fine appearance on the streets at noon on Wednesday, there being twenty-five persons in the parade, and the number of pieces in the band thirteen. The company gave an excellent entertainment in the evening at Music hall, to an audience which could hardly be called a fair one in point of numbers.

AFFAIRS IN KITTERY.

KITTERY, ME., Dec. 18th.

Success Lodge of Juvenile Templars, and the First Methodist society, are to unite and have a Christmas tree.

Rev. W. S. Jones, presiding elder of the Portland district, preached at the First Methodist church Sunday evening.

Mr. Granville C. Spinney finds it necessary to enlarge his shop and add some new machinery, in order to keep up with his work. His wagons and carriages have gained such a good reputation for him that he finds it difficult to fill his orders. He has recently purchased an engine and boiler from the government, which has been used a few times at the new fort on Gerrish's island. Mr. Spinney has built a large set of wheels and gear to use in moving the engine and boiler to his shop at the depot, where he will place them in the new part of his building, which will be large enough to admit of a good sized dry room to cure his stock, and the heat from the engine will be utilized for that purpose. When all improvements are completed Mr. Spinney will have a very convenient shop.

Mr. Samuel Paul recently slaughtered a hog about one year old that weighed 609 lbs. dressed; it was sold to a Portsmouth provision firm.

Langton Brothers are building a slaughter house for their use in the field back of their house.

The Globe Grocery company's sign on Huckleberry island was blown down flat during the high wind last week.

There is a gang of young hoodlums living at Spruce Creek, North Kittery, and they seem to have things pretty nearly all their own way, too. It is almost impossible to hold an evening meeting or a social circle without some depredation from these "White Caps." Where are some of our brave constables, that

Mr. Frank E. McNish, of McNish, Ramza & Arno's Minstrels, called at our office after the entertainment on Wednesday evening, and expressed regret that he had unconsciously mentioned the name while on the stage, of one of our most prominent and honored citizens, and explained that he alluded to a professional gentleman who takes a prominent part in "Si Perkins," and intended no reference whatever to our townsman, Hon. Frank Jones. Mr. McNish further said that he never allows personal remarks by any of the members of his company while on the stage.

The Music Hall orchestra will furnish music for the morning service at the North church next Sunday. In the evening the orchestra will furnish the music for the Christmas service at the Middle street church by the Sunday school of that society.

The Portsmouth Opera company, which will produce the "Pirates of Penzance" at Music hall soon after the "Court of King Jollyboy" has been given, will pay a compliment to the latter entertainment by attending the second night's production in a body.

Mr. Charles P. Wendell of this city has purchased of Mr. Wesley Foye, of Rye, fifty acres of pasture land in the latter place, situated near Col. Eastman's property at Odiorne's point. The price paid was $1600.

At the reception of the Portsmouth Athletic Club, on Christmas evening, the Music Hall orchestra will furnish the music.

The schooner Yankee Lass, recently purchased by E. Newton & Co. of this city, was hauled up in Puddle Dock yesterday.

Navigation of the Cocheco river has closed for this season, and the record of the year's business shows the value of the improvements made by the government in the way of widening, deepening and straightening the channel of that river Since the opening of navigation last spring there have arrived at Dover ninety schooners, with over 30,000 tons of coal; twenty-one schooners with iron pipes for the water works, paving stones, fish, and ashes; six schooners with 1,000,000 laths, 3,000,000 shingles, and a large amount of long lumber; four schooners with 8,000 barrels of cement, and three schooners with 2,500 barrels of superphosphate—a total of 124 vessels. Before the improvements were commenced there were but three small vessels owned in Dover, and which once in a while took cargoes there, namely, the Hattie Lewis, G. W. Raitt and Ceres, the value of them being $10,000 or $12,000; now the Dover Navigation Co. owns a fleet of nine fine schooners, valued at over $150,000, and find they still have not enough to do the business offering.

The treasury report gives the following official statement of the business transacted in the several customs districts of York county, Maine, for the year ended June 30th, 1888. York—expenses, $265; one person employed. Kennebunk — entries of merchandise, four; receipts, $97; cost to collect, $6.02; persons employed, two; expenses, $584. Saco—vessels cleared, foreign, four; receipts, $10; cost to collect, $1.08; persons employed, two; expenses, $610. Total receipts of the three districts, $107; total expenses, including costs of collection and salaries, $1466.10.

On Monday night of this week a snow plow recently made at Portland for the Lowell division of the Boston & Maine railroad was attached at Portland to the freight train for Boston. It came along all right until it reached Kennebunk, where the platform was out a little farther than the others, and as the side of the plow came along it raked every plank off the platform, and did some damage to the plow.

The annual New England supper at Sea Cottage, York beach, was given on Tuesday evening, the 18th inst. The attendance was fair, but not so large as for several years past, owing to the unfavorable weather. The usual good time was enjoyed by all who did attend.

Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Hayes—The Last Good-by—In Europe.

"When the time came for us to leave Washington my heart was broken. When Mr. Hayes was elected I invited Mr. and Mrs. Hayes to come directly to the White House, but they refused. On the Sunday previous to the inauguration I gave a dinner for them, so that Mrs. Hayes would not feel a stranger. The dinner was lovely and everything was arranged splendidly. There were seventeen of my own family at the dinner and a large number of prominent guests and the legation and cabinet officers. I shall never forget Mrs. Hayes when she entered. The large doors were thrown open and the general and I advanced to meet them. She was walking by Mr. Hayes, but did not hold his arm. She was dressed in white silk and her dark hair was combed smoothly over her ears. Her soft, black eyes shone like diamonds and her cheeks were as red as roses. I took her hand in mine—it trembled a little—and said, 'Welcome, Mrs. Hayes, to the White House,' and then my guests surrounded us and she was soon at home. After dinner the chief justice administered the oath of office to Mr. Hayes in the parlor. On Monday I did not go to the inauguration, because I was busy burning old letters and papers that my father had owned, some bearing the date of 1400. I had seen two inaugurations, those of the general, and I did not care to see any more. I had a lovely luncheon ready for them on their return and I also ordered the dinner and the breakfast for the following morning, so Mrs. Hayes would not have that worry the first thing. Then I told the steward he must go to Mrs. Hayes for orders after that.

"After dinner, as I was still hostess, I said to Mr. Hayes: 'Shall we return to the parlor?' and he gave me his arm and Ulysses took Mrs. Hayes'. When we got in the parlor I said, 'I hope, Mr. Hayes, that you will be as happy here as we have been for eight years,' and then I said, 'Good-by,' and we drove away. I told Ulysses as we were driving away that I had intended to say to Mr. Hayes what Gen. Buckner said to him when Buckner vacated Fort Donelson: 'My house is yours,' but I forgot it. Ulysses just put his arm around me and said he was glad I had not. All the servants who had served me during our term gathered in the hall to say farewell, and they were crying and I cried with them. After two weeks of hourly festivities, I might say, we left Washington on a special train. My car was filled with flowers, and after we had been escorted to it a senator made a speech thanking me for so successfully filling the position of mistress of the White House. Then another senator, a dear friend of mine, said it was wrong that we ever should leave it, and somehow I began to think it was. They went out and left me and I began to cry. All my pent up feelings burst forth at one bound and, as I tell you, my tears would have floated the ship of state if gathered in a reservoir. I cried for easily forty miles, and then the general came in and said:

"'Why, Julia, my dear, what is wrong?'

"'I feel like a waif, Ulysses,' I sobbed, 'I have no home.'

"'Never mind, we will soon have another one. Remember what a relief it is to me to be released from that position. Now we can do what I always wished to do—visit Europe and maybe travel around the world before we return.'

"And so he cheered me, and I never felt a regret afterwards. It washed itself away in those first tears."

"And he had his wish?" I said.

"Yes, we traveled around the world and were received everywhere with an ovation. What was the most interesting place to me? The crypt where lay the bodies of Ferdinand and Isabella. 'Every school child in America knows the story of Ferdinand and Isabella,' I said to the dear old priest who was our guide, and it seemed marvelous to him that it should be so. I went down into the crypt where they lie. 'Just think, Ulysses, they have been here for 400 years.' 'Julia, come away,' he said, for he always hated to think of death. 'But think, Ulysses, 400 years'—— 'Julia, I will leave you,' he replied, making for the door. 'But, Ulysses, I want you to think'—— 'Julia, I'll shut you in,' he said, so I flew to him. Then the dear old priest showed us the jewel box containing the jewels which Isabella pawned in order to send Columbus to America, but some of the party thought it looked suspiciously new. Then he took down a heavy silver crown which was dotted with jewels. It was heavy and not at all pretty. He said: 'Now, it is only right that the queen of America should wear the crown of the queen who was instrumental in finding America.' So I bowed my head and he put the crown on my bonnet and Isabella's scepter in my hand, and I waved it at our party. I soon got him to take it off, and right glad I was to be clear of it, for it was very heavy and not at all pretty."—Nelly Bly's Interview in New York World.

Commercial Honor in France.

In their commercial transactions Frenchmen trust one another to an extent that often strikes the foreigner with surprise, but it must be admitted that a change is working in this direction. Not many years ago bankruptcies were of rare occurrences in France. The causes which led to bankruptcy existed then as they do now, but the fact of being a bankrupt was considered such a crushing disgrace that traders used extreme prudence in their dealings, and when the times were bad sacrificed comfort and pleasure rather than run the risk of not being able to meet their liabilities. Now bankruptcies in France are common enough and their number is increasing every year. Familiarity with the idea has removed from the fact much of its old social stigma. That horror of getting into debt, which is still characteristic of the French people, is much less so than it was.—Paris Cor. Boston Transcript.

Most of the $89 has been recovered. Sullivan was the mover in the business, and got the little McArdle boy into it; he put the smaller boy in through a window and told him what to do, and gave him fifty cents of the plunder, besides treating him to candy and cigars. Then he spent $7 for prize packages, and then went for a ride with two other boys, paying for the team with part of Quinn's money. Sullivan's spree was a short one, he being arrested before night, the McArdle boy having told the whole story to his grandmother.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

What is Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It is an inflammation of the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMKIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS F. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all.' MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

"In a most aggravating case of Itching Piles I found instant relief by a single application of BURNETT'S KALLISTON. I would not be without it if it cost $100 a bottle." FRED. MILLS, 115 Congress Street, Boston, Mass.

"I have suffered agony from Itching Piles, and was unfitted for all work. The first trial of your KALLISTON stopped the itching in less than a minute. I think it is a big thing." JOSEPH E. FOSTER, So. Lyndeboro, N. H.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Senate met at 11 A. M. On motion of Mr. Sherman the House amendments to the direct tax bill were non-concurred in, and a conference ordered. Senators Sherman, Morrill and Vance were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. Morrill asked unanimous consent that the voting on the tariff bill and all amendments thereto shall begin at 1 o'clock, P. M., on the 21st of January next, after which there shall be no further debate without unanimous consent. Unanimous consent was given and that order was made.

Mr. Gibson offered a resolution, which was ordered printed, for the appointment of a select committee of 13 senators to inquire into the state of suffrage throughout the United States, especially to investigate the election of state officers at the state elections held in November last in Rhode Island and Louisiana, and the presidential election in the states of New York and Indiana, and to report all facts showing whether any improper, undue, and unlawful influences and practices were employed through conspiracies, trades, combinations, intimidations, corrupt use of money, purchase of votes or voters, false registering, voting, stuffing ballot boxes, bribery, or in any way whatever, and to what extent, and to make such recommendations as it may deem necessary.

The tariff bill was then taken up and discussed at length, and various amendments acted on.

The consideration of the tariff bill was suspended when the following proceedings took place:

Mr. Plumb offered a resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for a full statement of all the purchases of bonds by the treasury department since March 4, 1885; specifying in detail, the classes of bonds, amount and date of purchase, parties from whom purchased, price paid, New York quotations available, and the surplus in the treasury on the first day of each month during that period.

Mr. Gorman suggested whether it would not be proper to omit the names of parties from whom bonds had been purchased.

Mr. Plumb said there had been already a partial statement of that kind, which had done no harm. He proposed simply to enlarge the scope of the statement.

Mr. Gorman objected to the present consideration of the resolution and it went over until tomorrow.

On motion of Mr. Sherman the action of the senate this morning on the direct tax bill was reconsidered and the bill was referred to the finance committee.

After a further consideration of the tariff bill it was laid aside, ten pages having been disposed of during the day, and the senate took up the private pension bills on the calendar, ninety in number, and passed them all in fifty minutes.

The legislative appropriations was then referred to the committee on appropriations and the senate adjourned at 4:40.

HOUSE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—On motion of Mr. McMillan of Tennessee, the Senate amendment to the holiday recess resolution was agreed to.

(It provides for a recess from Friday, Dec. 21st, until Wednesday, Jan. 2.)

During the morning hour a bill providing for paying certain advances made to the United States by Maryland and Virginia for the purpose of aiding in erecting public buildings in Washington was taken up and considered. After a discussion, Mr. Shaw withdrew it from the attention of the House.

The House then went into committee of the whole on the river and harbor appropriation bill, after agreeing that general debate should be limited to one hour and a half.

Mr. Cummings of New York said that in light of the past river and harbor legislation, thoughtful statesmen ought to go slow. It was only a little over six years since ex-President Arthur had vetoed a river and harbor bill carrying $19,000,000. The country had stood aghast at this immense sum and the House had passed the measure over the president's veto. The destroying angel had come and had struck down the first born of river and harbor statesmen. There had been weeping and wailing in both political parties. The lordly republican ex-secretary of the navy had been stretched at the side of the blunt statesman from Chesequake creek. Good and faithful servants had been returned. He saw their faces today, they beamed in delegations from Georgia and Maine. He saw some in Illinois and Indiana delegations. They smiled in Pennsylvania and New York contingents.

Regard Their Work, Beyond the Defense and Passage of the Tariff Bill, as Finished.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—There will be no more hearings on the Tariff bill by the Senate finance committee. They propose to close up their business now as rapidly as possible. A very important matter is coming before them in writing, and may be considered, but they regard their work, beyond the defense and passage of the Tariff bill, as finished.

Commander in Chief Warner of the Grand Army will Attend the Maine Encampment.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SACO, ME., Dec. 20th.—Major William Warner of Missouri, Commander in Chief of the Grand Army, has written Department Commander Burbank that he will attend the Maine Encampment at Lewiston.

U. S. S. Richmond Designated as Flag-Ship for the South Atlantic Squadron.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20. — Secretary Whitney has ordered the United States Ship Richmond to proceed to Montevideo, for service as flag-ship of the South Atlantic squadron.

A Bill Introduced in the Senate by Mr. Sherman in the Interests of the Late Soldiers.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—In the Senate Mr. Sherman introduced a bill to pay soldiers of the late war who were promoted while serving terms the enlisted bounty to which they would have been entitled had they not been promoted. The same provision is made with regard to soldiers discharged on account of diseases contracted.

The Minister from Salvador and Honduras Presents His Letters to the President.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Senor Don Francisco Lainfiesta, the Guatemalan Minister to Washington, today delivered to the President, letters accrediting him as Minister for the Governments of Salvador and Honduras. The usual felicitations were exchanged.

The Republicans Gain a Congressman in California on a Recount of Votes.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Dec. 20.—The recount of votes in this city shows great frauds in the 5th Congressional district, and there is no longer any doubt but that Phelps, the Republican candidate, was counted out. The certificate has already been given to his competitor, Mr. Clunie, who had apparently on the face of the returns a majority of fifty-one. The recount of yesterday gave Phelps an increase of sixty votes, and today he made a gain of twenty-two, making his plurality thirty-one.

THE HOOKSETT DISASTER.

The Rest of the Bridge Carried Away. The Bodies Not Yet Found. A Theory that they are Under the Cars.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 20.—The remaining portion of the Central bridge at Hooksett Falls was carried away this afternoon and with it two carloads of stone. No one was on the bridge at the time. The bodies of the men drowned yesterday have not yet been recovered, and it is feared by some that they are under two cars loaded with stone, which went into the river at the time, and will never be found unless the cars are removed.

PENNSYLVANIA, POUGHKEEPSIE & BOSTON. RAILROAD.

Its Successful Completion Looked For.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Dec. 20.—Everything now points to the successful completion of the Pennsylvania, Poughkeepsie & Boston Railroad, which is intended to connect with the Poughkeepsie bridge. From the river to Pine Island the work is practically finished, and from there to Deckertown, Sussex County, several hundred men are at work on excavations and embankments.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Ex-President Hayes Keeps an Appointment with Gen. Harrison.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 20.—Ex-President Hayes called on Gen. Harrison by appointment today. It is supposed that the main purpose of the conference was to obtain from the ex-president some information acquired in his experience as chief-magistrate. It is believed by some politicians that Mr. Hayes will be offered a mission abroad by the new president.

Among Mr. Harrison's other callers of prominence was Col. Wm. Cassius Goodloe of Kentucky, who had charge of the assignment of speakers at the national republican headquarters during the campaign. It is currently reported that Col. Goodloe aspires to an important position under the in-coming administration.

During a brief conference the other day with Gen. Britton, chairman of the inauguration committee, the president-elect made but one request and that was that the survivors of his old regiment, the Seventh Indiana, should constitute his escort at Washington. Heretofore federal troops have been the guard of the president-elect on inauguration day. The survivors of the regiment have been quietly making preparations for the trip and will go to Washington under command of Mose. G. McLaughlin. It is thought that if the railroads will make rates to Washington lower than ever before, more than 10,000 Hoosiers will attend the inauguration.

A Well-Known Editor Dies at Buffalo.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 20.—G. W. Matthews, editor and proprietor of the Buffalo Express, died tonight.

Nominations Confirmed by the Senate.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—The Senate today confirmed the nominations of Thomas Burke to be Chief Justice of Washington Territory, and Orrin B. Hallam, Deputy First Auditor of the Treasury, and all of the Army and Navy promotions sent to the Senate this session, except the six staff appointments.

WAHALAK.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 20.—A special to the Picayune from Wahalak, Mississippi, says runners came in about noon today from Whitehouse, bringing the report from other cane searchers who had rode hard all day and covered their territory well, but failed to find any negroes for whom they were searching.

MRS. CLEVELAND.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec 20.—Mrs. Cleveland spent the greater part of the day in the city shopping. She returned to Germantown late in the afternoon, and with Rev. and Mrs. Wood and Miss Bessie Wood dined with Mr. and Mrs. J. Bryard Henry, at their residence. After dinner there was a reception, which was a very quiet, though a very elegant affair. There were not over twenty people present. Mrs. Cleveland will leave for Washington tomorrow morning.

Telegraphic Notes.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 20.—The Federal Grand Jury is still in session, and examined a number of witnesses today. The impression seems to be growing that no indictment will be found in the Dudley case.

BOSTON, Dec. 20.—Edward N. Dingley, son of Representative Dingley of Maine, and editor and proprietor of the Kalamazoo, Mich., Telegraph, was married tonight to Miss Miriam Robinson of Dorchester. The couple left immediately for New York and Philadelphia on a wedding trip.

FOREIGN.

HAYTI.

President Legitime still in Power, and Recognized by the Majority of the People. The Capture of the "Haytien Republic" Upheld by Public Opinion.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PORT AU PRINCE, Dec. 20.—President Legitime continues in power, and the majority of the people recognize his authority, and the pacification of the country is considered at hand. Neither the Yantic nor the Galena, the United States war ships that sailed a short time ago from New York have yet arrived. Public opinion supports the government in the matter of the capture of the steamer "Haytien Republic." The seizure is regarded eminently an act of law. It is held that the boat was endeavoring to run the blockade when overhauled and made a prisoner by the Haytien man-of-war.

AN EXCITING SCENE IN THE FRENCH SENATE.

M. Challemel-Lacours' Appeal to Save the Country from Boulanger.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PARIS, Dec. 20.—There was great excitement in the Senate this afternoon. M. Say withdrew his motion of yesterday providing for the printing of M. Challemel-Lacours' speech. M. Naquet ascended the tribune and renewed M. Say's motion amid cries of "Enough! Enough! Expel him!" The President called M. Naquet to order and he immediately left the Chamber.

THE HONORABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY'S WARRANT.

A Denial of the Report that the Queen Has Withdrawn It.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—In the House of Commons this afternoon, Stanhope, Secretary of War, denied that the Queen had withdrawn the Honorable Artillery Company's warrant.

STANLEY.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—At a meeting today, the Council of the English East Africa Company came to the conclusion that Stanley arrived at Wadelai after Emin had started on his march toward Lado to encounter the Mahdists, and that Stanley is still awaiting Emin's return. The Council think Stanley is the white traveller for whom Osman Saleh is searching.

Parnell vs. The London Times.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

EDINBURGH, Dec. 20.—In the case of Parnell against the London Times, the court today considered the validity of the attestments which had been made by the plaintiff. The court adjourned to enable the solicitor to produce a list of proprietors.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 20.—The number of Russian consuls in Persia is about to be increased, in order to counteract the effects of the mission of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, the British envoy. A Russian bank is to be established in Teheran.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S

NEW BOOKS.

"A magnificent blending of art gems."

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10¾x14¼. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12 50; tree calf, $12.50; English-seal style, $6.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver letter ing, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

Portsmouth Chronicle.

FRIDAY, DEC. 21, 1888.

We would respectfully request all persons sending us personal notes or other matter for insertion in the CHRONICLE or GAZETTE to affix their names to it, not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith. We cannot use any matter that is not properly endorsed.

It is announced that the recent postal regulation prohibiting the sending of postal cards bearing dunning messages, or envelopes endorsed on the outside with notifications that dunning letters are within, through the mails, does not interfere with the sending of postals bearing notices of assessments to members of secret or beneficiary societies. This is a common-sense ruling, as there can be nothing offensive in such assessment notices. The postal card is a popular institution, but it has made a good deal of bother, first and last. At the start, it was predicted that the postal clerks everywhere would spend half their time reading these cards, and the other half in telling what they had read; so an order was promulgated strictly forbidding the reading of any card by the clerks. Then persons with a grudge or petty spite against another would vent the same by sending on postals insulting or obscene messages to the object of their dislike; so the department ordered all such cards to be excluded, though how the clerks could detect the objectionable cards when they were forbidden to read any of them, is not clear. However, they managed it in some way pretty well. The last use, decided by the department to be improper, to which the postal card has been put, was to force dilatory debtors to pay by persistent and open dunning; but this having been put an end to, it would appear that any new method of making these cards a personal annoyance, or anything else beyond a cheap convenience for the people, could hardly be devised.

The democrats in the House want to admit Utah as a state in the Union, regardless of the fact that the Mormons are overwhelmingly in the majority, and the Gentiles generally are not much of an improvement on the latter both as regards their morality and respect for the laws of the country. It is safe to say that until the question of polygamy is settled for all time to come public sentiment will not sanction the admission of Utah to statehood. As regards the Mormon church and its creed without the polygamous features, we do not entertain the opinion shared by many that it will be able to thrive long with a good class of settlers in the territory. A son of Bishop Cannon of the Mormon church told the editor of the CHRONICLE in Salt Lake that the millinery and dry good stores were doing more to break up polygamy than the iron-clad laws passed by congress. The Mormon women could not resist buying new bonnets and fine ribbons like their Gentile neighbors, and the result was, said Mr. Cannon, that few of the young men could afford, if so inclined, to support more than one wife. It was getting to be very costly providing for one wife in a manner consistent with her ideas, and the millinery feature was doing more, he said, to settle the question of polygamy than all the laws enacted up to the present time.

President Cleveland having declined the invitation to visit Boston as the guest of the Tariff Reform club on account of the pressure of official business, the Boston Herald derives much comfort from the fact that he will have more time next summer and can then come to Massachusetts, and promises him a warm welcome. We suspect that when Mr. Cleveland leaves the White House his greatness will not follow him into private life, and that the sycophantic admiration now exhibited will cease. "The King is dead, long live the King!"

Gen. Britton, chairman of the committee of arrangements for the inauguration, says Mr. Harrison has no suggestions to offer, and leaves everything to the committee. The General says the inauguration will surpass any previous event of the kind. The committee is better equipped financially, than ever before, and have arranged to entertain 25,000 people who will take part in the procession.

How fast a person ages when the proof reader is careless. The death is announced in a Dover paper of a man who was born in 1640! This knocks early piety clean out.

And midnight to the one she's lost,
And said as her tear drops back
"I hate the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night wind sang,
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the children said as they closer grew,
"'Tis some witch that is cleaving the black night through."
'Tis a fairy trumpet that just then blew,
And we fear the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night wind sang,
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the man, as he sat on his hearth below,
Said to himself, "it will surely snow,
And fuel is dear and wages low,
And I'll stop that leak in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night wind sang,
And chanted a melody no one knew;
But the poet listened and smiled, for he
Was man, and woman, and child, all three,
And said, "It is God's own harmony,
This wind we hear in the chimney."

—Bret Harte.

MODEST CHICAGO.

Its Growth and Glowing Future as Seen by Charles Dudley Warner.

Chicago is becoming modest. Perhaps the inhabitants may still be able to conceal their modesty, but nevertheless they feel it. The explanation is simple. The city has grown not only beyond the most sanguine expectations of those who indulged in the most infatuated hope of its future, but it has grown beyond what they said they expected. This gives the citizen's pause—as it might an eagle that laid a roc's egg.

The fact is, Chicago has become an independent organism, growing by a combination of forces and opportunities beyond the contrivance of any combination of men to help or hinder, beyond the need of flaming circulars and reports of boards of trade, and process pictures. It has passed the danger or the fear of rivalry, and reached the point where the growth of any other portion of the great Northwest, or of any city in it (whatever rivalry that city may show in industries or in commerce), is in some way a contribution to the power and wealth of Chicago. To them that have shall be given. Cities, under favoring conditions for local expansion, which reach a certain amount of population and wealth, grow by a kind of natural increment, the law of attraction, very well known in human nature, which draws a person to an active city of two hundred thousand rather than to a stagnant city of one hundred thousand. And it is a fortunate thing for civilization that this attraction is almost as strong to men of letters as it is to men of affairs. Chicago has, it seems to me, only recently turned this point of assured expansion, and, as I intimated, the inhabitants have hardly yet become accustomed to this idea; but I believe that the time is near when they will be as indifferent to what strangers think of Chicago as the New-Yorkers are to what strangers think of New York. New York is to-day the only American city free from this anxious note of provincialism—though in Boston it rather takes the form of pity, for the unenlightened man who doubts its superiority; but the impartial student of Chicago to-day has plenty of signs of the sure growth of this metropolitan indifference. And yet there is still here enough of the old Chicago stamp to make the place interesting.

It is everything in getting a point of view. Last summer a lady of New Orleans who had never before been out of her native French city, and who would look upon the whole North with the impartial eyes of a foreigner—and more than that, with Continental eyes—visited Chicago, and afterward New York. "Which city did you like best?" I asked, without making myself serious in the question. To my surprise, she hesitated. This hesitation was fatal to all my preconceived notions. It matters not thereafter which she preferred: she had hesitated. She was actually comparing Chicago to New York in her mind, as one might compare Paris to London. The audacity of the comparison I saw was excused by its innocence. I confess that it had never occured to me to think of Chicago in that Continental light. "Well," she said, not seeing at all the humor of my remark, "Chicago seems to me to have finer buildings and residences, to be the more beautiful city; but of course there is more in New York; it is a greater city; and I should prefer to live there for what I want." This naive observation sat me to thinking, and I wondered if there was a point of view, say that of divine omniscience and fairness, in which Chicago would appear as one of the great cities of the world, in fact a metropolis, by-and-by to rival in population and wealth any city of the seaboard. It has certainly better commercial advantages, so far as water communication and railways go, than Paris or Pekin or Berlin, and a territory to supply and receive from infinitely vaster, richer, and more promising than either. This territory will have many big cities, but in the nature of things only one of surpassing importance. And taking into account its geographical position—a thousand miles from the Atlantic seaboard on the one side, and from the mountains on the other, with the acknowledged tendency of people and of money to it as a continental centre—it seems to me that Chicago is to be that one.—Harper's Magazine.

Queer Detective Work.

A lady and gentleman were traveling together on an English railway. They were perfect strangers to each other. Suddenly the gentleman said:

"Madam, I will trouble you to look out of the window for a few minutes. I am going to make some changes in my wearing apparel."

"Certainly, sir," she replied with politeness, rising and turning her back upon him. In a short time he said:

"Now, madam, my change is complete, and you may resume your seat."

When the lady turned she beheld her male companion transformed into a dashing lady with a heavy veil over her face.

"Now, sir or madam, whichever you like," said the lady, "I must trouble you to look out of the window, for I also have some changes to make in my apparel."

"Certainly, madam," and the gentleman in lady's attire immediately complied.

"Now, sir, you may resume your seat."

To his surprise, on resuming his seat the gentleman in female attire found his lady companion transformed into a man. He then laughed and said:

"It appears that we are both anxious to avoid recognition. What have you done? I have robbed a bank."

"And I," said the whilom lady, as he dexterously fettered his companion's wrists with a pair of handcuffs, "am Detective J—— of Scotland Yard, and in female apparel have shadowed you. "Now," drawing a revolver, "keep still."

Edited by PANSY—Mrs. G. R. Alden.

THE PANSY is an illustrated monthly containing from thirty-five to forty pages of reading matter. It is devoted to young folks from eight to fifteen. Its contributors are among the best writers for young folks.

Pansy's New Serial will run throughout the year and is entitled "The Way Out."

Pansy will also continue her "Golden Text Stories."

Margaret Sidney has a serial story entitled "Rob: A story for boys." It is full of the adventures, frolics and ambitions of a wide-awake boy.

Mrs. C. M. Livingston has tales of child-life and child-ways, in a new department, "Baby's Corner."

The Bible Band Readings, The Queer Story Column and The P. S. Corner will all be continued.

The Pansy is only One Dollar a year. A specimen copy for five cents.

The Sun.

FOR 1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smelling or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. mon.wed.fri.cod&1

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the Balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. A BROKEN ENGAGEMENT

A day in June, the month of roses; the air all fragrant with their delicious perfume; above, the sky one mass of fleecy clouds, gleaming and white upon their azure background.

By the side of a tiny lakelet, upon whose bosom water-lilies rest their snowy chalices, are two ladies, one old, and one in the first exquisite dawn of the loveliness womanhood has brought her. Truly Florence Adair is beautiful in every sense of the word.

There is an expression of loving pride in the old lady's eyes as she looks at her niece that is certainly justifiable. She draws her closer to her side.

"Flossie, darling, I have to thank you for making me inexpressibly happy," she says. "Rupert has told me."

A faint crimson rises to the girl's cheek, as, averting her face from her aunt's gaze, she says softly:

"Auntie, please do not speak to me about it just yet. It is so new. I haven't grown accustomed to it even in my thoughts."

For the past ten years Florence Adair has lived with the rich and childless widow she calls aunt, receiving all of a mother's love and tenderness, and giving in return an adoring affection that would pause at no sacrifice to prove its strength. And thus it is that, solely to please her to whom she owes so much, she has betrothed herself to the husband Mrs. Wilmott has chosen for her.

In her youth, when old Mrs. Wilmott had been fair and attractive, she had had two suitors, of whom the most assidubus had won the day.

The other lived for years a lonely disappointed man, until at length he, too, married.

A son had been born to him, who at the age of eighteen had been left an orphan.

But that son—Rupert Ludlow—had not had an opportunity to know want; for old memories stirring within her, and inclining her tenderly towards him, Mrs. Wilmott had taken his welfare into her own hands.

And now she makes no secret of the delight she feels in the consummation of her favorite scheme.

It was Mrs. Wilmott's desire that her niece's engagement should not be announced just at present.

"It is not necessary, as Rupert is to be gone so long upon that business for me. I want you to have a gay time this winter, and engaged girls are always wall-flowers," she had said; and Florence had acquiesced indifferently.

Our story began in Glenmere, Mrs. Wilmott's lovely summer home; but now the month is October, and the country has given place to the gayer attractions of the city.

It is evening, and the drawing-rooms of one of fashion's leaders are thronged by those whom the cards of invitation have drawn together.

Two gentlemen stand at a little distance from the hostess watching the arrivals. One is young and boyish; the other—Mr. Heatherton—tall and stately, impressed the beholder at once with the certainty that his is no ordinary character.

He has been looking on at the brilliant scene about him with apparently no great interest, when suddenly an expression of intense admiration lights up his face, as, grasping his companion's arm, he says softly:

"Harry, who is that young girl, there, coming towards your mother, with the old lady in black velvet?"

"That is Miss Adair. Do you think her handsome?"

"Handsome does not express it! I must have an introduction. She is the most exquisite being I ever saw, and she looks as good as she is lovely!"

Harry Arnold laughs amusedly.

"A clear case of love at first sight. I will present you."

A few months went by, and suddenly, to Florence's dismay, she learned that the kind friend she had grown to like so much had all the time been cherishing other and dearer hopes. The girl's eyes filled with tears as she answered Mr. Heatherton's unexpected avowal of his love for her, and told him frankly why it was his hopes must be futile.

"I did not know you felt in this way, Mr. Heatherton," she says earnestly, "and I hope you will not blame me for not speaking of my engagement before. It was my aunt's wish that it should not be announced until my betrothed's return from abroad. I never, until this moment, dreamed that you felt for me anything but friendship, or that I——"

She paused, the rich blood rising in a rosy glow to her very brow. What was she about to say? What were the words that trembled on her lips?

Max Heatherton is too much of a gentleman to take advantage of her confusion, but these are his thoughts:

"It is a duty engagment. She does not love this man. But whether she does or not, there is no chance for me. She has too much principle to break her plighted word."

An hour later, in a passion of tears, Florence flung herself upon her knees in her own room. Her maiden heart has been awakened from its repose at last, and the conviction has been forced upon her that the calm sisterly affection she bears towards Rupert is different from this strange chaotic feeling with which Max Heatherton's impassioned words have thrilled her being, and that in refusing this man's noble heart she has lost something out of her life that can never come again.

For a long time she kneels there, battling with herself. When she rises her face is very white and resolved.

"I must do my duty. I betrothed myself to Rupert because I knew it was the dearest wish of my kind aunt's heart, and now that my word is given, I will not take it back."

Time goes on, and Rupert has returned, and the day has been fixed for the wedding. But an appalling shadow intervenes—the shadow of death.

One morning dawns and finds Mrs. Wilmott unable to rise, or even to move, stricken by that foe that comes so suddenly and insidiously—paralysis.

As the day passes the doctors look graver and graver; and their apprehensions are not without cause, for another twenty-four hours see those kindly eyes closed, never to open upon her sorrowing niece again.

A few days have gone by. All the last solemn ceremonies have been completed, and the will has been opened and read. But, though in her bereavement she needs comfort from human friendship more than ever before, since the day of the funeral Florence has not seen her betrothed.

When he does come to her, it is not with sympathy and consolation, but with gloomy brow and cold eyes.

"I consider that I have been deceived," he says; "I always understood, as did everyone else, that you were to be your aunt's heiress, and now you tell me that you have known all along that your aunt had no power to will her property away from her husband's family."

A flame of anger drives away the sadness from the girl's eyes.

"Sir, I do not understand," she says; "I will forestall your next words. Under existing circumstances—now that I am not rich, as you erroneously supposed—you desire your freedom. I gladly give it to you."

And thus the very ill that old Mrs. Wilmott had so fondly hoped a marriage with her favorite would avert from her loved niece, came, and Florence was cast upon the world to fight her own way as best she could.

Five years have elapsed. In the home of a wealthy widow with one daughter, we again meet our heroine in the humble capacity of a seamstress.

Poor Florence! her struggle has been a hard one. At first she had tried for and obtained a position as teacher; but her health failing under the unaccustomed confinement, she had been obliged to return to her needle, as a last resort.

In a few days Rosemarie Villa is to be the scene of wedding-festivities, to witness the union of the daughter of the house, Marie, to the husband of her choice.

The day arrives. The ceremony is over, and the rooms are thronged with the gaily-costumed guests, when, desirous to avoid notice, and feeling the sadder for the recollections of former days the brilliant scene recalls, Florence slips out into the quiet garden, and makes her way to a distant arbor, where only the faintest sound of the dance-music penetrates. She enters, and starts back to find it already occupied by a gentleman and an elderly lady.

She turns to go; but an exclamation in a voice whose well-remembered tone falls upon her ear with vivid effect, stays her steps.

"Miss Adair, can it be that at last my prayers have been answered, and I have found you?"

Then, answering the surprise in the eyes which she lifts to his face, Max Heatherton—for it is he—takes her hand gently, and goes on with eager rapidity:

"I heard of your aunt's death, and that you were free, and I sought you at once; but to find you gone, in what direction I could not ascertain. Do you know why it was that I was more disappointed than I can tell? It was because your expressive face and manner, when you told me of your engagement, showed me that your heart was not in it, and I dared to hope that my enduring love would eventually win the day. You do not speak. Have I been too presumptuous, or is there a possibility that in the future I may gain the boon I crave? But stay; in my eagerness I am forgetting propriety. Miss Adair, this is my mother. A half-hour ago, feeling faint with the heat of the crowded rooms, she requested me to bring her to some cool, secluded spot, and we came here. Mother, this is the Miss Adair of whom I have spoken to you so often."

Then, Florence who had been standing listening to the above almost as if in a dream, feels her hand drawn into a gentle clasp, while a sweet voice says softly:

"I am more than pleased to meet the girl who has won by her goodness and beauty, such a lasting place in my son's heart; and I hope that we may grow to know each other well."

Not at once does Florence give her wooer an answer, but when it comes it is very fervent and satisfying.

"You have always been my ideal of everything noble and good, and, as your wife, I cannot help but be content."

So the love that endured conquered in the end, and one more married pair testify each day that passes to the true, heart-deep happiness a congenial union brings.

While searching through his father's effects Ticket Agent Moffett, of Knoxville, Tenn., found a gourd over a hundred years old. It contained many old papers, among them a note from Davy Crockett, payable to William Moffett, for 1 shilling and 3 pence for a barrel of whisky and a keg of cider.

The success of a well-known author is attributed to the fact "that he who reads feels that the hero is but a slight idealization of himself, the heroine such as every girl expects or believes herself to be." What is this but the understanding of human nature, upon which all true literary success depends?

King Humbert of Italy is known for his temperance in all things except smoking. He is an exceedingly small eater, and as to drinks, his guests may have it in plenty, but his own favorite "tipple" is water.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE ELECTRIC LIGHT CO. AND THE PORTSMOUTH GAS LIGHT CO.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Portsmouth Gas Light Co. was held on Thursday afternoon, the 20th, at three o'clock, to take action in reference to propositions looking to the consolidation of the Electric Light company with the Gas Light company. There was a pretty full representation of the stockholders, and of the 770 shares of stock, between four and five hundred shares were represented.

The meeting voted to accept and ratify the charter amendment procured at the last session of the legislature enabling the company to add an electrical department to its works, and to increase the capital stock of the company by an amount sufficient to include an electric light plant. The meeting also voted to consolidate the Gas Light company with the Electric Light company.

The Gas Light company has been for some time negotiating for the purchase of the Electric Light plant, and under the agreement now reached they are to pay for the same 650 shares of the Gas Light stock at par, equivalent to $65,000. The stock of the Gas Light company is increased from 770 shares to 1420, to enable them to make this purchase. By this consolidation on expense of from $4,000 to $6,000 annually will be saved to the stockholders. The station of the Electric Light company will be removed from its present location near the Portsmouth Machine company's shops to the works of the Gas Light company on Bow street.

It is understood to be the intention of the Gas Light company not to advance the price of electrical lights, but to afford the people of the city of Portsmouth a chance to have either electric or gas lights as may be preferred.

The Electric Light company was owned by Hon. Marcellus Eldredge, Mr. H. Fisher Eldredge and Dr. E. S. Fay. The officers of the Gas Light company are John Sise, president; F. J. Philbrick, clerk and treasurer; Thomas R. Martin, superintendent; John Sise, W. W. Cotton, J. J. Pickering, Joseph W. Peirce and Harrie W. Jackson, directors.

A SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT.

Thursday morning Jack Critchley, the fourteen-year-old son of John Critchley, a first-class machinist living on the navy yard, was drowned in one of the ponds on Seavey's island. The boy had gone on the ice to slide before going to school, and broke through where the water is almost six feet deep; his cries for help were unheeded, and it is supposed he sank after becoming exhausted and benumbed by the cold. When it became known that he was missing, his father and some other men went to the pond, broke the ice where the hole was, launched a boat, and his body was found with the aid of a boat hook, having been in the water some six hours. The coroner visited the scene of the accident during the afternoon, and rendered a decision of accidental drowning.

This should be a warning to parents, and their children should be admonished of the serious danger of venturing on the ice before it has had time to form thick enough to make it perfectly safe.

AT BOON ISLAND.

Capt. James Burke, assistant keeper of Boon island light station, accompanied by his daughter went to the island on Thursday in the steamer Clara Batemen, taking out with him his winter stores. Capt. Burke had for more than a week past been on her return brought in eleven mechanics employed in the lighthouse service, who have been at the island since the latter part of September, making repairs on the buildings, and have for several days been ready to come ashore, but could not get off the island. They report their experience in the November storm to have been the roughest they ever knew during their service under the lighthouse board; aside from the discomforts and positive dangers encountered during the storm, they were unable to procure supplies of food, and had not the lightkeepers generously opened their own stores, would have been obliged to go on short allowance. They are not hankering, as it were, for another autumn job at Boon island.

AT PRESTON'S.

One of the largest and choicest lines of Christmas goods ever displayed for the citizens of Portsmouth, can be found at Preston's drug store in Congress Block. Mr. Preston's taste in selecting goods at any season of the year is always admired. Indeed, summer sojourners at the several resorts about and around us, say they take as much pleasure in making a selection for a present or souvenir at his store as they do at any of the larger establishments at Boston, New York, Philadelphia or Chicago, as they always find a rich and fresh stock of goods.

That this fact is appreciated by our own townspeople is evinced by the very heavy sale of Christmas goods that is going on there, and one has but to look in as he passes by, and note the crowd that requires the constant attention of Mr. Preston's corps of assistants, to be convinced that he keeps a class of goods that attract and satisfy the most fastidious. His selection for the present season includes some elegant Vienna wares in leather and wood; celluloid, rubber and metal toilet sets in rich plush cases of elaborate design; rose-jars, vases, inkstands, vinaigrettes and all descriptions of articles in Dresden, Bohemian, French China and Gobelin wares and a choice line of cloisonne bon-bon boxes. But perhaps the line that is receiving particular praise is the selection of Japanese bronzes, which is without doubt the finest and handsomest ever seen in this city. These wares are in all conceivable shapes, and are sure to be taken up quickly.

A reference to this establishment would not be complete without mentioning "Preston's Cologne," which has come to be a household article as well as word, abroad as well as at home. Hardly a week goes by, that a large quantity of this indispensable toilet article is not sent to some state in the west or south. It has become famous,—through summer visitors, and sons and daughters of Portsmouth who have gone abroad to live. It is prepared from a formula made by the late Wm. R. Preston, in 1838, and is pronounced by everybody to be superior to any other cologne.

This article, and in fact all of Preston's specialties, are put up in a manner distinguished by neatness and a style that commends itself not only to the consumer, but to his competitors in other cities, for it has been copied and imitated in many places.

Annual Meeting of the Maine Central Railroad Company.

The Annual Meeting of the Maine Central Railroad Company was held in Portland yesterday. In his report President Sewall said:

The net results are nearly the same as last year, showing a surplus of nearly $57,000 after payment of all fixed charges, operating expenses and two semi-annual dividends of three per centum each.

Large expenditures have been made for permanent improvements during the fiscal year just ended. The amounts so expended have increased the permanent value of your property, and tend in a large degree to the safe and convenient operation of your road.

The gross receipts for twelve months were $3,389,007.48, and expenses and taxes were $2,199,881.71, leaving as net earnings $1,189,125.77.

Why Men Are Bald.

We have noticed an article going the rounds of the papers which says: "A Poughkeepsie barber says that eight out of ten men are bald nowadays, and he attributes it to food adulteration." It is nothing of the kind. It is the wool hat first worn when Kossuth first came to the United States and which was never fit for any man to put on his head. It is hot and airtight, causes headache and loss of hair. "The "plug hat" is airy and its roof is so high that the action of the sun is not apt to immediately affect the brain. It is the most sensible hat yet invented, unless it be a straw hat for summer.—Idaho Statesman.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

ASSOCIATED PRESS DESPATCHES.

50th CONGRESS.

Second Session.

SENATE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Mr. Chandler presented three additional memorials, numerously signed, from three voting precincts, in Orangeburg county, S. C., alleging denial of the right of voting at the late election, and praying an investigation. Referred.

A resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Teller for the appointment of a committee to investigate the office of the supervising architect of the treasury during the administration of the present supervising architect, and which went over, was taken up.

Mr. Vest moved to amend the resolution by making it include also the administration of the last supervising architect.

Mr. Teller accepted the amendment.

The tariff bill was again considered, and on reaching the cotton schedule, Mr. Vest offered an amendment, which brought about a long discussion regarding the loss of the carrying trade, subsidies to American steamship lines, the competition between England and Germany on manufactured articles, and the labor question as between English and American operatives and miners.

A pitiable picture of the miners in Pennsylvania was drawn by the democrats, by referring to the testimony of one O'Donnell, taken by the Blair committee, in support of their argument.

Mr. Coke quoted from the Cleveland Herald's report on the condition of the collieries of Hazelton, Pa., to the effect that never had there been so much suffering among them as now; that their slavery was complete, and many were sullen and dispirited. In conclusion he said: "This is protection. This is American policy. This is high tariff. This is the policy which is claimed to have had the sanction of the American people at the late election. This policy has never been endorsed by the American people, never will be, and will be fought as long as a sense of justice is left."

Mr. Hawley said: In the savings banks of Connecticut, with a population of 670,000, the deposits amounted to $102,000,000, and most of it was the savings of servants and operatives. Massachusetts had about a proportional amount. These two facts were a most emphatic answer to the senator from Texas. When the Russian Grand Duke passed recently through Connecticut, the train stopped at the station of a manufacturing town, just as the operatives were pouring out of the factories. The grand duke looked at them and asked: "Where are your peasants?" If the senator from Texas would visit Connecticut, he would ask: "Where in the world are your O'Donnells." (Laughter.)

Mr. Hoar denied any such condition as described in O'Donnell's testimony. It was not the true picture of the working people of New England. The operatives of Lowell he said could buy Lowell, and the working people of Worcester could buy Worcester, with all their factories and capital in them. The stuff the senator from Texas talked of and read was arrant nonsense. If he went before a Fall River or a Worcester audience of democrats and undertook to make such a speech he would be received with a universal guffaw.

The bill went over without action on Mr. Vest's amendment, and the senate proceeded to executive business, and adjourned until Wednesday, Jan. 2.

HOUSE.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—A resolution was adopted requesting from the president information touching upon affairs in Madagascar.

The House then went into committee of the whole on the Nicaragua canal bill, Mr. Spinola's amendment limiting the capital stock to $100,000,000 was rejected, also Mr. Stockdale's amendment providing that none of the concessions of the Nicaragua government could be changed without the consent of the United States. An amendment was adopted providing that all the bond and stock certificates shall be issued at the principal office in New York, also one providing that all shares, bonds, certificates and other evidence of indebtedness be paid for into the company's treasury and used for corporate purposes; and another providing that the directors shall be citizens of the United States, or of Nicaragua and a majority of them citizens and residents of the United States.

Mr. Otis of Alabama supported the bill in a speech, during which he said he did not think the enterprise would involve this country in foreign war. While he would not welcome war at any time, he was not sure that if the cause of the United States was just, a foreign war would be of detriment to the country. He was apprehensive that nothing would ever completely eradicate sectionalism in this country except a foreign war, and if it had no other beneficial result, such a war would be worth the outlay.

Mr. Herbert of Alabama coincided with these views, and said a foreign war might prove a great blessing to the people of the United States. If the United States could have a war in which its cause was just, the union of those who fought on different sides during the late civil war must tend to bring together the people of the whole country. He was afraid that unless this country had a war with some foreign nation in which the people of the south could demonstrate upon the field their loyalty to their government, the late war would never be forgotten by the north.

Some further discussion of the bill followed and the committee rose. The previous question was ordered on the bill and amendments, and the house adjourned until Jan. 2.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Report of a Plot to Assassinate Gen. Harrison a Pure Fabrication.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 21.—The sensational report of the discovery of a plot to assassinate President-elect Harrison, created great indignation among Gen. Harrison's many warm friends. At Harrison's household the story is unhesitatingly declared a pure fabrication. No one in the city can be found who ever heard of the alleged attempt upon Gen. Harrison's life, nor had any thought of such possibility seriously engaged the consideration of any of the general's friends, so far as diligent inquiry can ascertain.

York Building Association.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle,

BIDDEFORD, ME., Dec. 21.—Biddeford citizens met tonight and organized the "York Loan and Building Association," with the following temporary officers: President, George R. Andrews; Vice President, James A. Strout; Secretary, Gorham N. Weymouth; Treasurer, Dr. Charles E. Hussey. A board of directors was chosen, and a committee appointed to take charge of preliminaries and make application to the bank examiner for a charter.

Two Tons of Venison Invoiced as Empty Bottles, Seized by a Game Warden at Bangor.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BANGOR, ME., Dec. 21.—State Detective Allen, who is also a state fish and game warden, made today the biggest seizure of game being shipped contrary to law, ever made. It consisted of thirteen barrels and thirteen cases, invoiced as empty bottles, and consigned to Hamilton Campbell, wholesale liquor dealer at 216 Commercial street, Boston. An investigation of the car, which was billed from Ellsworth to Boston, showed that all of the packages contained saddles of venison, amounting to more than two tons, packed in hay with a few bottles on the outside to complete the deception by their rattling. The venison was seized, and the shippers, who are known to the warden, will be dealt with according to law.

WELL ORGANIZED FIRE-BUGS.

Belief in Their Existence Developed at a Murder Trial.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 21.—Max Goldberger, whose second-hand clothing store on South street was burned April 12th, who has been on trial four days for the murder of Mrs. Annie Schultzgerg, who lost her life in attempting to escape from the building, was tonight found guilty of murder in the second degree. The evidence developed affords ground for the belief that there exists in the city of New York, Boston and perhaps other cities, well organized fire-bugs who furnish men and means for the burning of the property of any one who wishes to realize insurance.

Senator Chandler Introduces a Bill to Investigate Elections.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21. — Senator Chandler today introduced the bill recently proposed in the House making it a crime against the United States, punishable with severe penalty, for any person to offer or receive a bribe for a vote at any presidential or congressional election, and also offered an amendment to Senator Gibson's substitute for his original resolution introduced yesterday, proposing that all elections in Louisiana and Rhode Island in the past year be investigated, instead of national elections only, and that New York and Indiana be stricken out, so that the committee be not restricted to any particular state or states in its inquiry and that the investigation be made by the committee on privileges and elections.

Dividends Reduced.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—The directors of the St. Paul & Omaha railroad today reduced the dividend on the preferred stock from three to one per cent for the six months ending Dec. 31st. The dividend paid by the road for some years has been six and seven per cent per annum.

EXCITING SCENE IN THE COMMONS.

Balfour Called a Coward. His Assailant Suspended.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—In the Commons today, in committee on the appropriation bill, Gorst in chair, Dr. Tanner offered an amendment opposing the grant of 300 pounds to Capt. Seagrave, Irish resident magistrate. Gorst ruled the amendment out of order, as the grant had already passed the committee stage, and had been approved by the House. Dr. Clark, Mr. Caldwell and Tanner proposed amendments to various parts of the bill. Gorst ruled all out of order, and Dr. Tanner excitedly protested against the chairman's ruling, and said: "When we are here in committee of supply, appropriating money to a swindler, thief and servant of the Irish Secretary, Mr. Balfour ought to be here, and not be such a coward as he is." Gorst ordered Tanner to resume his seat and withdraw the word "coward." Tanner retorted, "I call him both a coward and a liar." Goschen moved that Tanner be suspended, to which the House agreed without division. Tanner left the Chamber.

DAYS SERENE

Original illustrations by MARGARET MACDONALD PULLMAN. Engraved on wood by GEORGE T. ANDREW, and printed under his direction. Royal oblong quarto, emblematic cover, twenty six full-page original illustrations, full gilt, size 10¾x11¾. Cloth, $5; Turkey morocco, $12.50; tree calf, $12.50; English seal style, $9.

The elegance of the volume consists not only in its art and poetry but in the richness and refinement of its setting. Gray covers opening upon a firm binding and ornamented with silver lettering, picked out with black, and with a white band thickly strewn with silver field daisies. The pages are of heavy cream tinted paper and gilt edges. Every other page holds a happy scene from nature interpreted by Lowell, Whittier, Marquand and other poets. Field flowers, glimpses of woods and meadows and other country views are engraved on wood with peculiar softness, so that the haze and visionary tints of quiet days seem to pervade the book.—Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, DEC. 22, 1888.

President Cleveland's action in selecting for appointment as district attorney at Indianapolis the man who had been foremost in slandering Gen. Harrison during the campaign, and whose course brought down upon him the contempt of the better class of democrats in Indiana, is regarded in some quarters as indicating a vindictive spirit toward his successful competitor. The President evidently feels very keenly his defeat, and his nomination of a man who is a notorious political liar, as the United States District Attorney at Gen. Harrison's home, cannot be regarded otherwise than as a direct endorsement of the slanders upon the latter. It is comforting to know that the nomination will not be confirmed.

The Cape Ann Breeze, of Gloucester, Mass., sympathetically remarks: There is no man living who fails to sympathize with General Greely and rejoice that his Arctic sufferings are over, but his most sympathizing friend will hardly countenance his attempting to argue against the unsurmountable fact that that a storm which strewed the New England coast with wrecks and swept over the land like a cyclone was announced to the public by the weather bureau as "fair, followed by showers." If "fair" in the weather vocabulary means a hurricane, and "showers" a deluge, the American public ought to be so informed.

The Amesbury (Mass.) Publishing company, in lieu of a regular Christmas issue of their daily paper, have reproduced a perfect fac-simile of the Vicksburg Daily Citizen, which was printed on wall paper, just before the surrender of Vicksburg to the Union forces under Gen. Grant, on the 4th of July, 1864.

A London physician says that no two lives are alike. One man must be temperate and steady to live fifty years, while another may be ever so reckless and live to be eighty. Whiskey kills some, and adds years to the life of others. This will be good news for the topers.

A New Picture Periodical.

The Holiday Number of "Sun and Shade," the New Art Journal of the Photographic World, presents a number of notable plates of children in painting and photography, and is a most interesting tribute to the season. Among its pictures are reproductions of the "Madonna della Sedia" of Raphael; of a religious painting by Phil. R. Morris, R. A., "The Shadow of the Cross;" one of J. G. Brown's famous children, a boy blowing bubbles; a delightful little panel picture, of "Flirtation" between a Japanese and an American doll, painted by C. D. Weldon—all in photo-gravure. Two other charming pictures of children's games follow, by Tito and John Morgan. Direct photography contributes two remarkable plates, a child statuette, from real life, and a beautiful plate in colors of a child's head by Rockwood, the latter a very novel and successful bit of color printing which has attracted much notice.

All these plates are printed on the finest quality of plate paper, 11x14 inches, and many of them are worthy of being framed.

Published by the Photo-Gravure Co., 853 Broadway, Union Square, New York, and mailed for fifty cents.

A recount of the votes cast for senator in the Merrimack district was held on Thursday, at the office of the secretary of state at Concord on the demand of Geo. L. Brown, the democratic candidate. For purposes of comparison we give the following figures:

CLERK'S RETURN—

Whole number of votes cast,	3300
Necessary to a choice,	1501
Scattering,	4
Benjamin C. Flanders, p.,	86
John C. Pearson, r.,	1617
George L. Brown, d.,	1593

RECOUNT—

Whole number of votes cast,	3300
Necessary to a choice,	1901
Scattering,	5
Benjamin C. Flanders, p.,	85
John C. Pearson, r.,	1607
George L. Brown, d.,	1603

The discrepancy was discovered in the count of Dunbarton, where ten republican tickets with Brown stickers, had been counted for Pearson. After the recount above tabulated and agreed to by both candidates, Mr. Pearson desired to have his protest recorded, "that the ballots of the town of Dunbarton have been tampered with since the declaration was made in open town meeting by the moderator of said town."

A smiling young lady seated at a piano in a large show window on State street attracted crowds last week. She was pretty enough to catch the masculine eye and sufficiently well dressed to hold the feminine critics. But, despite the constant scrutiny of the ever-changing crowd, the young lady never altered her position. The smile that parted her lips did not change; her fingers, raised an inch above the piano, never struck them once—all for the best of reasons. She wasn't a real young lady—though she looked it especially in the gaslight—but only a wax one. A young man curious to know something of the method of her construction climbed up to the top story of the Eden Musee in company with the superintendent, emerging into a small room in the rear of the building. Two or three men were at work; one stirring a steaming mixture in an iron pot over an oil stove, another daubing plaster over a mold. Headless corpses were everywhere. They stood on platforms, underneath tables, and in corners. In a small ante-room a whole collection was piled up. The limbs of some were contorted and bent as though in awful agony. The active young superintendent opened boxes and cupboards and drew out heads of men and women, old and young, beautiful and ugly, some without eyes or hair, others looking startlingly real. From another set of drawers he pulled dozens of hands and laid them beside the heads.

"There," said he, "are all the parts of an image which are made out of wax. There is no such thing as a wax figure. The figures—the torsos—are made out of papier mache. A wax torso even when it is lined with an iron framework does not give a satisfactory effect. The process of making the papier mache bodies is precisely that of the heads and hands."

"And what is that?"

"A work that requires seven persons to complete. The first step is to make a miniature model in clay of the figure or group that is to be represented. From it we get some idea of the effect. When all details are decided upon the sculptor models the figure lifesize in clay, the same as would be done if it were to be chiseled in marble or cast in bronze. The hands are omitted. They are modeled from life always. Next the molder prepares a plaster paris cast in sections from the model, and into this the wax is poured by the wax-worker. If the result does not satisfy the sculptor the head is remelted. No attempt is ever made to change a head. The mold is simply broken up and a new model made. The head goes next to a woman, who inserts the hair, eyebrows, eyelashes, and beard. A little instrument with two or three sharp needle points is used for this. She works rapidly, more so than any of the others. The sculptor, after the glass eyes are put into the socket, then takes the head and finishes it. Its color is pale pink, and he gives it the tue of the human face and by various means makes its surface look like skin. Meanwhile, the costumer has been at work dressing the torso and the carpenter fixing it upon a pedestal. The head and hands are joined to it and it is ready for exhibition."

"How long does all this take?"

"It depends upon the sculptor entirely. Figures nowadays are mostly portraits, and in modeling one, especially of a contemporary individual, the sculptor is likely to make half a dozen models before the correct one is hit. The figure of Thurman, for instance, required a great deal of preliminary study. The sculptor had to see him several times, to observe most closely various details, such as the expression of his face in varying moods, the size of his head, color of his eyes—can any man tell the color of his nearest friend's eyes?—the way his hair was arranged, his weight, carriage, etc. Little details, such as the ear, occupy the artist a day sometimes. He cannot be hurried. Sometimes two weeks is required to model a single figure. No sculptors rarely model direct from life, except in the case of the hands, although instances are known of their having done so. They prefer a photograph and rely upon their memories for details in making a head. But they always mold hands from life. No artist in the world can exactly represent that wonderful human member, with all its thousand lines, creases, and its expressions—for the hands have expressions. Figures cost as high as $300. The hair on the head of the figure of Mrs. Langtry cost $75. Hair is always an important and expensive item. So is the costume."—Chicago Tribune.

Limits in Stature.

Ancient writers have mentioned giants exceeding ten and even twelve feet in height, but these accounts have doubtless been exaggerated, and it is a matter of question whether any of these individuals have exceeded in stature the giant Winckeimeler of the present time, and who is eight and one-half feet in height. Dwarfs of sixteen and even twelve inches are among the records of human existence, but these diminutive creatures were either immature or ill-formed. A noted instance of a small yet perfectly-developed dwarf was the celebrated Borulawsky, of twenty-nine inches height, who died in 1827 aged about 40.

High-Priced Hair.

A human hair market is held every fortnight at Morlans, in the Pyrenees. Hair dealers flock hither from all parts of the continent to buy the hair of the peasant girls, who get from three to 20 francs by the sale of their locks. The most valuable colors are pure white and virgin gold the former being worth nearly 500 francs an ounce, while it is said the Empress Eugenie once gave 1,000 francs an ounce for a braid of golden hair that exactly matched her own. Let ladies who are possessed of this lovely hair of the color of "ripe corn" be careful of it; they will find it difficult to repair the ravages of time, for we are told there are orders for all the golden hair that can be found for five years to come. It is also interesting to know that ladies possessed of fine hair often carry from fifty to seventy miles of it on their heads. No wonder that they sometimes suffer from headache from the weight of their tresses.—London Letter.

THE SKEENA Indians are described as of low stature and degraded morals. They are all heathens and sturdily refuse to embrace Christianity. They are wild and lawless, with no more notion of fairness than a wolf, whose character they exactly parallel, inasmuch as when they come to the store alone they are almost vexatiously meek and lowly, but when they collect in numbers they are loud-mouthed and menacing. Their faces consist mainly of mouth and cheek-bones, with small flat noses.

The Sun.

FOR 1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

JAMES E. TEATON & CO., 25 Congress St.

We passed our honeymoon with her husband's absence in India: a liberal salary will be given, with every home comfort, to any one suitable. Apply personally, if possible, at No. 26a Upper Berkeley st., W.

Of the legions that applied I cannot attempt a detailed description. By the afternoon I was thoroughly exhausted and had made up my mind to see no more, when, just as it was getting dusk, my servant came up to the drawing-room and informed me that such a nice-looking young lady was in the dining-room; quite the nicest that had been yet.

"Ask her to come up-stairs, then, Ellis; but do not admit any one else," I replied; and the next minute the drawing-room door was thrown open by Ellis, and "Miss Burke" announced.

She was dressed in mourning, and, even in the dim light, was, I could see, a pale-faced, rather handsome girl of about four-and-twenty.

Nothing could be more satisfactory than her letters of reference, and after reading them carefully by the light of the fire, I raised my eyes toward my visitor, whom I found regarding me in the most eager manner imaginable.

"They are most kind letters," I said, "and as far as references go, I am sure I could not do better. Your duties would be very light—it is really only for the sake of companionship that I require any one, as I do everything for myself, but I have been very lonely since my husband went away."

"I can imagine it," responded Miss Burke, sympathizingly. "I should do my utmost to cheer you."

"You are very kind to say so," I answered.

"Should we agree as to terms, when could you come?"

"Tomorrow, if you permit me," replied Miss Burke. "I am in lodgings, and the expense is so great, I should only be too glad to give them up—I am very poor," she added in a low tone.

A fortnight slipped quietly away, and in my weekly budget to my husband I gave most charming accounts of my companion, which our everyday intercourse seemed fully to confirm. But about the third week a something I could not explain made me take a dislike to her. I had not been very well, and her kindness had been incomMitting; consequently, I felt almost angry with myself for indulging in a feeling which I could not help acknowledging was both unreasonable and childish.

But it gained ground in spite of myself; and one night as I was standing by the looking-glass in my bed-room, which was in the shadow, I caught sight of Miss Burke, who was leaning on the mantle-piece in the full light of the gas, which burned on either side of it, regarding me with a steady and searching glance, which I instantly observed, but had sufficient sense to take no notice of. The expression in her large black eyes haunted me for days, and caused me to say good-night to her on the landing, and, in addition, to lock my door, a precaution I had never before thought of taking.

One night shortly afterward I awoke, fancying I heard a movement outside the door. My room was perfectly dark, and I was convinced some noise had suddenly awakened me. I listened intently, almost too terrified to breathe, until I heard most distinctly the handle of my door cautiously turned. An almost death-like horror seized me, and for an instant I was absolutely rigid with terror; but the spell was broken by another audible effort to open the door and the hall clock striking 3, which made me spring up in bed, seize the matches and, with trembling fingers, attempt two or three times to strike a light. At last I was successful, and the welcome blaze of the gas which I lit gave me courage to call out boldly, "Who is there?" But no answer came. I pealed my bell vigorously, and in a few minutes I heard steps approaching, and Ellis' welcome voice asked if I were ill.

"No, Ellis, not ill," I said, "but terrified," as I unlocked the door and admitted her. "Some one tried my door not five minutes ago."

"Tried your door, ma'am? surely not!" ejaculated Ellis.

Ellis had been with me ever since my marriage, now three years, and had been well known to my husband's family all her life, consequently I felt I might trust her, so I said, "Ellis, I have my own suspicions; but we must do nothing until we are sure. Meanwhile you must have a bed made up in this room, and we must watch—"

"Miss Burke?" whispered Ellis.

"Yes," I replied; "it was she who tried my door."

Tired and unnerved, I met Miss Burke at breakfast, and we spent our morning in a very silent fashion. I wrote to my husband while she walked restlessly about the drawing-room, constantly asking me how I was, an inquiry for which I did not feel so grateful as I might have done under other circumstances. Lunch came and afterward Miss Burke, who was usually most unwilling to go out, asked me if I could spare her for the afternoon, as she wanted to go and see a sick friend.

"Certainly," I replied glad to get rid of her. About 4 o'clock I lay down on the sofa in the inner drawing-room, and must have fallen asleep, for I heard no one come into the room, but I awoke with the consciousness that some one was leaning over me with their face in close proximity to my own. I felt rather than saw them; so close were they to me that their lips seemed almost touching my own, and as I sprang up I came into violent collision with—my companion.

"I was afraid you were ill, dear Mrs. Conyers. I do hope I have not displeased you," she proceeded in a deprecating tone. "I did not mean to offend you."

"It is of no consequence," I answered, rising from the sofa; "but please do not do so again. I am nervous and easily startled."

The circumstance was then tacitly dismissed, and we got through the evening pretty fairly. I rather looked forward to a safe night, for I knew Ellis' bed was in readiness for her: so I said good night a little earlier than usual. Nothing happened to alarm us, and next morning, in a subdued and anxious voice, Miss Burke hoped I had not been disturbed, and that Ellis had kept me from feeling nervous—this last remark very reproachfully.

About 12 o'clock, when we were sitting in the drawing-room, Ellis came up and told me that a gentleman wanted to see me on business, but would not give his name. "Probably about some subscription," I observed; "perhaps I had better see what he wants."

Without a suspicion of what awaited me, I went down stairs, and on entering the dining-room encountered a short and rather red-faced man, who, bowing profoundly, asked if I was Mrs. Conyers. On my replying in the affirmative he continued: "May I ask what establishment you have?"

I must have looked astonished, as he

"Indeed!" I ejaculated; "in what way?"

"From information I have received I believe you have a person under your roof who is wanted on a very serious charge. I must ask your permission to summon every one in the house into this room. I have taken precautions to prevent any one leaving it, and if you will kindly accede to my request I shall get over a painful duty as quickly as possible."

If my lips had been capable of utterance, the words they would have framed would have been "Miss Burke," but I said nothing. I merely rang the bell, which Ellis answered so promptly I felt certain she must have been behind the door, ready to protect me in case of an emergency.

"Summon the servants, Ellis," I said; "and—ask Miss Burke to come down stairs." It was almost like a dream to me, seeing my four domestics walk in; and then—suspecting nothing—came Miss Burke.

"Got you at last, sir!" cried the detective, making an agile dart toward my companion.

"Not without some trouble," coolly responded his prisoner, whose courage was apparently quite equal to the occasion. In my wildest moments I had never dreamed of so desperate a denouement, and the discovery perfectly paralyzed me with horror. It was too dreadful to realize that I had harbored a wretch of a man in woman's clothing not only in my house, but in the capacity of my companion! In less time than I can describe it in the detective and his prisoner had departed. It was quietly and quickly managed, and though a detailed account of it did appear in the papers, my name was, happily for me, not allowed to transpire publicly.

The pseudo Miss Burke turned out to be a notorious young man, or I may say lad, named Browning, who, having embezzled large sums, as well as stolen a quantity of magnificent jewelry, had been unable, owing to the precautions taken to prevent his doing so, to leave London or to dispose of his stolen property. Through the agency of a female friend he had adopted his disguise, and my unlucky advertisement had suggested to him the idea of insuring his own safety, should I be credulous enough to take him upon the recommendations, which, I need hardly say, had emanated from his own pen. Not only had he thought of his personal security, but that of his stolen goods, which, in the shape of diamonds and bank-notes, were found securely stowed away in the little black box which I had thought contained the worldly possessions of my poverty-stricken companion. — New York Evening World.

A Plain, Modest Man.

I ask not the wealth of a Gould nor an Astor,
A Vanderbilt, Rothschild, a Cœsus, or Sage;
But still I would shun a financial disaster
Not live in the style of an obsolete age.
Oh, I long not for wealth and its cringing attendance,
Two millions, I think, is sufficient for me.

The barons of England of prodigal bounty—
Rock vassals attend on their slightest behest—
Though they live in a castle and own the country,
Excite not an envious pang in my breast.
But sometimes I hope my well-ballasted dream ships
Will come sailing over the mystical sea,
Then four or five railroads and a good lot of steamships,

Oh, I ask not a throne, nor a crown, nor a sceptre;
For the crown might get lost and the sceptre misplaid,
Though Victoria Guelph I acknowledge has kept her
Job a long time and her salary paid.
My modest ambition will not be a rover,
Nor sight for the dials me over the sea;
But could I get the job that is now done by Grover
Cleveland, I think it would satisfy me.
—Yankee Blade.

It is asserted in a London paper that the discovery made by Mr. Hewett in the artificial manufacture of quinine will result in the reduction of the price of that article to a few cents per pound. The importance of this discovery is rendered greater by the fact that, while hitherto dependence has been on the cultivation of the cinchona tree for quinine, the bark yielding only about 2 per cent of the same, the new process admits of the substance being produced without limit from an article which can always be got in abundance in part of the world.

A missionary who settled in the Province of Sz-Chuan, Central China, and visited the great Buddhist peak, Mount Omei, describes the temples as still showing many wonderful works of art, notwithstanding conflagrations, devastating wars and rebellions. Near the foot of the mountain is a pagoda of bronze, thirty feet high, in fifteen stories, covered with an immense number of figures delicately cast. Of figures of Buddha there are no less than 4,700, some of which have bee mutilated by collectors of relics.

American capital and enterprise have taken such hold in the development of Mexico that a New York syndicate will in February open a bank in the City of Mexico with a capital of $3,500,000. It will be called the International and Mortgage Bank of Mexico. This is an important step if directed aright. What is chiefly wanted now is a live, enterprising banker from the United States at its head, who will keep the institution in the line of American ideas and influence, and out of European influences, which are stoutly opposed to the entrance of their rivals into the banking business of this Southern republic.

It will surprise some, perhaps, to learn that the French stage but a few years ago, was a Puritan on the question of kissing. In M. Legouve's recently published life of Delaunay, the jeune premier par excellence of the Theatre Francias, we learn that in the first production of De Musset's "On ne Badine pas avec l'Amour" several scenes were cut out on the ground of being too free. For example, the scene where Perdican says to a peasant girl, "I respect your smile," and gives her kiss, she says, "You respect my smile, but you don't respect my lips." This was considered inadmissable. But when Delaunay came to London he played the piece as it was written, for the first time, and on its revival at the Francias he repeated his London rendering with success, although the critics objected a little. On the tenth night of the revival there was rather an amusing scene. Just at the critical moment Mlle. Dubois whispered to Delaunay, "Don't kiss me on the lips, for I see my lover in the stalls."

Davia Wingrove, a marble-worker of Baltimore, not long since found a valuable diamond imbedded in a big block of Italian marble, and had the gem set without cutting in a heavy gold ring. Lapidaries say that though such finds are unusual, this is by no means the first on record.

Massasoit Tribe, No. 16, Improved Order of Red Men, held a special council Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock, when the Hunter's degree was conferred on two newly adopted members. This tribe, now numbering nearly 200 members, is in an active and flourishing condition, and applications for membership from pale faces are being constantly received. Very little sickness has existed among the tribe, and what few cases there have been have received their benefits promptly. Only one death has occurred since the formation of the tribe, that of Henry T. Whitehouse, who was murdered in May last. Grand Sachem W. H. Nute, who was to have made his official visit to the tribe on the 31st Sun, has deferred it until some time later. There was a large attendance at the council on Friday evening, and a good time was had, as usual.

WHERE THEY BUY THEIR PRESENTS.

The streets are full, now-a-days, of people on shopping tours, in search of the article which is quite appropriate for a Christmas present, and not a few stop and enter the store of Benj. Green on Market square. And when they come out they have an extra package in their hands, for they were sure to find "just the thing" they were looking for. Our friend Green has his store,—for so many years the business place of our esteemed fellow citizen Capt. Joseph H. Thatcher, now retired,—well stocked with a beautiful line of toilet sets, rose-jars, pungents, perfumery bottles, etc. He also is prepared to respond to all demands for exquite toilet soap and perfumes.

Mr. Green has recently accepted the agency for Lowney's confectionery, which is received in fresh consignments every day or two. These candies are among the best and purest made, and can be obtained in fancy boxes or by the pound.

A fine line of cigars can always be found at this corner drug store; and at this particular season, holiday packages containing twenty-five or fifty cigars are offered at prices varying according to the grade of goods.

Or if your taste suggests something in the line of jewelry or silver ware, you have only to call at the next store, that of J. H. Hutchinson, who always carries all the latest designs in such goods. His windows have attracted universal attention for a couple of weeks, and he is ever delighted to show the pretty things in gold, silver, and precious stones. Such articles as you will find in his carefully selected stock, are always appropriate for holiday gifts, and are certain to give pleasure to the recipient. No finer goods are to be found in the state, than these offered by Hutchinson.

THEY SETTLED IT.

There was quite an interesting affair—interesting to the parties immediatly concerned, and to the spectators—took place on Portsmouth bridge on a recent afternoon, near the Noble's island end of the bridge. Two well known and respected young men of York, Me., met there, one coming toward this city, and the other homeward-bound in a team. They apparently had some old grudge to settle, and the man in the team got out to have a physical test with the other young fellow. The homeward-bound man, who had passed some time in this city, had something the matter with him, and was hardly able to stand alone without any opposition to his so doing; the other seemed to be in better condition, but there must have been something wrong to cause him to make of himself the show he did. The latter, as soon as business opened, slammed the homeward-bounder down on the bridge; dragged him across the roadway, and slammed him down some more; shook him, cuffed him, and otherwise made things interesting for him until Mr. McIntire, the toll-taker, appeared on the scene as referee. The victor assisted the vanquished into his team, picked up his hat, put it on his head and jammed it down over his eyes, shook hands with him, and peace at once set in. The spectators of the contest, including a lady and gentleman on their way home to York in one team, a gentleman in another team, a couple of young ladies walking home to Kittery, and half a dozen masculine pedestrians, were more edified by the ending of the "fight" than by its progress.

ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE.

In Newington, about five o'clock last Thursday afternoon, Mr. Elias Smith, aged eighty years, attempted suicide by cutting his throat with a jack-knife on a hay-loft in the barn of Mrs. A. J. Cole, with whom he was boarding, and then threw himself from the haymow to the barn floor, where he was found helpless. Dr. Berry of this city was called, and thinks he will recover.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

Between two and three o'clock Fridry afternoon, as a team belonging to Mr. J. L. O. Coleman, and containing two boys, was passing under the Creek bridge, the horse took fright from the cars, and ran away. The boys were soon thrown out, but were not hurt, The horse kept on down street to Market square, and on turning into Market street struck a carriage standing in front of Hill's drug store and overturned it. In this carriage were two ladies, Mrs. Byron Dame and Mrs. George Dame, whose respective husbands, contractors, of Epping, are engaged in building the new church at Rye Centre. Both ladies were severely shaken up and somewhat bruised, and Mrs. Bryan Dame had one hand badly cut; the other lady it is feared sustained an injury to the spine. They were taken into a neighboring store and attended by Dr. Parsons, and later were sent to Rye in a hack by Mr. Coleman, who rendered every attention possible. Both the carriages were considerably damaged.

MATRIMONIAL.

Dr. Frank L. Benedict of this city was married on Thursday afternoon in the Church of the Transfiguration in New York city, to Miss Hamlin of that city. The happy couple arrived here yesterday afternoon at 5:20 and went immediately to their beautiful apartments at the Rockingham, where they received a right royal welcome. The Doctor's friends in the hotel left nothing undone to make his rooms look lovely, and he and his fair bride were fairly overcome with surprise and delight upon entering them. The many beautiful presents were tastily arranged, while in every available space and corner were vases of fragrant flowers to add beauty and sweetness to the surroundings. The CHRONICLE joins their many friends in extending most hearty congratulations and wishing them a very happy married life.

COURT ROCKINGHAM ELECTION.

The annual election of officers of Court Rockingham, No. 7539, Order of Foresters, was held in G. A. R. hall on Thursday evening. The election resulted in the choice of the following: John Griffin, C. R.; Richard T. Call, S. R.; D. J. Carroll, F. S.; Mortimor L. Raynes, R. S.; William Conlon, Treas.; M. J. Leary, S. B.; Herbert Call, J. B.; Albert King, S. W.; James McCaffery, J. W.; Dr. John J. Berry, C. P.; Trustees, John Holland, Joseph Conlon, Jacob Chandler.

One of the pleasant events of the evening was the visit to the Court of Thomas C. Harrold, D. P. C. R., of Court Concord, who made remarks that were particularly interesting to the members of the order.

Afterward the Court voted to extend an invitation to Mr. Harrold to be present and install the newly-elected officers at the installation in January.

A rough looking customer calling himself William Ferguson accosted an old gentleman on Vaughan street, Thursday evening, and demanded a quarter to get liquor with; being refused he assaulted the old man, and was taken in by the police. On Friday he was held for the Supreme court on a charge of being a tramp. Lying in jail until next April, and then resting in the state prison for fifteen months or so, will have a tendency to moderate his ardor the next time he solicits whiskey money from strangers.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

What is Catarrh

One of the most common diseases, and one of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It begins with a cold, or mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

STEAMER BURNED ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

TERRIBLE LOSS OF LIFE.

Commendable Coolness and Bravery of the Officers.

FULL AND INTERESTING ACCOUNT.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Dec. 23.—The elegant passenger steamer Kate Adams, running as a semi-weekly packet between Memphis and Arkansas City, was burned this morning near Commerce, Miss., 40 miles south of this city, and about 25 lives were lost. She was en route to Memphis, and had about 200 passengers aboard, including the deck and cabin crew of 80, 25 cabin and 60 deck passengers, besides 25 colored cabin passengers. The fire caught in some cotton near the forward end of the boilers, and was discovered about eight o'clock. The passengers were at breakfast, and all made a rush for the forward deck. The steamer was about 300 yards from the Mississippi side of the river, and the boat was at once headed for the shore. Pilot J. A. Barton was on watch, and remained heroically at his post until she was safely landed. Harry Best, second clerk, was seated at the table when the alarm was given. He brought all the ladies and children forward and assisted them ashore. Captain Mark Cheek, who was on the hurricane deck, remained there giving commands until the stage plank was safely lowered. The fire by this time had spread all through the cabin, and he was compelled to retreat to the rear. He climbed over the rails and descended to the cabin. Here he found the chief clerk, W. C. Blanker, who had made an effort to save the money and papers of the steamer which were in the safe. He managed to grab the money but was cut off from the bow and forced back into the cabin; as he was groping his way back he stumbled and fell over some chairs and lost all the valuables. With great difficulty he succeeded in reaching the rear through blinding smoke and flames. Captain Cheek seized a life preserver, and placing it on Chief Clerk Blanker helped him overboard into the water. He floated down the river about three miles before he was rescued by parties who walked ashore and followed him down the river Captain Cheek assisted several others in securing life preservers, and when no longer possible for him to remain without being burned, he too jumped into the river and swam to the shore.

There were about 25 colored cabin passengers who were saved with the white passengers. On the lower deck, however, a fearful panic seized the crew and deck passengers. Those cut off from escape from the bow were compelled to jump overboard to escape from the flames. The stern had swung out into the river, and an effort was made to launch the yawl, but it was capsized by the crowd which filled it, and many of its occupants were drowned. The burning steamer drifted away after laying at the bank 20 minutes and floated down river, her hull sinking at the head of St. Peter's island, four miles from Commerce. The Kate Adams was owned by the Memphis & Vicksburg Packet Co., of which Major John D. Adams of Little Rock is President. She was built by James Rees & Sons of Pittsburg, in 1882, at a cost of $102,000. She was the finest and fastest steamer of her type on the Mississippi. Her owners this summer spent $20,000 in repairing her at Paducah, and she was insured for $33,750.

Many of the passengers and crew lost all their clothing, and made their escape to the shore on dishabille, but were provided with clothing by the citizens of Commerce. The water was very cold, and many deaths are attributed to this fact.

All speak in the highest terms of the coolness and bravery displayed by the officers, all of whom remained at their posts until the last, and it was through their efforts and courage that all the lady passengers were safely taken ashore.

It is impossible to definitely ascertain how many lives were really lost, but conservative estimates place the number at not less than 35, and it may possibly reach 50.

Foul Play Suspected.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

FARMINGTON, ME., Dec. 23.—H. S. Houghton, who keeps a hardware store in Wilton, locked up last night about ten o'clock and started for home. Soon after, he was found lying in a pool of his own blood in the road near his house, insensible, and in which condition he has remained since. There are indications of foul play, as the keys to the store and safe and other articles which were in his pockets are missing. A suspicious character was noticed about the town in the afternoon and the officers are now on his track.

LATER.—Reports state that Houghton is a raving maniac this evening. Wilton is greatly excited over the affair, as Houghton is one of the leading business men of the town and is highly respected.

A Western Horror.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MADISON, WIS., Dec. 23.—Two men fishing in Sugar river, near the little village of Mt. Vernon, about 20 miles from here, on Friday, found a bag containing the head and other remains of a human body sunk in the river. The head was identified as that of William Crist, a young man who had been employed as a cheese maker in the village factory. Investigation resulted in the strongest circumstantial evidence pointing to Joseph Davidson, a cheese maker, as the murderer. Crist lived with the latter, and the motive for the crime was probably to get possession of $400 which the murdered man had in his possession.

An Entire Town Destroyed by Fire.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MENOMINE, MICH., Dec. 23.—The town of Hermansville in the upper peninsula, 47 miles north of here, has been entirely destroyed by fire. Hermansville was a lumbering settlement at the crossing of the Menomine division of the Chicago & Northwestern, and Sault Ste Marie Short line railroads. It had a population of 400. The fire originated in a large saw mill owned by the Wisconsin Land & Lumber Co. The loss will approximate $250,000. Insurance light. There will be great suffering among the homeless people.

Demolished Houses half a Mile Away.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BRADFORD, PA., Dec. 23.—Three nitro glycerine magazines near here blew up last night, smashing all the glass in the neighborhood, and demolishing houses half a mile distant. Nine persons were injured, two fatally.

Where Were the Watchers!

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ROCKVILLE, CONN., Dec. 23.—The reported attempt of Martha Johnson to commit suicide in Tolland jail Saturday, is considered merely a sham by the officials watching her at the time. Her actions indicated no real intention of hanging herself. She will be taken probably to the state prison tomorrow for a life imprisonment.

Struck It Rich.

MARQUETTE, MICH., Dec. 23.—Free gold was struck Saturday in a shaft on the Superior gold property at a depth of 30 feet. This mine adjoins the celebrated Michigan mine on the east. The stock of the company is booming.

Columbia College Rowdies.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK Dec. 23.—Five Columbia college students were arrested last night for creating a disturbance at the Bijou theatre and annoying people on the street by their rough actions. They were fined $10 each in the police court. There was a party of about 300 students at the theatre, and they were disorderly and the police had to interfere after the performance to enable other persons in the audience to get out of the lobby of the theatre without danger.

An Ex-Congressman Passes Away.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

UTICA, N. Y., Dec. 23.—Ex-Congressman J. Thomas Spriggs died at his residence in this city this morning from apoplexy. Mr. Spriggs was born in Northamptonshire, England, April 5th, 1825, and with his father came to America in 1833.

A SAD AFFAIR AT BROOKLYN.

A Young Man Shoots Himself and Wife.

Probably Insane.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 23.—Henry D. Schoonmaker, aged 23, salesman, shot and fatally wounded his wife Edith, aged 22, and then shot himself dead, at their residence, 69 Bond Street, early this morning. Colonel Jonathan D. Schoonmaker, the young man's father, received a note at noon through a district messenger office which bore instructions not to be delivere before 11 o'clock in the morning. The note read, "Mamma and Henry. Come down soon as possible. If you find the doors locked force the front parlor door. Horry." Col. Schoonmaker sent his brother-in-law and Mrs. Schoonmaker to the Bond Street flat. They found the young couple lying in bed in their night clothes and tightly clasped in each other's arms, and covered with blood from three wounds in the woman's head and side, and one wound in young Schoonmaker's temple. The dying woman was taken to the Long Island College Hospital. Col. Schoonmaker says he must have been insane. He held a good position with a prominent house, and his salary had recently been increased. Their domestic life had been very happy, and his wife was a beautiful young women. They left their 14-months old child with her sister Thursday for a few days visit. He can now recall some of his son's actions which had been rather odd, but not enough to excite suspicion.

Railway Disaster in Arizona. Eight Killed.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NOGALES, ARIZ., Dec. 23.—The Arizona & Southeastern railway is being built from a point on the New Mexico & Arizona railway to Bisbee, a Copper Camp. Laborers who boarded at Bisbee Camp were picked up by a construction train every evening. Friday night the train carrying about sixty laborers was running toward the Camp when it jumped the track at a switch, and several cars rolled down the steep embankment. Eight men are reported killed. The dead and wounded were taken to Bisbee where medical attention was given them.

HAYTI.

The Haytien Republican Said to Have Been Delivered to the U. S. Men of War.

Our Action Considered an Abuse of Power Against a Helpless Nation.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

HAVANA, Dec. 23.—Advices received from Hayti to the effect that the dispute over the seizure of the American steamer Haytien Republic has been settled and the steamer has been delivered to the American men-of-war, and the latter honored the American flag with a salute of twenty-one guns. Among the people, the action of the United States government is considered an abuse of power against a helpless nation, and this opinion is said to be shared by some of the foreign diplomatic representatives. General Legitime has been unanimously elected President of the Republic, and is taking energetic steps to repress the revolution.

SUAKIM, Dec. 23.—Arab deserters say there is a strong force of rebels at Handoub, and many of the bodies of the natives killed in the recent fight are being conveyed to that village.

PARIS, Dec. 23.—M. Hude, member of the chamber of deputies for the Department of the Seine, is dead. Ex-Gov. Boulanger will contest for the seat thus made vacant.

THE PHANTOM TRAIN.

The Engineer's Story of How Jack Received Notice of His Death.

"You ask if I have ever had an adventure on the railroad that would be interesting to the readers of The Age. Well, you shall have it, although it is something I would willingly forget; but it seems impossible. Fifteen years ago I was running on the East Tennessee road, between Knoxville and Chattanooga. The scenery between these two points is grand in places, the mountains being in sight nearly the entire distance. I had left Knoxville an hour late one afternoon in November, and at London the telegraph operator handed me an order to make up the lost time, as there was a large southern excursion on board who wanted to make connection at Chattanooga for Atlanta. I had always been ranked as one of the coolest men on the road, as a man who never got excited, and I once ran over a burning trestle without a muscle changing. Yet this afternoon I was strangely nervous. For the first time in my life I discovered I had nerves.

"'Jack,' I said to the fireman, 'I am all in a tremor. I am not superstitious, but I feel as if something was going to happen.'

"Jack burst into a loud guffaw. 'Why, cap'n, you nervous; that is too good,' and he laughed again.

"I said nothing else, but the uncomfortable feeling continued. I did not know it at the time, but I have since found out that even the iron nerves of an engineer must break some time. Jack, in the meantime, was piling up coal in the furnace. 'Cap'n, you are cold,' he remarked after a few minutes' intermission. 'We'll have a better fire, and we'll be in Chattanooga in a jiffy.'

"The grim November twilight hung over the earth like a pall. We had passed Athens, and with only fifty-six miles to go to reach our destination. For the first time since I mounted an engine I longed for the trip. I was looking straight ahead, where the iron bands far down the track seem to unite into a single rail, when I was startled by an exclamation from Jack. 'Cap'n,' he screamed, 'look there! my God, look there!' pointing with trembling hand to the east, where in the distance the mountains loomed up grim and bare in their awful grandeur. The look of horror on the poor fellow's face was indescribable. But the sight I witnessed as I quickly turned my eyes to the east was enough to freeze the warm blood which courses through your veins, for there, above the mountain tops, with a terrible distinctness, sailed a phantom engine drawing a phantom train. The puffs of smoke came regularly from the engine. I could see the glaring headlight, the lights in the coaches, all as plain as if the train was running on the side track by us. I stood there watching the strange sight, too amazed to utter a word, how long I cannot say, but suddenly it disappeared, and I was recalled to myself by several jerks at the bell rope made by the conductor. I looked out and saw that we were at Cleveland.

"'What's the matter with you?' asked the conductor, coming to the engine. 'What do you mean by trying to run by Cleveland that way? Why, man, you look as if you had seen a ghost,' he added after a moment, catching a glimpse of my face. I looked at my watch and saw that it was exactly 6 o'clock. We had made up half an hour, and we pulled into Chattanooga an hour later, only a few minutes behind time. From the time of the appearance of the apparition to the time we pulled into the roundhouse at Chattanooga Jack had not spoken a word, but there was a fixed look on his face I did not like. The affair was not discussed between us. Jack was strangely taciturn, and, to tell the truth, I did not feel inclined to talk about the strange sight seen in the clouds.

"There is not a great deal more to tell. The run to Knoxville the next day was made without anything occuring worthy of comment, but on the return trip to Chattanooga Friday, two days after we had seen the apparition, at 5:57 in the afternoon and two miles east of Cleveland, a wild freight thundered into us. I saw it too late to do any good, but I reversed my engine and then—jumped. I happened to jump on the right side and escaped with a broken finger. But Jack, poor boy, had chosen the wrong side, and the immense locomotive crushed him to a jelly. I believe that the accident happened at the spot where Jack first saw the phantom engine and at the minute, although two days later. Poor Jack, the discoverer of that wonderful sight, the warning was evidently intended for him.

"I did not make another run on that fated line. I asked to be excused from duty pending the investigation made by officials into the accident, and on the day the investigation was concluded and I was exonerated from blame I walked into the superintendent's office and asked for my time.

"'You needn't feel bad about that accident,' remarked the superintendent, kindly.

"'I don't,' I replied, 'but my nerves are shattered and I want to change my location.'

"I saw a smile on the superintendent's face as I mentioned my 'nerves,' but he gave me my time without a word. I spent five years in the Rockies in the vain attempt to drive that picture from my mind. Finally I came back east, but the photographic camera could not fix an object more firmly than did the phantom engine in mountains of Tennessee fix itself in my memory. I am only 45 now, but you can see how gray I am. My hair was not turned white 'in a single night,' as the novelists tell, but in a few months after the occurrence the change was effected, as I used to think and worry over it a good deal, and that, too, when I was only 30 years of age."—Birmingham (Ala.) The Sun.

1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

Portsmouth Chronicle.

MONDAY, DEC. 24, 1888.

In our issue of last Saturday, we referred to the result of a recount of the votes cast for state senator at the late election in the Merrimack district. By referring to the figures in that article it will be seen that there was no choice according to the declaration of the first count, while the recount showed a majority of six votes for Mr. Brown, the democratic candidate. A discrepancy of ten was discovered between the first and second count of the votes of the town of Dunbarton, and after the tabulated statement of the recount had been completed Mr. Pearson, the republican candidate, entered a protest declaring that the ballots of Dunbarton had been tampered with after the first count.

Of course it is impossible to say that such was the fact beyond any doubt, but the statement of Mr. Loren Hadley, who was in the box at Dunbarton on town meeting day, by vote of the meeting, to represent the democratic party, will lead many to consider the suspicion of tampering to be well founded, and that the count as first declared was correct, and that the ten Brown stickers which were found on the ballots in the bundle of straight republican tickets were placed there after town meeting. We print an extract of an interview with Mr. Hadley:

I assisted in sorting and counting the votes. I looked through the straight ballots before they were counted, and am sure that there were no pasters among them then. I looked particularly for Brown stickers because I knew a large number were being used.

In answer to the inquiry, "Could ten Brown stickers have escaped your notice among the straight tickets?" Mr. Hadley answered: "I would take an oath that there were not ten Brown stickers among the straight tickets; I would take an oath that in my judgment there was not one."

"Were you asked if you were satisfied with the count at the close of the meeting, and did you say you were satisfied?"

"Yes, I did."

When told that the Brown stickers had been found, Mr. Hadley's comment was: "If they were found there, I should say they were put there after town meeting day."

An investigation will naturally follow, and it is due to the good name of the state to ascertain the true facts and if it is shown that the ballots have been tampered with, we with all good citizens trust that the perpetrators of the outrage may be dealt with as they deserve. Neither party can gain, in the end, by such methods, and the reputation of republicans and democrats alike demands the closest scrutiny in connection with this case.

That a report of the discovery of a plot to assassinate the president-elect should require denial, as was made in a despatch from Indianapolis last Saturday, is shameful. The man who originated such a story, be he who he may or what his motive, is not short of being a scoundrel and a public enemy. This country has seen two presidents murdered, both by men who were insane for notoriety, and both of whom paid the penalty of their crimes, and will go down in history with the execration of the civilized world. But the United States is not a country of assassins, and it has not yet become necessary for the man chosen by the people as their chief magistrate to envelop himself in boiler iron or seclude himself wholly, in order to live long enough to be inaugurated. Such rumors are reprehensible and injurious in the extreme and their authors should be punished.

In New York city, last week, two murderers were "sentenced to be hanged on the 12th of February, 1889," according to the press reports. The state of New York has abolished hanging, and substituted death by electricity; but perhaps the statute does not provide a technical name for the new method of execution, and the judges will continue to sentence criminals to be hanged, as in the past. It might sound frivolously irreverent to order a person to be "telegraphed" into the next world, and it would sound brutal to sentence him merely to be "killed," although that of course is what a death sentence actually amounts to. A new word will have to be supplied, to fill the coming want. The New York law also prohibits the papers of the state from publishing the details of execution, but the papers say they will publish them if they can get them, and they propose to get them. The publication of such reports does not tend to elevate the public morals, but so long as the public demands them and will pay for having them printed they will be printed.

The most interesting feature of Wilmington is the old Swedes church, standing on the outskirts of the city, near the Christina, just above the rocks where in old days Minuit planted his fort. I am of opinion that we have no church quite so interesting, as regards age, origin and architecture. It is probably the oldest which remains exactly as it left the hands of its builders; "1698" is the date in iron letters on the west gable. The building stands in a wide place of graves, a little back from Christina creek and a mile west of the Delaware. The church is built of gray stone, sixty feet long, thirty feet wide and twenty feet high. The walls are six feet thick at the base and three feet at the windows. There are five of the latter, large, and arched in the style of the old Norman, as are the three heavy doors. There are inscriptions on all four sides in iron letters set into the walls, the main inscription being on the west gable.

Within the church is as quaint and old as when Dutch Peter, the battle scarred sexton, hauled live coals from the old cannon stove upon the brick floor to warm it. The old cedar roof, fir pews and quaint pulpit, with its high sounding board, are very interesting specimens indeed of early church furniture.

The inscriptions recall the very interesting circumstances under which the church was built. After the capture by the Dutch (1655), the Swedes were very much scattered, and found it extremely difficult to secure pastors. They were of the Lutheran faith of the pure Augsburg confession and secured now and then a minister from the churches at New York, their last one from this source being the Rev. Jacobus Fabritius, called in 1677, who became blind and incapacitated in 1682. They made frequent but vain appeals to the home church to send them "two ministers, with Bibles, catechisms and other goodly books to protect them from the false teachers and strange sects," by whom they were surrounded. At last, in 1693, they appealed to Charles XI, of Sweden, an appeal very interesting to us from a statement it contains that there were then 188 Swedish families, comprising 942 persons, living on the Delaware. Charles was much interested by the letters, but the death of his queen, Ulrica Eleanora, soon after, and pressing affairs of state delayed the American matter for some time. In 1696 it was revived. Andrew Rudman, a candidate, was selected as missionary to America, and he in turn chose two other godly men, Eric Bjork and Josias Aurran, as companions and co-workers. The king gave for their outfit $1,800 "copper mint," and 500 copies of Luther's catechism, with Bibles, pastils and church books, each bearing the king's name in gilt letters. As the three were about to depart he granted them a personal interview, at which he gave them $100 "silver mynt" additional for their voyage, and informed them that he had ordered the Swedish ambassador in London to procure passports and see them safely on their way. "Go now," he concluded, "in the name of the Lord to the place to which I send you. God be with you and make you indeed successful!" Furnished with a safe conduct from England they came safely to Maryland, thence they traveled overland to Wilmington and Philadelphia, Rudman taking the parish at Wicacoa, near the latter place, and Bjork that of Crane Hook, near Wilmington. The people of Wimington thought that a church should be reared in their village; those at Crane Hook opposed any change; at last, as a compromise, it was agreed to place it on the banks of the Christina, so that the people from the outlying districts could come in boats in summer and sleighs in winter, and also for the protection afforded by the fort. John Stalcop, a church warden, gave the land. They began building on May 28, 1698. The edifice was consecrated as Trinity church, on Trinity Sunday, 1699. The occasion was made a day of great rejoicing. Governor Markham was invited, but was unable to be present. The feast was spread in the house of John Stalcop. All sorts of meats and drink, we are told, were contributed—wheat, malt, bread, flour, hops, wine, butter, sugar, raisins, eggs, veal, mutton, venison, chickens, turkeys, turnips, etc. The congregation ate the dinner together, "rejoicing and praising God." For years after the anniversary was observed. Communions and baptismal services were long celebrated with the chalice and plate sent over by the copper workers of Sweden to Pastor Bjork, and the Bible long used was that given by Queen Anne in 1712.—Wilmington (Del.) Cor. New York Post.

The Franking Privilege.

The postal authorities say that the amount of postal matter received under the frank of congressmen is so small as to be of no importance in connection with the work of the office. Occasionally after some important speech a number of Congressional Records will be forwarded to Boston or to other points in New England. Outside of the departments of the government and the members of congress the franking privilege is enjoyed by agricultural colleges and the widows of the ex-presidents of the United States. A circumstance not generally known is that all mail matter addressed to Sarah Polk, Lucretia R. Garfield and Julia D. Grant may be sent free of charge. No signature or mark is necessary to the free carriage of mail matter to either of the above named persons. The address is sufficient. These ladies not only have the privilege of sending their mail matter for nothing, but their correspondents enjoy the same privilege.—Boston Transcript.

Cheapness of Electricity.

The saving which will result in substituting electricity for horseflesh on the street railways of this country is hinted at by the fact that the operation of one street railway in England by electricity will result in saving $60,000 per annum over and above the present cost of operating it by horses.

Small talk is the small change of life; there is no getting on without it. There are times when a little nonsense is very palatable, and gravity and sedateness ought to be kicked down stairs. A philosopher cuts a poor figure in a ball room unless he leaves his wisdom at home. We have met with men who were too lofty for small talk. They were above such trifling; in other words, they were above making themselves agreeable, above pleasing and above being pleased. The world is made up of trifles, and he who can trifle elegantly and gracefully is a valuable acquisition to mankind. He is a Corinthian column in the fabric of society.

widow about thirty years ago in consequence of her husband having fallen down stairs after a supper at the Maison d'Or and broken his neck. The real reason why he and his wife resided so much on the continent was the queen's refusal to allow her precedence at the drawing rooms of the Duchess of Norfolk; as a member of a sovereign German family, from a German point of view she was just as "high and mighty" as no matter what Mecklenburg-Hesse or Saxe Coburg.

There was no valid excuse for the refusal, which seems inexplicable, when it is remembered how the morganatic son of a younger Hessian princelet is being foisted as high royalty on the British people. Her majesty could not have believed the story current at Manheim about the Princess Marie of Baden (Duchess of Hamilton), being a supposititious child, and substituted for a prince with a malformed head, denoting the idiocy from time to time appeared in the grand ducal (or before Napoleon's time Margravine) family. If there had been substitution a boy would have been slipped into the place of the alleged idiot. The Manheimers, near whose city the Grand Duchess Stephanie used to reside, had some plausible explanation to give for the substitution of a girl—or, at any rate, one that satisfied them.

The "true heir" was never a complainant. He was, the story went, found one day—full grown, helpless, undressed, hairy as an Orson and unable to quit a crouching posture—near the Grand Ducal park. Altogether he was more like an animal than a human being. How he got to the place where he was discovered nobody could ever guess. His vocabulary contained but two words, "Caspar Hauser." "Caspar Hauser" was the unvarying answer to every question. For some time it was supposed that he was the victim of some theorists who wanted to prove Locke's philosophy by experiment, and who had kept him without any sort of experience other than that of a hole in which he was brought up in solitude. Those who found him put him in human training. He brightened up, took, in his Sunday clothes, a distinguished air, was mild, tractable and showed gleams of memory extending far back to a few oases in his desert life.

Speech was coming to him as he was assassinated. This murder caused a stir along the Rhine. Caspar Hauser had a striking resemblance to past Margraves of Baden. This, perhaps, was the reason why the tale of substitution was told and believed. However, the late Duchess of Hamilton's early married life was poisoned by the queen's refusal to treat her as a princess of Baden. The terrible misfortune of the rest of her life was a terror of internal cancer. She fancied herself liable to this disease, and believed she was preserved from its ravages by an American doctor, who, through her patronage, won a great practice.—Cor. London Standard.

Indian Languages.

Each group of Indian tribes had a languages of its own, varying in dialect according as the several tribes were scattered over a territory. In this respect it resembled the language of Great Britain and Germany in the time when there was little communication between persons living at some distance from each other. The language of no Indian tribe was a jargon, as it has often been represented to be. It was rich in verbs and grammatical forms. It was very expressive, clear and comprehensive. It was readily learned and easily understood. The language of the Algonquin group was the prevailing one and was understood on most parts of the continent. As spoken by the Ojibways it contained about 10,000 words. It has been called the coast language of the Indians, for the reason that some of the most advanced of nearly every tribe could speak it. In some cases boys were sent to a tribe that spoke this language in order to learn it. It was like the French tongue in Europe, the language of diplomacy. The Sioux language was more complex and more difficult to acquire, but stronger and more copious.

One language was understood on every portion of the continent. It impressed the organ of vision and not that of hearing. It was not expressed by sounds. It was the language of signs. It was very expressive. By means of it ideas could be communicated as far as the eye could reach. One skilled in its use could tell much in a very short time. He could call a person to him who was far beyond the sound of his voice. If he could catch the eye of the person he wanted he could communicate secrets to him, while those around him would be in entire ignorance of them. He could give warning to a friend without attracting the notice of others. A conversation could be carried on in the sign language between two persons so far apart that their voices could not be heard. The sign language could be used in love or war. It was not confined to gestures or motions of the person. Every part of the body touched or pointed to had a significance. So did the earth, water, sun, moon, stars and sky. Actions, passions, emotions, love, hate, as well as tangible things, were expressed by the sign language. A blanket, stick, hatchet, or string of wampum could also be employed in the language of signs. One or more fires were employed for conveying intelligence long distances. An Indian rider could guide his pony so that all who saw him could understand whether he had been successful in the chase or in battle. No race of men lacking in intellect or deficient in inventions could have originated and improved the language of signs and symbols as it was employed by the aborigines of this country when they were discovered by the Europeans. The construction of this language was as great a monument to human greatness as the formation of an alphabet.—"The American Indian," by Elijah M. Haines.

Dr. Alexander Zoroastroff, of Belostok, emphatically recommends to all military men, sportsmen, and others, a grease for boots which is said to entirely prevent sore feet, and so protects pedestrians from the whole train of familiar affections caused by that minor accident. The ointment is made of four parts of lard, four parts of olive oil and one part of caoutchouc (raw rubber), which are melted together on a slow fire. Having moistened the sole of the boot with water, the inventor warms the boot in a stove or before a fire, and then smears it over with the compound. The boot is said to become soft, pliable, shining, waterproof and even more durable.—Frank Leslie's.

In the beautiful summy weather,
I think that 'twould be pleasant to wander, ma belle—
Of course, I mean wander together,
A demure little inn we should meet on the road,
By the side of a gay little river;
And where'd be the harm, if we made our abode
At the sign of the "Cupid and Quiver"?

Young couples would saunter along in the shades,
While blithely the sign swung above them,
And wo-begone gallants and weariful maids
Would find some nice person to love them.
Grim Clothe would wear such a holiday look,
We should find it not hard to forgive her;
For Fate is a shepherdess waving her crook
At the sign of the "Cupid and Quiver."

A sweet, idle day-dream, I wish it were true.
I wish that the year were all summer,
And that Time were a maiden as pretty as you,
Instead of a toothless old mummer,
My faculties grow cold as the year onward flies,
And the chill winter winds make them shiver;
But they are warmed and rejoiced when they see in your eyes
The dear sign of the "Cupid and Quiver."

—Life.

HER OWN TRUE LOVE.

When Frank Bayard arrived in Hermossillo in the State of Sonora, Mexico and took his road to the Santi Rita mine where he was to be the superintendent, he was full of hope for the future.

Fresh from the mines in Nevada, where he had been accustomed to the Cornish, Welsh, and American laborers, the views of the Mexican peons upon what constituted a day's work seemed to him absurd. At the time he managed to get along fairly well.

His machinery was put up, he made the changes in the administration of the mine that he had expected to without more trouble than he had looked for, and generally speaking, he was satisfied with what he had done, although he expected to do a great deal more.

In one way he was far more lucky than he had expected; for, looking forward, as he had done, to an existence which would be utterly without society, he had made the acquaintance of Don Ramon Fonseca, whose hacienda, or country house, was not more than two miles and a half from the mine.

Don Ramon and his wife were very pleasant, and made Mr. Bayard welcome, while Donna Francesca, their eldest daughter, turned out to be a most charming girl of about twenty.

Brought up in the country, and her father's constant companion upon all occasions, Donna Francesca could ride anything, could shoot straight, and find her way along the wildest trail on the roughest night. No one would have believed, while talking to the quiet, lady-like, and accomplished girl in the drawing-room, that she had courage to do and dare many things that would have startled a bold man.

When two young and attractive people, without any prior attachments, are thrown constantly together, they are apt to become great friends, and it is not to be wondered at if in time they become something more.

So it was with Frank Bayard and Donna Francesca Fonseca. They fell in love with each other, and, lover-like, they managed to tell each other about it. With many inward tremblings, Mr. Bayard had a talk with Don Ramon. There was really nothing against the match, and the elderly gentleman gave his consent willingly enough.

The lovers were betrothed formally, and they looked forward to being married early in September. It was then the latter part of July, and, as might be expected, Mr. Bayard spent as much of his time at the hacienda as he could spare from the mine.

But in the meantime the Santa Rita had been yielding largely. The ore got steadily better as they went down, the vein widened, and the new crushing machinery enabled them to handle a great deal of rock.

The gold which was secured had to be sent to Hermossillo for shipment, and this was done whenever a Government train, guarded by soldiers, came through, the country being over-run with bands of highwaymen.

For some reason, one of the Government trains was late, and Mr. Bayard had at the mine a large amount of gold, somewhere near £18,000 in value.

The custody of such an amount made him very anxious, an anxiety thoroughly shared by his betrothed.

At her suggestion he carried it to the hacienda, and gave it to her to keep, no one but the two knowing anything about it. Donna Francesca, of course, hid it carefully.

The Fonsecas were at breakfast one morning when a peon came in and excitedly told the story of what had happened at the Santa Rita.

The boy was Frank Bayard's servant, and lived with him in the superintendent's house.

About half-past eleven he was roused up by the noise of some men breaking in the door. He saw "Don Bayardo" jump to the door of the room, where he was met by half-a-dozen men with rifles. He had to surrender. They asked for the gold, and when he told them he had none, they fastened a rope around his neck— Francesca turned very pale, and grasped the edge of a chair—threatening to hang him if he did not open the safe. He unlocked the safe then, and there was no gold.

The men were furious, and talked a long time about hanging him, but at last they bound him and took him away. The boy himself had, at the first alarm, hidden under a bed. The men took all the arms they could find, as well as everything of value, and then went away, Don Bayardo being on a horse with them, his hands tied. He thought they belonged to the band of Joaquin Alvarros.

If this story excited Don Ramon, you may fancy the effect upon Donna Francesca.

In a strained hard sort of voice she asked what direction the men took, and was told towards Sierra de la Santa Fe—Mountains of the True Faith.

Soon after the arrival of the boy came Lope Vega, the assistant superintendent of the mine, to apply to Don Ramon for advice.

Although Don Ramon was the alcalde, or magistrate of the district, he seemed utterly overcome by the situation, and was only able to wring his hands and suggest sending a messenger to the commandant of the troops at Los Nietos, about sixty miles away.

To all suggestions of his daughter that he should organize a pursuing party with the peons at his command, he replied with unanswerable good sense that the peons were not accustomed to fight, while the bandits were.

Donna Francesca turned away at last with a resolute set face, and went to her room.

She cut off her beautiful hair—long, black, glossy, that her lover had often praised as they sat whispering together in the evening. Then she dressed herself in the clothes of a young peon, and stole out of the house, taking with her a small bag of ammunition, and stole out of the house towards the chapparal at the rear. Here she found two horses saddled and bridled; for had she not spoken to Pedro, her foster-brother, and was he not faithful?

Up and up the steep mountain trail which led into the Sierra de la Santa Fe, riding one horse and leading the other, the girl went—alone. At half-past seven she dismounted, unsaddled the horses, hobbled them, and turned them loose to graze in a small patch of grass. Then, after eating her own supper, she wrapped herself in her blankets, and went to sleep as peacefully as she would at home.

The next morning, bright and early, she started once more. The trail got wider and more dangerous, but she scarcely thought of that in her consuming anxiety about her future husband. In places it led along the edge of frightful precipices where it might have made any man's head turn, but this girl pressed on as though she were riding on a level road.

About four o'clock that afternoon the smoke from a fire warned her that she was nearing human beings, and picketing her horses, she crept cautiously forward on foot.

From behind a rock she had a good view of the camp, and her heart gave a bound as she saw Frank Bayard sitting by himself, not far from the fire. He seemed to be free enough as far as fetters were concerned, but they had him safe.

The camp was in a curious place. There was almost a circular table of ground, about six hundred yards in diameter, with the rock going up sheer and straight on every side. The entrance to this place was like a cleft or gateway, about ten feet wide, and here the sentry walked up and down with his loaded rifle.

She stayed there until night watching, and at last saw the man lie down to sleep. Marking carefully where her lover was, she waited until it was quite dark, and then stole cautiously down the trail.

Silently and noiselessly as a shadow almost she worked her way through the narrow gateway. Reaching the sentry, she stood holding her breath, almost near enough to touch him, until she knew that he, too, was asleep, sitting upon a stone. Throwing herself down upon her face, she crawled towards the spot where Frank Bayard lay.

No serpent could have gone more silently. Once she nearly waked up one of the bandits by mistake, and she lay there three or four minutes recovering herself from the sudden shock. Then, at last, she was beside Frank, and with her hand upon his mouth, shook him gently.

"Sh! 'Tis I—Francesca. Follow me, but make no noise. Take this," and she thrust a revolver into his hand.

Back to the gateway with infinite care and caution; past the sentry into the cleft; then on their feet; one long loving embrace, and then onward up the trail she was leading him.

The horses reached, they saddled and started, Francesca going first; and as they rode she told him how she had come after him.

About eleven o'clock they camped, for the road became too dangerous then to go on, and at earliest dawn they were once more in the saddle, pushing on.

It was nearly ten o'clock, when, as they were climbing up the side of the mountain, after having crossed a small valley, they heard some shots behind them, and, pausing, saw the bandits, some twenty in number, descending the trail they had gone over two hours before. Francesca laughed.

"I know a place about three miles from here," she said; "we could hold out a week against an army. Come let's hurry on."

A turn of the road, as they wound round the highest part of the mountain trail, and she reined her horse in. It was a natural fort. On one side the rock went up straight for nearly a hundred feet, while on the other the precipice went down sheer. The shelf upon which the trail was was not more than six feet wide.

"Let us camp here and wait for them."

Tying the horses behind in a little bay-like opening in the side of the mountain, while Frank Bayard built a wall of loose stones, some five or six feet high, Donna Francesca got the saddle-bags, and from them produced an abundance of food. The two took their breakfast leisurely, talking and laughing the while.

But this pleasant time was interrupted by the tramp of horses, and a man appeared around the corner.

"Senor," said Frank, "I have escaped, as you know. I advise you to go back. I am well armed, and if you advance it will be death."

The bandit paused, then speaking to the men behind him, he turned his horse round and disappeared. In a few minutes, however, he came back with three or four more. There was a clear space of some thirty feet they had to cross before reaching the wall.

"Senors," said Frank again, "I warn you."

The reply was an oath, followed by a rush. Crack! crack! crack! went the repeating-rifles, and only two men reached the wall. One Frank struck with his fist and knocked him out to the edge of the cliff, where he made a desperate attempt to recover himself, failed, and fell with a yell. The other the girl shot.

The men behind drew back beyond the corner, but only for a few minutes. Once more one of these rushes, this time of a dozen. The rifles blazed as fast as the levers could be worked, and then the revolvers came into play.

In that narrow space, and among the compact body of men, it was impossible to miss. The attacking party wavered, one turned, and then another, while the ledge was strewn with dead and wounded men.

Suddenly Francesca heard a horse behind them and turned pale.

"If these are more of those bandits," she said fiercely, "I must not fall alive into their hands."

And Frank promised with a look.

In intense anxiety they waited for five or six minutes, which seemed an age, and then round a turn in the trail they saw Don Ramon coming.

For the first time Francesca gave way and fainted.

The only Mexican lady with short hair I ever saw in my life was Senora Francesca Bayard, for her husband would never allow her to grow it long again.

He used to say, as they told the story in their pleasant home, that beautiful as it had been in his eyes before it was cut, it was more beautiful now.

A coal fever rages at Astoria, Ore., and some fifty persons have filed claims on supposed coal lands.

A woman in Meriden, Conn., has a pet snake. The reptile is very tame and spends whole hours in plying with the cat, with which it is on the best terms. They say it is immensely funny to watch the two animals, especially the kitten, which is still a little shy of her strange acquaintance and very careful not to step on him or otherwise arouse his anger.

A very odd dining organization in Philadelphia is known as the Ishmaelites. The apartment in which the feast is held is always decorated in the Oriental fashion, some of the features introduced being very luxurious and striking. During each season there is a Muezzin who presides and rules the feast and who also delivers a mock prayer and has a peculiar song. All wear turbans or fez caps, with long robes and ornaments around their necks.

A visitor who examined some town records upon Cape Cod furnished this extract from an old sermon, preached about 1760, on the sin of wearing periwigs: "Adam, so long as he continued in innocency, did wear his own hair and not a periwig. Indeed, I do not see how it was possible that Adam should dislike his own hair and therefore cut it, that so he might wear a periwig and yet have continued innocent."

Mme. Albani recently had quite an interesting seance with Queen Victoria at Old Mar Lodge. Albani sang a ballad to the Queen and then Victoria deigned to play two or three selections for the amusement of the prima donna. Victoria does not play wonderfully well, but Albani kindly remarked that she "might have done worse." This speech so touched Victoria's sense of humor that she asked Albani to lunch with her the next day.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, in a letter descriptive of the Mormon Tabernacle at Salt Lake City, writes: "A grace at the congregation easily corroborated the statement that Mormonism largely recruits itself from the most wretched and ignorant classes of European countries. Some of the heads of those present might have been termed well advanced on the way back to the gorilla. Vacant countenances, eyes empty of thought were seen on every side."

A retail dealer, according to the Shoe and Leather Review, makes money by selling a dollar shoe at cost. He says: "I sell a shoe that costs me $1 at the original price, and use it as a 'leader.' Then I mark my $1.25 shoes at $1.50, the $2 at $2.50, the $2.25 at $4 and the $2 60 goods at $5. See? A customer wants to look at my low-priced grades; I show them, and bring out all my principal lines. Likely as not I persuade him or her to pay $3, and this secures me a fair profit."

According to a communication in the Russian Courier from a certain Mr. Schendal, who visited Count Tolstoi at his estate of Jasulai Pauliana, the novelist is at present occupied in building an incombustible "isha" (cottage) in place of one burned down. The isha is small, but commodious. The roof is to be thatched straw. Count Tolstoi and Paul Iranovitch were kneading clay in a large tub, into which a peasant woman was shoveling it. The Count's daughter was spinning string for binding the straw. All the party went in turns to get water from a well situated in an adjacent ravine. Every one was busy at work, and apparently very happy.

A problem that shipbuilders, metallurgists, chemists and engineers in this and in other countries have worked over ever since the building of iron ships is how to preserve the submerged portions of the hull from the injurious action of salt water and from fouling by the growth of the vegetable substances of the sea. The Japanese Admiralty has discovered that the coating of the bottoms of their vessels with a material much like the lacquer used on the Japanese woodenware resists the tendency of barnacles and seaweed to adhere to the plating, and also prevents corrosion, and that it will remain effective for three years. It is feared, however, that the use of the material for such purposes would exhaust the existing sources of supply, and would also so enhance its value as to make it practically impossible to put it in general use.

WHERE TO BUY PRESENTS.

A shaving mug is one of the articles that cannot be omitted from a gentleman's complete toilet set, and if you wish to give your brother, father or young man a useful and handsome Christmas present, go to W. D. Grace's at the corner of Daniel street and Market square, and make a selection from those he is offering for the holiday trade. They are in a variety of styles, and are, to our eye, the handsomest lot shown in the city. He has his cosy little store filled with beautiful goods, which are marked at prices to suit any purchaser. Everybody knows that he carries a nice stock of confectionery, made by Huyler, which is enough to lovers of sweets to guarantee the excellent quality of the goods, and judging from the boxes bearing Huyler's name, that we find in many homes, Grace must be doing a large business in this line. He will also be pleased to exhibit La Normandie cigars in fancy boxes of twenty-five, which will add greatly to the pleasure of any gentleman friend fond of the weed.

"What a variety of goods," exclaimed one lady on entering Collis' Boston 99-cent store. "Santa Claus must have told the truth when he said he had gathered wares from the four corners of the earth." Toys, dolls and games for the children are in profusion, and if you can't find an article at this store suitable for a present, you cannot find it in Portsmouth. China ware, lamps, leather goods, ladies' work baskets, in fact almost every conceivable article for any particular purpose can be found there. Up stairs, lovers of art will find a fine hanging of engravings, etchings, water colors, crayons and oil paintings, and a visit to Collis will save you much running around in search of something that will just fit your eye and purse

To the charitably disposed, those who delight in serving the Master by alleviating suffering and helping the needy, and who derive more pleasure in the consciousness that they have improved or elevated the condition of some fellow being of a humbler station in life, than from the personal manifestations of delight and gratitude of a relative or family friend, this is the season of all others to indulge their worthy desires. A stove from Sweetser's or Taylor's, a ton of coal from Walker's or Sise's, a cord of wood from O. F. Philbrick or Daniel Littlefield, a pair of blankets from Ayers & Lockes, an order for an overcoat from W. P. Walker or a set of underwear from C. E. Simpson, five dollars' worth of groceries from the Laightons' or J. J. Laskey, a pair of boots or overshoes from Carr's or Fay's, will cause many a heart to rejoice and encourage many a man who is tasting the experience of the dark side of life.

DROWNING ACCIDENT.

Samuel Harrison and Ralph Wentworth, both aged about eleven years, were drowned at Newmarket on Saturday afternoon while skating. One of the bodies was recovered about half an hour afterwards, and the other on Sunday afternoon.

PRESENTATIONS.

At the shoe factory, on Friday, Mrs. Gurney, forewoman of the stitching room, was presented by the operatives with a rocking chair as a Christmas paresent; the assistants also received presents—Miss Goodwin and Miss Jellison toilet sets, Miss Thompson a rocking chair, and Mrs. Sanborn a picture. Foreman J. C. Lamos of the lining and tying room received an oil painting, and foreman John Gillins of the box shop a set of Dickens' works.

On Saturday the city workmen presented Street Commissioner Marshall with a handsome silver water-cooler and gold-lined goblet, Mr. James McCarthy acting as spokesman for the donors, and making a very neat speech, which was very pleasantly responded to by Mr. Marshall. The gifts are on exhibition in Hutchinson's window.

Superintendent Morse on Friday notified the teachers in the public schools

—Mr. Alfred O. Larkin, who has been passing a year or more in California, has returned to this city.

—Mr. J. Horace Jenness has arrived back from an absence of several weeks in New York.

—Mr. W. Scott Smith, editor of the CHRONICLE, is in Washington to pass the holiday.

—Mr. William J. Mendum, wife and child, of Winchester, Mass., are passing the Christmas season with relatives in this city.

—Master George Dewey is home from St. Paul's school, Concord, to pass the holidays with his grandmother, Mrs. Ichabod Goodwin.

—The bill introduced by Senator Farwell in the U. S. Senate on Tuesday, the 18th inst., regulating the pay of the officers of the navy, was prepared by Asst. Paymaster Thos. J. Cowie, U. S. N., who came in here last August on the U. S. S. Saratoga, and who is very pleasantly remembered.

—Mr. Fred Sise has come down from Boston to pass Christmas with his parents.

—Doctor M. H. Simons, U. S. N., has gone to Portland, Me., to spend Christmas with his family. He has made final arrangements for bringing his family to this city, having rented the Bradford house on Court street from the first of January.

The treasurer of the Chase Home for Children acknowledges the receipt of five dollars from Mrs. E. B. Goodall.

—Mr. Daniel S. Broderick of New York arrived in this city Sunday morning, on a brief visit to his relatives and friends.

—Chaplain James J. Kane, U. S. N., has taken a house for the winter in Philadelphia.

—Mr. Ward W. Amsden, for eight years past watchmaker and engraver with Mr. J. H. Hutchinson, closes his engagement on the last day of this year, to take a position with a large jewelry house in Worcester, Mass. Mr. Amsden is not only a skillful watchmaker and engraver, but a courteous and pleasant gentlemen.

—Much anxiety has been manifested in Portsmouth over the reports of the illness of Mr. C. M. Gignoux at the Hoffman house, New York. We are pleased to be able to state that he is improving, and expects to return to this city soon.

—Mr. George F. Evans, wife and daughter, and Mr. Joseph S. Odiorne, are expected to arrive this morning to pass the holidays with Mrs. Evans' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus W. Odiorne, on State street. Mr. Evans is general manager of the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis railroad, and Mr. Joseph S. Odiorne is general passenger agent of the same line.

OBITUARY.

Hon. William Senter of Portland, Me., was thrown from his carriage on the first of November, and received injuries which, although at first supposed to be trivial, resulted in his death on Saturday, Dec. 22d, at the age of seventy-five years.

He was born in this city, and was brother to the late Timothy Senter, one of the best teachers this city ever had, and of the late Oliver Senter. He went to Portland when but thirteen years old, to learn the jeweller's trade with the late Oliver Gerrish, another native of Portsmouth, who died in Portland but a few days ago at the age of ninety-two. The firm of Lowell & Senter, jewellers, was formed in Portland in 1836, and continued to 1868, after which Mr. Senter was in business alone until 1874, when the firm of William Senter & Co. was formed, his son, Wm. Senter, Jr., being taken into partnership.

Personally Mr. Senter was one of the most popular men in Portland. He was one of the original members of the Portland Yacht Club, and a great lover of field sports. In 1871 he was elected an alderman of the city; in 1879 he ran for mayor on the republican ticket, but was beaten; in 1880 he was elected mayor, and was re-elected in 1881.

On Friday, Dec. 28th, at Music hall, William Gillette's highly successful American play, "Held by the Enemy" will be presented in the same manner and with the same cast as during its long runs in New York, Boston and San Francisco. The critics of the great New York dailies were unanimous in their printed endorsements of "Held by the Enemy;" the morning after the first production at the Madison Square theatre the Herald said: "'Held by the Enemy' is a strong play. The theatre was packed and people stood up in the aisles. The audience were ready to condemn or approve, and they approved. The whole cast was good. There was a storm of applause after each act. Mr. Gillette, the author, was also called out."

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

Membrane, attended with increased secretion. Thus catarrh may affect the head, throat, stomach, bowels, or any part of the body where the mucous membrane is found. But catarrh of the head is by far the most common, coming on so gradually that often its presence is not suspected till it has obtained a firm hold on its victim. It is caused by a cold, or a succession of colds, combined with Impure Blood.

When firmly established the disease is exceedingly disagreeable, causing flow from the nose, dryness of the throat, headache, loss of appetite, roaring and buzzing noises in the ears, etc. In Hood's Sarsaparilla may be found a prompt and permanent cure for catarrh. It purifies and enriches the blood, soothes and rebuilds the diseased membrane, and thus soon cures the disease. At the same time it refreshes and tones the whole system. The remarkable success of this peculiar medicine entitles it to your confidence. Give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Sarsaparilla for catarrh, with which I have been troubled many years, and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pains in the back of my head. The effort to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. My grocer advised me to try and it gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I am never without the medicine in my house, as I think it is worth its weight in gold." MRS. G. B. GIBB, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. "I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh with very satisfactory results. I have received more permanent benefit from it than from any other remedy I have ever tried." M. E. READ, of A. Read & Son, Wauseon, Ohio.

Preparations for Inauguration.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.— Quarters have been engaged at the Arlington hotel for General Harrison and party prior to the inauguration ceremonies. There will be in the party General Harrison and wife, Russell Harrison and wife, J. R. McKee and wife and two children, ex-Senator Saunders of Nebraska and wife, (parents of Mrs. Russell Harrison,) E. W. Halford, private secretary, wife and daughter. The guests will arrive about a week before inauguration day, and on the morning of inauguration day will go to Willard's hotel on Pennsylvania avenue and occupy a parlor on the second floor, whence they will view the procession as it passes.

In accordance with a precedent established by Andrew Jackson and observed by every president but two since then, President Cleveland will call for President-elect Harrison at Willard's and escort him to the Capital. The number of civic organizations that have informed the inauguration committee of their intention to take part in the parade is eighty-nine up to date; twenty-six of them comprise 15,458 men. Quarters have been secured for a majority of these organizations. The military organizations are not included in the above.

Steamer "Haytien Republic" Surrendered to Rear Admiral Luce.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.— Secretary Whitney today received a cable message from Rear Admiral Luce, in command of the United States steamer Galena at Kingston, Jamaica, saying that the American steamer Haytien Republic, recently seized at Port-au-Prince by the Haytien authorities, had been surrendered to him upon demand.

Trying to Break the Contract.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—A special from Montreal says that Erastus Wiman was in consultation all the morning with six of the leading counsel of the Dominion, and admitted to a reporter that the subject of his visit was to break the ninety-year contract of the Great Northwestern Telegraph Co. with the Montreal & Dominion Telegraph Co., and under which the shareholders of the Canadian Companies were to receive an eight per cent dividend per annum, guaranteed by the Western Union. The directors of the Montreal Telegraph Company are also in session discussing the dissolution. Should Wiman succeed in breaking the contract the company will sue the Western Union.

First Reports Untrue.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Dec. 24.—There is no truth in the report telegraphed Saturday that the village of Hermansville, Michigan, had been wiped out by fire with a heavy loss. The story originated from the fact that a small boiler at a lumber mill at that point exploded, scalding one man severely and destroying the boiler shed. Loss about $1000.

Kilkenny Lumber Company's Railroad to be Operated by the Boston & Lowell.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 24.—The Boston & Lowell Railroad have made arrangements for the temporary operation of the Kilkenny Lumber Company's Railroad, as part of its White Mountain division. G. E. Cummings has been appointed Superintendent of Transportation, with headquarters at Lancaster.

TOO LATE.

The Bell Has Rung.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—The executive committee of the national association of democratic clubs has issued an address to 3000 clubs in the United States, declaring that the next campaign will be fought on the same lines as the last, and urging the clubs to keep up constantly the work of educating the people upon politics economical, and governmental questions, so that in the congressional election of 1890 and in the presidential election of 1892, the party of the people may be successful.

HEROIC RESCUE OF A BOY,

Through a Hole, and Under the Ice.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WORCESTER, MASS., Dec. 24.—Albert and Alexander Prevost, boy brothers, fell through the ice at Sullivater pond, South Worcester, this afternoon, one of them breaking through in his efforts to save his brother. Samuel Giles attempted to save one by working his way out on a plank, which fell into the water. Giles and his burden were finally rescued by the bystanders, when it was discovered the other little fellow had been carried under the ice by the current. John Green tied a rope about his body, plunged into the hole, dived under the ice and caught the little fellow, both being drawn from the hole by the rope held by persons in the crowd.

Russell Harrison at Philadelphia.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 24.—Russell Harrison paid a short visit to this city today. He lunched with Hamilton Disston, and dined with George W. Childs and A. J. Drexel this evening, leaving on the late train for New York. During his stay he called upon John Wanamaker and Charles Emery Smith, editor of the Press.

Happy Bridgeport.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., Dec. 24.—The will of the late wealthy Ann Hunt bequeaths about $100,000, mostly in personal estate, to her near relatives, and $30,500 in public bequests, mostly to local institutions.

An Ugly Customer.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

GREENFIELD, MASS., Dec. 24.—Eugene Blair of Wendell was arrested today and held in $2000 charged with stabbing Alfred M. Pierce of Montague, in a row, with a jack-knife. Pierce has an ugly wound in his left side, and it is quite likely he will not recover, as the lower lobe of the lung protruded several inches. Blair has already served one sentence for stabbing a neighbor's boy, and is an ugly customer.

Mayor Hewitt Making Appintments.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—Mayor Hewitt today appointed Mrs. Wilson M. Powell, Dr. Edward H. Peaslee and Miles M. O'Brien, Commissioners of the Board of Education. Among those recently selected by the mayor, who were unable to give the necessary time to the duties, was the Hon. Carl Schurz.

Forepaugh Still Losing.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Dec. 24.—Judgment was given in the Common Pleas Number One today in favor of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad in a suit brought against the company by Adam Forepaugh, to recover for damages done to his circus property in a railroad accident near Binghamton, N. Y. Forepaugh secured the first verdict of $16,481.07, but Judge Allison said today he would not declare void the contract made by Forepaugh himself, releasing the railroad company from all liability in case of injury to his property.

Of Interest to the Knights of Labor.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—The Evening News says the first real and decided opposition to the leadership of Powderly in the Knights of Labor, to bear fruit that is ominous, was the unanimous withdrawal from the order on Friday night of the local Coopers' Assembly No. 2309, at a red letter meeting, called to consider this very question. It is probable that within two weeks all of the 51 local coopers' assemblies in the United States will withdraw and form a national organization with government and officers to suit the radical ideas of the members.

Sad Result of a Hunting Trip by Youthful Gunners.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ROCKVILLE, CONN., Dec. 24.—Thomas M. Daggart, 14 years old, of Talcottville, was accidentally shot and instantly killed by James Morey, aged 20, while squirrel hunting in Vernon woods early this morning. Morey returned to Talcottville so crazed by grief that he could not tell where the body was, and the citizens searched three hours before it was found.

Came Near Telling the Truth. A Brutal Act.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LOWELL, MASS., Dec. 24.—John J. Lynch, a drunken brute, quarrelled with his family today. He locked his wife up in a room tonight and told her she would not live to see Christmas. One of her girls and a boy, aroused by their mother's screams, rushed into the room, when the brute hurled them aside and seizing an axe buried the weapon in his wife's head. Lynch was locked up. The wound is not necessarily fatal. Later the wife presented a pitiable sight, sitting in a dingy apartment with an infant in her arms, suffering great agony, while she strove to excuse her husband's act to the reporters. Lynch is a brother to Gen. Butler's gardener, and is a good machinist, but has done no work for some time, his wife and six children supporting him.

League Island Navy Yard.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 24.—The Naval Commission appointed by Secretary Whitney to select a location for the contemplated improvements at the League Island Navy Yard has completed its work, and forwarded the report to Washington. Commodore Benham is president of the commission, and it is understood the body was impressed with the idea that League Island is the best location for a navy yard in the country.

Thirty-eight new buildings have been erected at Camden, Maine, in 1888, at a total valuation of $106,000, and work will begin on others as soon as the ground opens in the spring. Contracts have been signed for four large schooners to be built there the coming season, and a new felt mill is to be erected to employ fifty hands. The prospect is good for a new railroad to Rockland, and possibly to Bangor.

Two men at work trying to clear the ice jam in the canal at Manchester, had a narrow escape from drowning on Saturday. They were thrown into the water by the crushing of the ice, and were rescued after an immersion of fifteen minutes. The canal was so far cleared that the mills resumed operations Monday morning.

Naval Intelligence.

The London Army and Navy Gazette inquires if Mr. Philip Hichborn is the gentleman referred to in this story told by the New York correspondent of the London Sunday Times: "He wanted to learn some secrets in regard to the building of English naval vessels, and offered a subordinate officer employed at Plymouth a large sum of money for the information. The officer was poor, but he promptly replied that his position in Her Majesty's service would not permit him to accept such an offer. His wife was present during the interview, and the next day a woman knocked at the door of the American and handed him a package without saying a word. He opened it, and found everything he wanted, down to the minutest detail. That evening he sent the amount which he had offered to the officer's house in a box addressed to his wife. It was £5,000."

IN WASHINGTON.

(Editorial Correspondence Daily Chronicle.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 22, 1888.

The most absorbing question discussed on all sides now is, who will constitute Gen. Harrison's Cabinet? If one was to believe a tenth of the stories told with great exactness and apparently in good faith by men who have "inside information" direct from headquarters, and who impress you with their sincerity, the Cabinet room at the White House, with its handsome mahogany table and eight chairs, would not hold all the members of the next Cabinet, if they were packed in like sardines in a box.

After all it is going to be a lottery so far as the public are concerned. The friends of each candidate are so absolutely certain that their favorite is going to be one of the lucky ones, that they won't wait until Gen. Harrison acts but have begun already to pick out the offices they expect to secure. There will be mourning among some of these office-seekers when the Cabinet is announced. Although I have not been in the city twenty-four hours, and am not entirely unfamiliar with the wire pulling now going on, several gentlemen have told me in great confidence that they know Mr. Blaine, Mr. Sherman, and Gen. Alger, are each to go into the State Department. It is useless to reason with such informants because they "know" what they say, but the truth is they know nothing, and have poor judgment when guessing. It is safe to say that every office in Washington, paying two thousand dollars and upwards, has been picked out by at least a dozen good, patriotic republicans—who were the first to suggest Harrison as a candidate—and they are only waiting for the administration to change to step into the places. I see many old familiar faces, men who held lucrative positions when Cleveland came into the White House, but who were told to get their living elsewhere, and they did. They are here expecting restoration, but the chances are that most of them will be disappointed and that under the new order of things new men will come to the front. This will cause disappointment and heart burnings, but it is politics, and every man who goes into politics ought to accept defeat philosophically.

The readers of the CHRONICLE would no doubt like to know something about the new Cabinet, and so would I. It is not possible to get any accurate information on this subject for the very good reason that Gen. Harrison has managed to keep his counsel so well that no one here knows what conclusion he has reached in his own mind.

I had an hour's talk today with a well known Republican leader, who went to Indianapolis recently at the request of Gen. Harrison to talk over matters. He told me that while the president-elect talked with him nearly one whole afternoon and asked perhaps a thousand questions during that time about men and the policy to be pursued after the Republican party came into power again, yet he came away without any idea as to whom Gen. Harrison would call into his Cabinet. From remarks that the latter dropped during the interview, he was convinced in his own mind that some of the Republicans very prominently talked of for Cabinet appointments stood no show whatever, but beyond this negative information he was no wiser when he left Indianapolis than when he reached there. There is some interesting political gossip afloat which will be laid before the readers of the CHRONICLE in another letter.

THE SPEAKERSHIP QUESTION.

Although I have elsewhere said that there would probably be no extra session of Congress, the canvass for the Speakership proceeding vigorously, and the several candidates are not idling time away in ascertaining the position of the members elected to the 51st Congress. The present contest is unlike any that has come within my observation during the past twenty-two years, and only shows to what extent the recent campaign left its imprint upon the country.

Heretofore it has been mainly a struggle between the popularity of the respective candidates or a question of locality, governed perhaps by the control of certain blocks of votes, for though we then had vast armies and the most powerful navy in the world, and now have neither army nor navy, the nation is now united, instead of being, as then, engaged in a civil conflict the most mighty the world ever saw. While it is certain that we are not in condition to go over to Europe to discipline a nation there, it is equally certain that no European nation could come here and discipline us on our own soil, although any great naval power could inflict immense damage upon our sea-coast cities.

There are five candidates who may be considered as contesting for the honor of presiding over the next House, and these are Reed of Maine, McKinley of Ohio, Henderson of Iowa, Cameron of Illinois and Burroughs of Michigan. Of these Reed and McKinley represent what is known as the prohibitory tariff element in the Republican party, that is they are so identified with the tariff and believe it so essential to the welfare of the Country that they would be entirely willing to build a Chinese wall around American industries and not allow foreign productions to come into competition at all, but exclude them entirely from our shores. They are known among their colleagues as ultra protectionists, ready at any time if necessary to favor prohibition to save American industries. Messrs. Cameron and Henderson are not so pronounced in their views, but favor a protective tariff system pure and simple, one which will afford ample protection to American industries, without making the duty on foreign articles such as would actually amount to prohibition.

Mr. Burroughs, the fifth candidate, is one who favors a "revenue for tariff only with incidental protection" rather than a strictly protective duty.

On these lines the contest is to be waged and at this time it looks very much as though the effect is not going to be wholesome for the Republican party, in that it will have a tendency to create division lines in the party and array the North and East against the West, which has never been so strong for a high tariff, and has until the late campaign been regarded as drifting slowly but surely towards free trade. Of the strength of the several candidates the talk among Congressmen is that Mr. Reed will enter the caucus with practically all the votes of New England, part of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, aggregating at least double those of any other candidate, but yet far short of a majority.

Major McKinley will have the solid vote of the Ohio delegation, some votes in Pennsylvania, New York, Indiana and other Western States. His candidacy has only assumed a positive form since Ben Butterworth—who would make a model Speaker—has announced that he will not be a candidate against his colleague, but will work for his success. Exactly why Butterworth should withdraw is not known, especially as he is known to be stronger with the Ohio delegation than Major McKinley, and has elements of popularity not possessed by any of the other candidates, and is regarded as the coming man in the West by many of the shrewdest political observers.

Mr. Cameron and Mr. Henderson of Iowa will go into the fight with their own delegations behind them and scattering votes from other States. Mr. Burroughs of Michigan, who is a good talker and personally very much liked, will of course have his own delegation, and perhaps that of Minnesota to start off with.

The election is too far off to form any idea yet as to the result, and the events of the next few months may so change the situation as to bring forward other candidates, and mix things up generally. As matters now stand Mr. Reed has undoubtedly a good lead, and if he can hold it, he will carry off the coveted honor. If Gen. Harrison should select a Cabinet Minister from Maine that would work to Mr. Reed's injury in the Speakership contest, in that it would influence members from Eastern States who failed to secure representation from their own States in the Cabinet, not to thrust additional political honors upon Maine. As to the possibility or probability of this happening I shall take occasion to write in another letter.

AN EXTRA SESSION IMPROBABLE.

One hears a great deal of talk in the hotel lobbies and among the politicians concerning an extra session of Congress, but after very careful enquiry I am entirely satisfied that the Republican leaders are decidedly opposed to one being held, and that Gen. Harrison concurs with them. It is believed to be unwise from a political standpoint to have Congress come together in an extaa session before Gen. Harrison is fairly in the saddle and has some knowledge of the Generals under him. An extra session would undoubtedly necessitate a declaration of the policy of the administration on certain questions before it had time to fully consider and formulate such a policy, and would otherwise prove embarrassing.

Gen. Harrison in his inaugural address on the 4th of March will undoubtedly enunciate his line of policy on all public questions as far as he cares to go at that time, and will defer the treatment of other questions until Congress comes together in December in regular session.

SCOTT.

Mr. Edmunds' resolution, now before the senate committee on foreign relations, declaring that the United States would view with disfavor the control by any foreign nation of a canal across the isthmus of Darien, is of course intended mainly for France, although that country is not mentioned. It is merely a reaffirmation of the Monroe doctrine, but it is made in good time, for the collapse of the private company which has spent so many millions on the canal makes it doubtful if the vast undertaking can be completed, certainly not for many years, by private enterprise unaided by some national government. And France, or Louis Napoleon, who at that time was really France, did once interfere in affairs on this continent in a manner anything but pleasing to this country, and the intermeddling was kept up for several years, until our government got its hands free, when the intruder was promptly kicked out. We are in a better position now to enforce the Monroe doctrine than we were when Louis Napoleon ruled the French nation, for though we

The Sun.

FOR 1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

JOHN D. RANDALL.

We saw her tripping down the village streets
A vision fair that brighter made the day.
Beneath a snowy skirt her dainty feet
Played hide and seek in quite a charming way.

The maid was costumed in the latest style;
Her bustle was the regular size;
Her lips were parted with a winning smile
And mischief sparkled in her bright blue eyes.

Her cheeks were glowing like the crimson bright
That tints the skies when Sol sinks in the west;
Between her coral lips gleamed teeth as white
As foam that flashes on the billow's crest.

She neared us and our hearts went pit-a-pat;
She passed us with a pretty, conscious air;
And then we noticed that her dainty hat
Was perched on massive coils of rich red hair.

Up street and down we gazed with eager eyes
As disappeared from view the vision bright;
Then at each other stared in dumb surprise;
It was a miss: no white horse hove in sight.
—Boston Courier.

LOVED THROUGH ALL.

"What do you say to a shopping expedition?" asked Kate Belmont. "I have a dress to make and want to see the new styles. Opening days are advertised at most of the leading shops. Let's go and get ideas."

"Agreed," said Alma Nugent. "If there is anything I admire, it's to see the Paris dresses."

"Papa hasn't given me any allowance yet," said Kate's cousin, Flora, "so you must count me out."

Alma and Kate exchanged amused glances.

"Hear the innocent creature!" said the latter laughingly. "She thinks money an essential for opening days. Why, cousin mine, the goods are put up to be looked at and admired. No one is expected to buy. All we have to do is to walk round and use our eyes. It's splendid fun, Flo, and you'll see everybody."

So the three girls put on their walking dresses and started forth. Shop after shop was visited, and goods and suits were examined and commented on.

Kate and Alma, being city girls, enjoyed it; but Flora soon became weary. In one of the leading shops the "opening" was set for the following day, but the obliging young sales-woman took down box after box, unfolded the rich contents, and displayed them to their best advantage.

Kate and Alma looked on and praised or criticised, but said not a word about their non-intention to purchase, until the girl had taken out about a dozen different costumes. Then Flora's indignation rose to white heat.

"Kate," she said energetically, "I think it is a shame to put any one to so much trouble when you haven't the slightest intention of buying."

"It is all right," said the saleswoman pleasantly. "We are accustomed to show our goods. It's what we are here for."

One of the proprietors had approached, unobserved by the girls. He had overheard Flora's impulsive words, and a suppressed smile hovered about his lips as he said:

"Good-morning, Miss Belmont; a pleasant day."

With an effort Kate recovered her equanimity, and introduced her friends. Mr. Fay chatted with them a few moments; then they passed on. His eyes followed Flora with an expression of keen interest, and he thought:

"I would like to see more of that frank young cousin of Miss Kate's. She's as pretty as she is outspoken. Well, 'Honesty thou art indeed a jewel!' I shall makeit in my way to call at Miss Belmont's very soon."

Much to the surprise of the trio Mr. Fay called that evening, and made himself very entertaining.

Upon leaving he invited them for a drive in the park, if the next morning should be pleasant, saying to Kate that, with permission, while her friends remained, he would be at her service in showing them about the city.

Kate was well pleased. Mr. Fay was a wealthy bachelor, and considered quite a "catch" among her set.

Invitations to various places of interest, and to lectures and concerts, followed in rapid succession, the gentleman distributing his attentions with such impartiality that it was impossible to tell which of the young ladies was the favorite. This role was kept up until Alma and Flora returned home.

Then he wrote to Flora and asked permission to call upon her at her own house.

It made quite a sensation in the quiet country neighborhood to see his elegant equipage drawn up before Farmer Knight's gate once or twice in a week; and as it grew to be the talk of the village that Flora was about to make a grand match, it soon reached the ears of Wilfred Benedict, and occasioned him keen pain.

He had loved Flora since they had been boy and girl at school together; but being dependent upon his own exertions as he grew to man's estate, the difference in their circumstances had sealed his lips.

Still, bright visions of the future shared by Flora had kept him from despondency. He was studying to prepare himself for the profession which was to win him a name and a competence, so that he could ask her to be his wife.

Now, as he heard the rumor of her approaching marriage, it seemed to take the moving spring of his life away from him. He discontinued his never frequent visits at the farm, for he could not endure to see the girl he loved bestowing her smiles upon this stranger.

Had he been versed in the workings of a woman's heart, he would not thus have abandoned the field to his wealthy rival without a struggle; for Wilfred's was a face and form well calculated to please the eye, and his dark eyes shone with the fires of intellect.

Flora was not well pleased at the apparent indifference of her old friend, and scarcely vouchsafed him a glance when they met.

Some girls in her position would have accepted Mr. Fay from sheer pique as Wilfred's apparent desertion; but Flora refused him.

"Let us be friends," she said, "for I esteem you truly," when he tried to induce her to reconsider her decision; "but you are too noble and true to marry a wife who does not love you."

He saw it was useless to press his suit, and so they parted.

Mr. Fay felt lonely and ill at ease for a time. The hope of winning Flora had been very pleasant to him. In his disappointment he turned to Kate for entertainment, at first hoping to hear some chance news of her cousin, then from a growing fancy for Kate herself. So "many a heart is caught in the rebound," and so was Mr. Fay's.

Kate had always regarded him with favor, aside from the knowledge that, as his wife, she would be mistress of an elegant mansion, and of one of the handsomest turn-outs in the city.

Soon the village gossips had something else to talk about.

It wasn't Miss Flora's beau after all; for he often brings a young lady to woman, too; not such a little dark thing, but fair and large. One who looks like a queen in his grand carriage.

This, too, Wilfred heard. Could it have been a mistake after all? And had he been wilfully throwing away his own chances of happiness, prompted by his wild jealousy?

The next morning he was walking down a shady lane. The sunlight was sifting its gold down through the swaying leaves upon the velvet-green of the daisy-starred grass.

Birds flitted from bough to bough, and a golden robin glanced in and out among the branches like a bit of animated sunshine. But Wilfred's heart was heavy, and he noticed not the wonderful pageantry of nature.

Suddenly a light footfall struck upon his ear, and raising his eyes he saw Flora. Her slight figure and blooming face seemed like a part of the sylvan scene. A basket filled with white pond-lilies rested on her arm.

How their subtle fragrance recalled childish days! Many a time had he waded into the tiny lake—which gleamed into the background like a silver mirror in its emerald setting—for lilies to please the imperative little black-eyed maiden, who had stood on the bank rosy and smiling at his mishaps; for the long flexile stems had a fashion of eluding his eager grasp, and many an involuntary bath had been the penalty.

But it was no smiling maiden who was now before him. A haughty little head, erected in studied stateliness; red lips, whose pouting curves were hidden by a sternness foreign to the pretty face, but which was in full harmony with the cold averted eyes, as she passed him by without a glance.

He moved to her side with a sudden impulse.

"Flora," he said, "forgive me. I was mad with jealousy."

Flora turned upon him like a young princess. Her eyes flashed sudden fire.

"Forgive you! For what, sir? I am not aware of any injury you have done me."

Wilfred shrank back, humbled and confused. There had been no engagement between them. It was true. He had no right to apologise. Neglect was a word which could not be coupled with Flora's name. Still, he must explain. So he continued:

"You must know, Flora, although you ignore it in such a queenly way, what the thought of you has ever been to me, inciting me onward and upward so as to become worthy of you. Then, when news of your engagement came——"

Flora interrupted him scornfully.

"So Mr. Benedict takes for his oracle village gossip. He will always find it as unsatisfactory as it is false. Please let me pass."

And so they parted.

The next news that came was that Wilfred Benedict had gone abroad. He had excepted a position as tutor to a young gentleman who was to travel for several years.

Time passed on. Kate was married and settled in her handsome home. Flora was ever a welcome guest, and usually spent a part of the year there. Daily during her visits Mrs. Fay's handsome equipage was drawn up before the door, awaiting its fair occupants—the stately matron and the cousin whose dark tropical beauty had grown even more striking than in her early girlhood.

One day as they were driving leisurely along through one of the pleasant avenues in the park, Kate surprised Flora by turning and looking at her a moment intently, as she leaned back against the rich cushions.

"Flo," she said, "it has always been a wonder to me that you have not married. You are as attractive again as I am."

"Time enough yet, Kate," laughed Flora. "I am only twenty-four. Not quite on the spinster list yet."

"But," persisted Kate, "why didn't you set your cap for Mr. Fay? He was immensely taken with you. Do you remember the day when you proved such a naughty little marplot to our shopping expedition? Well, that was the beginning of Mr. Fay's frequent calls at our house. Before that he had put in an appearance New Years and had attended mamma's parties, but that had been all; and I had an idea that he was amused by that sharp speech of yours. I saw by the twinkle in his eyes that he had heard it."

"Then the 'marplot' made a good match for her cousin; for if Mr. Fay had not come to see me he could not have found out what a jewel my cousin Kate is, could he, dear?"

Kate tapped her cheek playfully with her fan.

"Cousin Flo, I never had an idea before that you could flatter."

So Flora avoided the troublesome question.

It was the time of the visit of the Russian grand duke to this country. Cards had been issued for a grand entertainment in his honor.

As Flora came down on the evening of the party, Kate, who was waiting for her in the parlor, uttered an exclamation of pleasure.

"Flo, what have you done to yourself? You look like a fairy princess."

Out of a cloud of fluffy cream-colored lace rose a face of purest oval outlines; the dimpled cheeks and chin, and the red smiling mouth, the magnificent dark eyes, and the wealth of glossy hair, out of which scintillated the iridescent light from a quivering diamond spray (Kate's gift), formed a picture worthy of an artist's admiration.

Flora was a favorite of the hostess, who kept her near her through the early part of the evening, so that she was among the first to be introduced to the distinguished guests.

One tall fine-looking officer, after a time, devoted himself almost exclusively to her. He was bronzed from exposure to the sun, and his heavy beard and moustache completely hid the lower part of his face, but his commanding forehead and large brilliant eyes, his stately form, decorated upon the breast with a glittering token of his sovereign's favor, made him an object of interest second only to the young grand duke.

In the confusion of hearing so many strange unpronounceable names, Flora had caught but the sound of the military title—General. So she addressed him by that alone.

They conversed for a time in French, as Flora knew it to be a language familiar to every educated Russian.

After a time, however, with a sudden smile in his dark eyes, the general said playfully, relaxing from the courtly gravity of his previous manner:

"Let us descend once more into the common-place world, Miss Knight, and talk over old times."

As Flora looked at him in amazement, he continued, evidently enjoying her mystification:

"It is evident that my memory of faces is better than is your own. Let Benedict. Will you give me a flower from your bouquet, in token that there is peace between us?"

Without a moment's hesitation, Flora selected the only rosebud in her nosegay, and gave it to him.

With a pleasant look he fastened it in his button-hole.

With a little tremor in her voice, Flora said:

"I did not know you. You are very much changed."

"Yes; the husk has grown brown and rough; but the kernel is still the same."

His low deep tones gave a peculiar significance to his words, and made Flora's color rival the "red, red rose;" but she was not displeased. Old memories were busy at her heart. She had always loved Wilfred, even when, angry at his supposed neglect, she had sent him from her so coldly and proudly.

All was soon explained. While traveling in Russia with his pupil, it had been his good fortune to do a service to a member of the royal family, and had thus come under the notice of the Czar, who seemed specially attracted by Wilfred. He had been offered a position in the army, and as his time with his pupil had expired, accepted it. Rising rapidly to his present high rank, he had been honored by being chosen to accompany the royal youth on his visit to England.

Flora listened with shining eyes to the general's story; then she said:

"I always knew you would succeed in life; and I am as glad as though you were my own brother."

The general bent and whispered:

"I am very grasping. A sisterly interest will not satisfy me. Flora," and his manly face grew intensely interesting, "I have been looking forward to this meeting during all my years of exile. Will you not promise to become to me that nearest and dearest of all relations—my wife?"

"Yes, Wilfred," said Flora softly, "for I too, have loved you through all."

In this, the supreme moment of her life, Flora felt that her lover should be answered simply and truly, as his loyal heart deserved.

And the gay fashionable throng surged by, smiling at the supposed flirtation between the noble-looking young officer and the beautiful girl, little thinking they were spectators of a reconciliation between long-estranged lovers.

It was not many days, however, before Madam Rumor learned the truth, and with her thousand tongues whispered it about broad-cast; so that when a brilliant wedding-party gathered to witness the nuptials of Wilfred and Flora, each heart among the guests beat with a throb of that universal sympathy which makes the "whole world kin" on such occasions.

Lexington.

Slowly the mist o'er the meadow was creeping,
Bright on the dewy buds glistened the sun,
When from his couch, while his children were sleeping,
Rose the bold rebel, and shouldered his gun.
Waiting her golden veil
Over the recent dale,
Blithe looked the morning on cottage and spire;
Hushed was his parting sigh,
While from his noble eye
Flashed the last sparkle of Liberty's fire.

On the smooth green where the fresh leaf is springing,
Calmly the first-born of glory have met;
Hush! the death-valley around them is ringing!
Look! with their life-blood the young grass is wet!
Faint is the feeble breath,
Murmuring low in death,
"Tell to your sons how their fathers have have died";
Nerveless the iron hand,
Raised for its native land,
Lies by the weapon that gleams at its side.

Over the hillsides the wild knell is tolling,
From their far hamlets the yeomanry come;
As through the storm-clouds the thunder-burst rolling,
Circles the beat of the mustering drum.
Fast on the soldier's path
Darken the waves of wrath,
Long have they gathered, and loud shall they fall;
Red glares the musket's flash,
Sharp rings the rifle's crash,
Blazing and clanging from thicket and wall.

Snow-girdle crags where the hoarse wind is raving,
Rocks where the weary floods murmur and wail,
Wide where the fern by the furrow is waving,
Reeled with the echoes that rode on the gale;
Far the tempest thrills,
Over the darkened hills,
Far as the mountain streams roll over the plain,
Roused by the tyrant band,
Woke all the mighty land,
Girded for battle, from mountain to main.

Green be the graves where her martyrs are lying!
Shroudless and tombless they to their rest,—
While o'er their ashes the starry fold flying,
Wraps the proud eagle they roused from his nest.
Borne on her northern pine,
Long o'er the foamy brine,
Spread her broad banner to storm and to sun!
Heaven keep her ever free,
Wide as o'er land and sea,
Floats the fair emblem her heroes have won!
—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

BEN'S GOOD LUCK.

Rosy cheeks, blue eyes, auburn hair, a plump form, faultless teeth that gleamed when she laughed—that was Rosie Fenn.

A tall, muscular, dark featured young man, with a bristling mustache, black eyes and brown hair—that was Benjamin Fales. Nobody could make a popgun or a "hummer" quite so well as Ben—Uncle Ben we used to call him. Rosie was only our hired girl and Ben drove a truck for a dry goods house, but the same Cupid that shoots his arrows on Fifth avenue had aimed his missiles at Ben and mayhap at Rosie. There was no mistaking that Ben was in love with her. I hid behind the kitchen door—boy like, and saw him take her shrinking hand and heard him tell her how he worshipped the ground she walked on.

I could not then understand why she tossed her head and told Ben that he was a fool, and that he hadn't money enough to keep a mouse, let alone supporting a wife. Then she ran away and Ben strode off to his work looking terribly sad. And what did Rosie do but rush into the sitting-room, throw herself face downward on the old hair-cloth sofa, and sob as if her heart was breaking.

I tried to comfort her, for she thought much of me; but I felt somehow that I had blundered when she sprang up, her blue eyes all wet with tears, seized my arm, and said: "So you played eavesdropper, did you? If you ever tell Ben that I cried I will box your ears."

The very next evening as Rosie was bustling about the house, there came a knock at the door, and who should come in but Bob Fallon. I was young, but I knew enough to realize that Bob was in love with Rosie just as Ben was. I didn't like Bob, but I envied him. He was a locomotive engineer, and once he took me aboard his engine and let me ride with him from the station to the round-house. How insignificant poor Ben, driving a truck, appeared to Bob running an engine. And yet I loved Ben and hated Bob. I almost hated Rosie because she smiled on Bob thetic ears, but she only shook her head and said: "You must never think of marrying Rosie." He went away sorrowful, but in a few days he returned to my mother, his honest face radiant with pleasure. He had secured a place as fireman on the road where Bob ran, and had been promised a place as engineer as soon as he had the necessary experience on the line. It wasn't long before Ben, who somehow had influence with the company, came to tell us that he had been made an engineer. Rosie was present, but she didn't seem to hail his good fortune with any interest. Bob came in, glowered at Ben, and sat down near Rosie. She smiled on him, listened intently to the stories of his railroad experiences, and Ben finally left the house looking very disconsolate.

It was a proud day for me when I stood at the depot and saw Ben board the great engine of which he was master, pull its shining lever, and send it flying over the rails. Ben wasn't a learned man, but it was as good as a novel to hear him afterward tell his sensations when for the first time he opened the throttle-valve and felt the great machine moving at his will.

Poor Ben! Not a month had gone when he came to our house utterly crestfallen. He had lost his situation. The journals of his engine had been ruined on one of his trips and the master mechanic had discharged him for carelessness. "Yet I know I oiled all the bearings," said Ben. "I can't understand how it happened." Rosie tossed her head higher than ever when she heard of Ben's ill fortune, and gave him not a word of comfort. Ben called my mother out of the room and again begged her to intercede with Rosie in his behalf. "Ben," said mother, "I must tell you the truth. Rosie will become a lunatic. Her mother was one before her. She realizes her fate. You wouldn't have a maniac for a wife, would you?"

What did Ben say but declare that he would not believe that Rosie was threatened with insanity. It was a long time before we saw him again and then he called to tell us that he had been given a job as fireman on Ben Fallon's engine. Bob had ceased to come to our house, and I suspect that he had learned the sad story of Rosie's impending fate. She grew pale and sad, and no one heard her laugh and sing as she used to do. I grew almost afraid of her.

One day came a message for Rosie with the words, "Your father is dying; come home at once." A week passed and Rosie returned dressed in black, which became her well. Strange to say she looked almost joyful, and her first act was to whisper something to my mother which made her look happy and exclaim: "You don't says so! Now you and Ben——"

"Hush!" said Rosie as the blushes mantled her cheeks. She hurried away, to get supper, and while she was at her work and I was loitering on the front door step newsboys came along shouting, "Extra! All about the great railroad accident!"

Mother purchased a paper, cast her eyes over it, and then ran to the kitchen, threw her arms about Rosie, and began to cry. "Dear child, Ben is dying," was all she could say. Rosie shed no tears. Her face blanched. She ran for her hat and wrap and asked: "Where is he?"

"At the hospital," answered mother; "but you shall not go there alone." At this mother put on her shawl and the two went out to see poor Ben. There was no supper for us that night, to be sure. I went with them, and it seemed an age that we had to wait in the hospital office. A brakeman who had been on the wrecked train was there, and he told us how it happened. The engine had jumped the track, toppled over on its side, and buried Ben and Bob beneath the ruins. When men came up to release Ben he said: "Get Bob out first; he's hurt worse than I." As soon as they could they removed Bob from under the wreckage and laid him all mangled and bloody beside the track, and then Ben was taken out. Bob's face had grown ashy and his eyes glazed as the train hands bent over him and heard this:

"Tell Ben to forgive. I was the cause of his losing his place as engineer. I put emery dust in the oil can of his engine. That's why the journals burnt out. I was jealous of him. Tell the master mechanic."

Before the train reached the city Bob was dead, and there seemed to be little life left in Ben. But he rallied, and when we finally reached his bedside he had regained consciousness. While the house physician was telling my mother that he would live, but that he might be a cripple for life, Rosie was on her knees at his side, and smoothing his pale brow.

"Dear Ben," said she.

"What is it, Rosie?" he murmured.

"You must get well for my sake."

"But you said you would never marry."

"That was before I knew, dear," exclaimed Rosie. "I supposed I was doomed to be crazy like my mother—no, not my mother, but the woman who made me believe I was her child. Father died last week, and just before he breathed his last he told me the truth. I was an adopted child, and there is no crazy blood in my veins. Oh, Ben, I am so happy, or I would be if you were well."

There wasn't much strength left in Ben's arm, but it managed to steal around Rosie's shoulder, and even the dignified doctor looked not at all shocked when her lips sought those of honest Ben.

Ben lived and—well, while I am writing this in Rosie's sitting room she is at the window of her cottage that looks out on the railroad track. "Ben's train is late," says she.

"No it isn't, Mrs. Ben," I exclaimed.

"Go and get his supper."

Just then there was a roar and a whistle—Ben always gives a peculiar whistle as he passes the cottage—and then the express rushes by, and we catch a glimpse of engineer Ben at the window.

"Ben is never late," I say, and Rosie, as she runs out into the kitchen to get his meal, murmurs: "Dear Ben!" with great emphasis on the word "dear."—Chicago Mail.

Wanted His Reward on Earth.

Just as a friend of ours, who lives in Winslow, had completed a watering trough by the roadside and stood watching it as it filled with clear, cool water from the spring above an elderly couple, of well-to-do appearance, stopped for their horse to drink. Noting the delight of the animal and realizing the benefit of the contrivance to the public, the lady remarked to Mr. D——: "The Lord will reward you for this." "I have no doubt of it, madam," said D——, with a low bow and a twinkle in his eye, "but I shall make out my bill to the Selectmen."—Waterville (Me.) Mail.

The Laziest Scheme Ever Invented for Capturing the Finny Tribe.

The man who invented the Columbia river salmon wheel was a genius. The laziest fisherman who ever baited a hook could ask no easier way of landing fish. And only the fact that it can only be used at certain points on the stream prevents this machine from exterminating the salmon in one season. Imagine a common undershot wheel, with the buckets turned wrong way about. This is set in a high narrow flume near the bank of the river, where the current is very swift. From the down stream end of this flume, extended outward at an angle of forty-five degrees, are two upright fences, formed by pickets driven closely together into the bottom of the river, and wired to keep them from washing away. Just above the wheel (which is some ten feet in diameter), at the up stream end, is a platform, from which a box flume runs to the shore.

Now let us see how it works. When the salmon are running, as every body knows, they come up in the Columbia river by millions. The stream is very deep, and a large percentage always succeed in getting to the breeding grounds in safety. When salmon are running up a river they are constantly on the lookout for small streams in which to spawn. Also where the current is very swift they are unable to make headway in the center of the stream, and consequently seek the more quiet water near the bank. Of these two instincts the inventor of the fish wheel took a mean advantage. At the Cascades, for instance, where the water is very swift, he sets his wheel. Here come the fish, hugging the bank by thousands—great black fellows, from two to four feet long, heading resolutely up stream. Nothing can turn them backward. That wonderful instinct of nature which insures the preservation of species is nowhere better developed than in a salmon. Now they are just below that widespread fence. The current, which is rushing through the flumes, and turning the big wheel at a lively pace, attracts their attention. The upper fence, which sets nearly square across the stream, makes quiet water there, and this flow seems to come from the bank. This, to the salmon's mind, is evidently the mouth of a shallow creek. Here is a spawning ground to our liking, and up this little stream we go. So they crowd up between the two narrowing fences toward the fatal wheel. The first fish reaches it, goes with a rush to overcome the current, is caught by a bucket, and up he goes high in the air, while every bucket brings up another and another, till there is a procession of ascending fish. At the top the velocity throws the fish violently upon the platform, from which he shoots down the flume to a great tank on the shore. Here come the fish, crowding each other forward to the busy wheel. None can go under nor to one side. None will go back. And once a school starts for a wheel the owner can consider that he has a title deed to the entire lot.

One wheel will run a cannery. Day and night, while the run lasts, they come flying up the wheel and shooting down the flume in a continuous stream. Fortunately there are but few places on the river where the wheels can be worked with this result. Where the fish can keep in the middle of the river few can be caught in this way. But the men who control these points are making fortunes. As it is salmon are rapidly disappearing from the Columbia.—Livermore Herald.

The hippopotamus seems to be as surely on the road to extermination by hunters as the American buffalo is. Von Francois, the Congo explorer, says the huge but innocent pachyderms are already scarce in the waters that once teemed with them, and laments that they have been shot down by hundreds in mere wanton sport, their valuable hides being rarely removed.—Science.

A New Year's Resolve—try to Win Fortune.

On Tuesday, (always Tuesday,) November 13th, 1888, the 22d Grand Monthly Drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery took place under the sole supervision of Gens. G. T. Beauregard of La., and Jubal A. Early of Va. as usual. The prizes were from $100 to $300,000. No. 76 621 drew First Capital Prize of $300,000. It was sold in fractional parts of $1, and sent to M. A. Dauphin, New Orleans, La. One part was collected by P. G. Miller, Plattsmouth, Neb.; one by Lydia Behne, 348 6th St., New Orleans, La.; one by Ed. Clayton, 332 Sixth St., Louisville, Ky.; one by E. J. Curtin, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, Ill.; one by Mrs. M. Asael, 78 W. Houston St., New York City; one by Wm. Rowan, 414 Laml St., St Louis, Mo.; one by a depositor through Wells, Fargo & Co., San Francisco, Cal.; one by Mrs. C. York, care of A. S. Blake, agent, 309 Canal St., New York City; one by Casper Weaver, Waverly, Mo.; one by Edmund C. and Geo. C. Albert, 163 W. Maple St., Dayton, O.; one by G. Perazzo, Truckee, Cal. No. 99,381 drew Second Capital Prize of $100,000, and No. 75,577 drew Third Capital Prize of $50,000, and No. 58 856 drew Fourth Capital Prize of $25,000, a list of winners too long to enumerate. The next drawing will be on Jan. 15th, 1889, when you should resolve to try to win with the New Year a fortune.

—Mr. Edwin R. Pearson, who has secured a very agreeable situation in the Thompson-Houston Electric Light company's works at Lynn, is in the city visiting his parents on Broad street, over the holidays.

—Mrs. Elizabeth Libbey of Eliot is visiting friends at Lynn for a few weeks.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT KITTERY.

About twenty minutes after four o'clock Monday afternoon Mr. Stephen Osborne was struck by an engine on the York Harbor & Beach railroad in Jenkin's hollow, Kittery, and was instantly killed. Mr. Osburne was making his way east, and was met by employes of the railroad who were on a handcar, and were obliged to stop to avoid running him down. They warned him that a wild engine would soon pass, but being extremely hard of hearing, he probably did not understand them and kept on, walking on the track. Mr. Osborne was also troubled with poor sight, and undoubtedly this fact combined with the fact that the engine coming head on, near a curve, and was struck by it and thrown down the embankment, death probably being instantaneous, as there were few bruises on the body, one however on the head being considered necessarily fatal. Mr. Osborne was about seventy years of age, and resided at Kittery with his son, Frank M. Osborne, who is employed at the harness shop of John S. Tilton in this city. He has another son and a daughter residing in Holly, Orleans county, New York, whence he himself came about two years ago. He was a builder by trade, bore an excellent reputation as such, and was highly spoken of by all who knew him.

It is reported that the same engine, while returning to Kittery Point from this city, barely missed striking Mr. Alonzo A. Hayes of Kittery at Patch's crossing, near the navy yard station. No blame is attached to the engine men, who are said to be careful and reliable men.

MUSIC HALL.

Of Hyde's Big Specialty company, which is to be at Music hall tomorrow evening, the Boston Herald of Dec. 11th said:

The reputation of the performers included in Hyde's big specialty company, which was the attraction presented to the patrons of the Howard Athenæum last evening, had the effect of completely filling the house. The entertainment given was excellent, and was fully appreciated by the audience. The performance was opened by Mr. Imro Fox, the comic conjuror, who not only mystified everybody, but greatly amused them as well. Harry Watson, the old-timer, who has set thousands of audiences in a roar during his career on the stage, appeared with Miss Alice Hutchins in a clever and laughable character sketch. They were followed by Miss Helene Mora, who is the fortunate possessor of a remarkable baritone voice, in several character songs. Then came Smith and Lord in their funny trapeze act, being succeeded by James McAvoy in a number of new and "catchy" songs. Conroy and Dempsey, Irish comedians, appeared in a funny act, and the American Four concluded the entertainment with their uproariously comical sketch entitled, "Scene in a Restaurant."

Tickets now on sale at Goodrich's; see advertisement.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT.

Mr. S. P. Abbott of Eliot, who is station agent at York Harbor, on the York Harbor & Beach railroad, met with a painful and serious accident, on his way to his station Monday morning. He took the train leaving Portsmouth at 8:30 A. M. and stood at the open door of the baggage car, swinging his right leg in and out. As the train was crossing one of the bridges on the line, his leg was struck by a truss and badly broken above the knee. Dr. Whittier of this city was sent for at once and responded to the call, and with Dr. Hawkes of York set the bones of the injured limb. The friends of Mr. Abbott will sympathize with him in his misfortune, and wish him an early recovery.

CHEEKY THIEVES.

About midnight Saturday night Mrs. Downs, widow of Mr. John B. Downs, who lives on the corner of Water and Hancock streets, hearing a noise in her yard looked out of the window, and seeing two men enveloped in waterproofs such as woman wear, near her hencoop, asked what they were doing, and received for answer an invitation to "go to ——!" The ruffians carried off seven hens. It is to be hoped their Christmas dinner will very badly disagree with their digestion. They evidently knew there was no man in the house at the time.

The schooner Grace K. Green, Seaward master, arrived at this port last week with coal to C. E. Walker & Co., and was berthed in Walker's dock with her stern toward the head of the dock. The coal was taken out of the vessel forward, which let her down by the stern, and when the tide fell she sat down on her heel so hard that her rudder braces were broken and her rudder driven up through the casing, doing considerable damage.

The steamer Lancaster arrived at the Concord railroad wharf at nine o'clock Friday morning, and left at 2:50 Saturday afternoon, having put out 1625 tons of coal in thirteen hours and thirty-five minutes, with four gangs of men, beating all previous records over an hour.

The catch of fish in Ipswich bay was very light during the early part of last week. The netters, of which a large number—fifteen or more—commenced the winter-fishing season here, had from the start had such continued poor luck that many of them took up their nets and went home to refit for trawling. Of the few remaining, nearly all had their nets badly damaged by the gale of the 18th. On the 19th about 20,000 lbs. of fish was & Co., Edw. Jameson and Robinson & Woodbury, at $5 25 per hundred pounds, the highest price paid for a long while. On the 21st about 30,000 lbs. came in the Water Lily bringing 3,000 lbs.; Emerald, 5,000; Albert Woodbury, 9,000; Margaret, 3,000; Etta, 6,000; and sloop Iris, 500. The prices paid on the 21st ranged from $3 to $4 per hundred. The schooner Etta, of Swampscott, Mass., started for home on the morning of the 22d, after a highly successful week's fishing, she having brought in good fares to a high market, and stocked over thirteen hundred dollars, which gave each man of the crew over a hundred dollars for his week's work.

Coal rates from Baltimore to this port at the close of last week were quoted at $1.80 and $1.85 per ton; to Boston or Portland, $1.75.

Laxador, is the remedy now mostly relied upon when a good purgative family medicine is needed. All druggists sell it for 25 cents a package.

The deadening preparations of opium for the baby are rapidly disappearing before the use of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Sold by all druggists.

Christmas trees this evening—Middle street Baptist society in their chapel; Methodist society in their church; Congregational society in their chapel. Tomorrow evening, Universalist society in their vestry. Thursday evening, Unitarian society in Franklin hall.

Do you suffer from catarrh? You can be cured if you take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. Sold by all druggists.

Poultry was not plentiful in this city on Monday, and hens' eggs were almost as scarce as hens' teeth. A gentleman who went hunting for a goose for his Christmas dinner reported that he could find but one solitary bird of the kind in the city, and not caring to leave the market entirely bare he bought a turkey.

CHRISTMAS GROCERIES. — Everybody wants the best eatables for Christmas. I have the largest and best assortment of all kinds of Fancy Groceries, Table Prunes, Table Raisins, Malaga Grapes, Bananas, Glace Fruits, Tangerine Oranges, Imported Cheese, New Cider, Wines, Liqueurs, Candies, etc. Popular prices for fine goods. JOHN LAIGHTON, No. 1 Market Square.

A narrow escape from a repetition of the result of the runaway accident which occurred on Friday last, happened in front of Montgomery's music store on Monday afternoon. A lady seated in a top buggy was thrown out, by an express team colliding with her carriage from the rear, but fortunately the tumble was an easy one and no serious effects resulted.

The issue of reserved seat tickets for King Jollyboy will commence at Goodrich's on Wednesday morning at nine o'clock.

There were many country teams and hundreds of out of town people on the streets Saturday, and the stores were thronged in the evening until the nine o'clock bell rang. On Monday the number of people in the city was even larger than on Saturday, and the stores did a great trade all day, but at an early hour in the evening the purchasers were few and the sidewalks thinly peopled, nearly everybody having gone home to sort out purchases and fill small stockings therewith.

Mattie King, who keeps a low place in Franklin block, was arrested by the police Monday, and created considerable excitement by her boisterous and frantic efforts to free herself. A male companion was taken into custody soon after, and a third person eluded the officers. If all reports are true it is high time the place was cleaned out, and it is to be hoped this move on the part of the police will be followed by others like it.

The letter carriers were loaded down like pack mules on Monday, with packages sent through the mails. They carried baskets slung to their backs, to transport the unusual quantity of matter in.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

Truth will Out

Therein lies the secret of the marvelous success of PYLE'S PEARLINE Washing Compound. Those who use it like it, and tell their friends. Over one million families now use it. The sale increases—each month shows decided gains.

Do you know the truth? PEARLINE washes clothes, coarse or fine—dishes—paint—everything—in half the time, with half the labor, and better than anything else known. As it saves the worst of the rubbing, so it saves the worst of the wear; your clothes and paint last longer and look better, if washed with PEARLINE. Harmless to fabric or hands, and economical. There is nothing else like PEARLINE.

Beware of imitations being peddled or sold by means of prizes—they are dangerous—such means are not necessary to sell a good article.

Pearline is manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

MARBLEHEAD.

A Day of Intense Sorrow. Much Suffering Must Ensue. Total Loss, $600,000.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MARBLEHEAD, MASS., Dec. 26.—Today has been one of intense sorrow in this town. Men and women now begin to fully realize the situation, and with the single industry of the town swept away much suffering must ensue, but for all this the people yet seem hopeful. Thousands visited the ruins today, relic hunters being numerous, photographers have taken pictures of the desolate scenes, and curiosity seekers have been seen on all sides. Early this morning the town surveyor put a large force at work clearing up the sidewalks. The local military company kept guard over large piles of furniture placed in conspicuous places. It was after four o'clock in the afternoon before the fire engines left their positions and the dense smoke cleared away.

One of the saddest incidents was the death of Mrs. Sally Evans, who had been unwell for several days previous to the fire. Mrs. Evans became insensible and was taken from her home to that of a neighbor where she died from the shock. The large losses amount to $560,000, upon which there is known to be insurance of $226,500. There are also many small losses of from $100 to $1000 each, which will probably swell the total to over $600,000. It is impossible to make any accurate estimate of the insurance, as many policies are in safes in the ruins.

A meeting of citizens, held in Abbot Hall this evening to devise means of relief for the fire sufferers, was very largely attended. Capt. Knott V. Martin, chairman of the selectmen, presided, and spoke briefly of the severe calamity which has befallen the town, and called for expressions of opinion. Wm. Reynolds offered a motion that a committee of five be appointed to chose a committee of 25 to solicit subscriptions for aid for the needy, which was carried. The prevailing sentiment was that the burned buildings should be replaced with brick structures, and the town pledged to financial aid in case private capital proved insufficient.

GEN. LOGAN'S REMAINS.

Interesting Account of Their Transfer, and of the New Logan Chapel.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec, 26.—The remains of Gen. Logan were today removed from the Hutchinson vault in Rock Creek cemetery, where they were placed a week less than two years ago, to the new Logan Chapel lot in the National Soldiers' Home cemetery. There were present John A. Logan, Jr., and wife, Major and Mrs. Wm. Tucker, and their son Logan, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Shepard and Miss Mary Brady of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Mullet, Mr. Hall, formerly secretary to Gen. Logan; Rev. Dr. C. H. Carr of this city, and seven artillerymen who for two years have kept constant watch over the remains. The transfer was made without ceremony, and as the little company were ready to leave the cemetery John A. Logan, Jr., in a few words thanked the guard for their watchfulness and fidelity, and pinned on the breast of each a gold medallion bearing Gen. Logan's head in bas-relief on one side, and an inscription on the other, hanging from a bar bearing the word "Fidelity." The new chapel is of Maine granite, built in Norman style of architecture, and is intended as a family sepulchre. An iron cross surmounts the apex of the roof and a large stone ell stands out in bold relief over the arch of the doorway. The interior space of 18 feet by 15, and probably 20 feet high, is lined with pressed brick with ornamented trimmings. Several windows give plenty of light. The coffin containing Gen. Logan's remains will be encased in a stone casket on the tiled floor in the centre of the chapel, visible to the public through a heavy grated iron door.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—Speaker Carlisle stated tonight that it would be impossible for him to attend the Tariff Reform League banquet in Boston Friday night.

A Cable Car Line Track Caves In and Kills Four Men.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

DENVER, COL., Dec. 26—The Denver Gas Co. had 100 men employed in excavating a ditch six feet deep alongside of and underneath the track of the Cable Car Line this afternoon, when suddenly the track, for an entire block, fell in, crushing and imprisoning the men underneath. Four dead and two badly wounded have been removed.

Get Out Your Ulster.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 26.—The signal service gives notice that a cold wave has appeared in the northwest, and that the temperature in this region will fall from 15 to 20 degrees before tomorrow morning. A despatch from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, says a heavy snow storm and high wind have prevailed there all day.

As far as heard from the storm extends throughout Iowa, northwestern Missouri and a part of Kansas. Throughout most of that region wet snow is falling; in the neighborhood of Kansas City it has taken the form of sleet. About noon telegraphic service between this place and Kansas City was almost suspended, and it is yet much interrupted.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.— Representative John Baker has served notice on W. S. Forman, democratic congressman-elect from Morrison's old district in Illinois, that he will contest the election on the ground of fraud.

To Try the New York Boodle Aldermen.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 26.—Gov. Hill has appointed an extraordinary session of the Oyer and Terminer Court, to open in New York City on January 21st, and continue as long as necessary for the disposal of such business as may be brought before it. Judge Charles Daniels of the Supreme Court will preside, and it is understood the court is for the purpose of trying boodle aldermen.

Rumors of another "Negro Riot" in Mississippi.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 26. — A private telegram tonight says that a negro riot is in progress at Lamar, Miss., and asking that some Winchester rifles be sent on first train. Lamar is 12 miles south of Grand Junction, Tenn., on the Illinois Central. Every effort has been made to get at the facts, but no response has been received to telegrams up to midnight. It is rumored that two whites and five negroes have been killed.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Commissions of Election Issued in the First and Second Districts.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., Dec. 26.—Governor Wilson today issued commissions of election to John O. Pendleton, dem., Congressman-elect from the First District, and W. L. Wilson, dem., Congressman-elect from the Second District, no protest being presented. Governor Wilson says he will not issue commissions for the 3d and 4th Districts until he can do so according to law.

THE SPEAKERSHIP.

Three New Candidates, With Henry Cabot Lodge Leading.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26. — Three new candidates for the speakership of the 51st Congress are being placed in the field by their friends, or the friends of the other candidates. The new man who seems to be leading the trio is Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts. On several occasions he has taken a prominent place in party councils, and the impression he has made is that of a universal favorite. Some shrewd ones, however, think Mr. Lodge's candidacy is inspired by one or more of the bright westerners, who think the honor should go to their section, and who feel sure an active canvass by the young New Englander would weaken Mr. Reed in his fight. The other candidates are Farquhar of New York and T. M. Bayne of Pennsylvania.

Blown Twenty-Five Feet in the Air and Killed.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Dec. 26 —Peter Lydon, aged 22, went with a lantern to a manhole of the Boston Steam Heating Company on Atlantic Avenue this evening, to inspect the pipes, when an explosion blew him 25 feet into the air. He died from his burns in an hour. Edward Powers, who was standing at the mouth of the hole, was blown across the street, but not seriously injured.

FOREIGN.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLANDS.

Fish Reported Abundant and Victoria People Happy in Consequence.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

OTTAWA, Dec. 26.—The fisheries department has been apprised of the return to Victoria of two British Columbia fishing schooners from an exploring tour to the Black Cod banks of Queen Charlotte's Islands. Fish was found in great abundance from 15 to 30 fathoms of waters, and at about three miles from the shore. The anchorage along the coast is excellent in natural harbors well sheltered from the wind. The supply of fish is at all times all that could be desired. Steam fishing vessels with three or four hundred fathoms of cable would doubtless succeed best in the fishery. Victoria people are excited over the promise of a great industry.

Condensations.

Wm. Kendall, aged fifteen, was drowned in the pond in Back Bay park, Boston, Christmas day.

In Cincinnati, Dec. 25th, several business establishments and twenty dwellings were burned; loss $300,000.

Marblehead, Mass., had a disastrous fire on the night of Dec, 25th, every shoe factory but one in the place, nearly every business house of any kind, and many dwellings, being destroyed. Help was sent from Lynn, Salem, Peabody, Beverly and other places, but the fire raged till toward morning. Loss fully $800,000.

Ring-necked plovers are reported as being very numerous along the sea beaches and marshes at present, something not known before at this season by the oldest gunners; in fact, they are not plentiful even in summer, one or two in a large flock of sand-peeps being as many as are usually to be seen at a time. They are much more wary than the sand-peeps, which seem to depend very much upon the watchfulness of the larger bird, whose shrill note of warning on the approach of a gunner is enough to instantly set the flock on the wing.

THE USE OF TOBACCO.

The Virtues and Vices of the Weed in All Shapes.

Tobacco contains an acrid, dark brown oil, an alkaloid, nicotine, and another substance called nicotianine, in which exist its odorous and volatile principles. When tobacco is burned, a new set of substances is produced, some of which are less harmful than the nicotine, and are more agreeable in effect, and much of the acrid oil—a substance quite as irritating and poisonous as nicotine—is carried off. These fire produced substances are called from their origin, the "pyridine series." By great heat the more aromatic and less harmful members of the series are produced, but the more poisonous compounds are generated by the slow combustion of damp tobacco. This oil which is liberated by combustion is bad both in flavor and in effect, and it is better, even for the immediate pleasure of the smoker, that it should be excluded altogether from his mouth and air passages.

Smoking in a stub of a pipe is particularly injurious, for the reason that in it the oil is stored in a condensed form, and the smoke is therefore highly charged with the oil. Sucking or chewing the stub of a cigar that one is smoking is a serious mistake, because the nicotine in the unburned tobacco dissolves freely in the saliva, and is absorbed. "Chewing" is on this account the most injurious form of the tobacco habit, and the use of a cigar holder is an improvement on the custom of holding the cigar between the teeth. Cigarettes are responsible for a great amount of mischief, not because the smoke from the paper has any particularly evil effect, but because smokers—and they are often boys or very young men—are apt to use them continuously or at frequent intervals, believing that their power for evil is insignificant. Thus the nerves are under the constant influence of the drug, and much injury to the system results. Moreover, the cigarette smoker uses a very considerable amount of tobacco during the day. "Dipping" and "snuffing" are semi-barbarities which need not be discussed. Not much effect is obtained from the use of the drug in these varieties of the habit.

Nicotine is one of the most powerful of the "nerve poisons" known. Its virulence is compared to that of prussic acid. If birds be made to inhale its vapor in amounts too small to be measured, they are almost instantly killed. It seems to destroy life, not by attacking a few, but of all the functions essential to it, beginning at the center, the heart. A significant indication of this is that there is no substance known which can counteract its effects; the system either succumbs or survives. Its depressing action on the heart is by far the most noticeable and noteworthy symptom of nicotine poisoning. The frequent existence of what is known as "smoker's heart" in men whose health is in no other respect disturbed is due to this fact.

Those who can use tobacco without immediate injury will have all the pleasant effects reversed, and will suffer from the symptoms of poisoning if they exceed the limit of tolerance. These symptoms are: 1. The heart's action becomes more rapid when tobacco is used; 2. Palpitation, pain or unusual sensations in the heart; 3. There is no appetite in the morning, the tongue is coated, delicate flavors are not appreciated, and acid dyspepsia occurs after eating; 4. Soreness of the mouth and throat, or nasal catarrh, appears and becomes very troublesome; 5. The eyesight becomes poor, but improves when the habit is abandoned; 6. A desire, often a craving, for liquor or some other stimulant, is experienced.

In an experimental observation of thirty-eight boys of all classes of society, and of average health, who had been using tobacco for periods ranging from two months to two years, twenty-seven showed severe injury to the constitution and insufficient growth; thirty-two showed the existence of irregularity of the heart's action, disordered stomachs, cough, and a craving for alcohol; thirteen had intermittency of the pulse, and one had consumption. After they had abandoned the use of tobacco, within six months one-half were free from all their former symptoms, and the remainder had recovered by the end of the year.

A great majority of men go far beyond what may be called the temperate use of tobacco, and evidences of injury are easily found. It is only necessary to have some record of what the general health was previous to the taking up of the habit, and to have observation cover a long enough time. The history of tobacco in the island of New Zealand furnishes a quite suggestive illustration for our purpose, and one on a large scale. When Europeans first visited New Zealand they found in the native Maoris the most finely developed and powerful men of any of the tribes inhabiting the islands of the Pacific. Since the introduction of tobacco, for which the Maoris developed a passionate liking, they have from this cause alone, it is said, become decimated in numbers, and, at the same time, reduced in stature and in physical well being so as to be an altogether inferior type of men.—New York Medical Journal.

Rather Expensive.

A Swedish scientist claims to have discovered the secret of petrifying wood by artificial processes. He thinks it will be possible ere long to construct edifices of wood and convert them into stone. As it takes three months and costs about $500 to petrify a block of wood of the dimensions of one cubic inch, it will probably be some time before his process will be generally adopted.

A Tilt with Richelieu.

Fenelon, who often bothered Richelieu for subscriptions to charitable purposes, was one day telling him that he had just seen a capital portrait of him. "And I suppose you asked it for a subscription!" said Richelieu, with a sneer. "Oh, no; I saw there was no chance—it was too like you."

A Hospital Built by Verdi.

The Gazzetta Musicale of Milan gave an interesting account of the hospital at Villanova, entirely built and supported by Verdi, the composer. Villanova is situated about twenty miles from Piacenza and in close vicinity to the Villa di Sant' Agata, the country seat which Verdi has made his home and where he lives in the manner of a farmer, abandoning all music from his thought, and without so much as a piano in his house. The new hospital, an unpretentious but large building, lies in a commanding situation overlooking the Po and with a distant view of the Apennines. There are two wings—one for women, the other for men, and a separate ward is set aside for contagious cases; there is also a hydropathic establishment, and most elaborate arrangements have been made for the disinfection of linen and other sanitary purposes. An efficient staff of nurses and attendants is also provided, and Signora Verdi has made the housekeeping department her special care. The large sums required have been contributed by Verdi, who has also deposited sufficient funds for the maintenance of the hospital. The munificence of the great composer is only equaled by his modesty. The opening ceremony, which took place on the 6th inst., was of the simplest kind, only Verdi and his family, the physician, and the Sindaco of Villanova being present. No speechifying was allowed, Verdi remarking that the only inauguration necessary was the admission of the sick and ailing, twelve of whom were received then and there. The Sindaco proposed that the new building should be called "Verdi hospital," but to this also the donor objected, and the name Hospital of Villanova was finally adopted.

A Story of Senator Blackburn.

Senator Blackburn is not only peppery in speech, but is also at times exceedingly grandiloquent, though he is not now so much given to this failing as he was in the days of his youth, as the following story shows:

One day, when he was only Capt. Blackburn, he was engaged in arguing a case in Lexington, and his speech was so full of highfalutin' that it rather bored his legal opponent, who sought relief from it by going out on the green surrounding the court house. As he stepped from the door an old hemp raiser who had followed him out said:

"Cap'n Blackburn is making a great speech."

"Oh, yes," sneered the bored attorney. "Capt. Blackburn always makes a great speech. If you or I had occasion to announce that 'two and two made four' we'd be just fools enough to blurt it out. Not so, Capt. Blackburn. He would say: 'If by that particular arithmetical rule known as addition we desired to arrive at the sum of two integers added to two integers we should find—and I assert this boldly and, sir, without the fear of successful contradiction—we, I repeat, would find by that particular rule of arithmetic properly applied—and, sir, I hold myself perfectly responsible for the assertion I am about to make—that the sum of the two given integers added to the other two integers would be four.'"—New York Sun.

Woman's Dress.

Women have happily been preserved by their tailors rather than by their own good sense from the offenses against taste which disfigure the modern costume of men. It is hardly possible to imagine anything better in the way of dress than the toilets which have been created by the first Paris houses for the adornment of women during the last ten or fifteen years. These costumes can be produced in portraiture without alteration, and are as picturesque on canvas as the soul of any artist can desire. They are, it is true, chiefly combinations of the costumes of the Fronde, of the Directoire, and of other epochs, but they are thoroughly artistic combinations. Dress is, in its essence, an artificial thing. Nature has nothing to do with dress; and the blanket of the savage squaw is every whit as artificial as the court train of the European duchess. When the human form is covered in any way, art, more or less elegant, more or less clumsy, must be called in to cover it.—Ouida in Chicago Tribune.

Visiting Card Etiquette.

The question of the propriety of turning down the corners of visiting cards is debated now and then; and most persons, whatever they think of the custom, at least regard the trick as a comparatively recent one. In a book of etiquette published in this country about half a century ago the author remarks:

"Ladies have a fashion of pinching down one corner of a card to denote that the visit is to only one of two parties in a house, and two corners, or one side of the card, when the visit is to both; but this is a transient mode and of dubious respectability."

The significance of turning the corners is different today, except that the end is doubled to denote that a call is for all the members of a family; but who had supposed the custom to be "of dubious respectability?"—Boston Courier.

Teaching Children.

It is far better to teach your children all they can easily learn at home, until they are 6 or 7 years of age—then send them to school—unless the mother has plenty of time and is competent to continue their education. It is simply cruel to keep young children confined so closely in the school room, sitting upon hard benches, when they ought to be exercising in the open air and gaining strength and muscle. I have known children treated in the former manner to overtake and go ahead of those who had been kept in school from early childhood. Then it is a mother's precious privilege to keep her children with her as long as she can.—Mrs. B. in New York Mail and Express.

The largest college in the world is said to be a Mohammedan institution at Cairo, which is credited with 300 teachers and 10,000 students.

IN WASHINGTON.

Sherman or Blaine, Which?

(Editorial Correspondence Daily Chronicle.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 25th.

In talking politics last night with an intimate friend of Senator Sherman—a member of the Ohio delegation in the lower House—I asked him what he thought about that gentleman's entering Gen. Harrison's cabinet. "I don't believe," was the response, "that there is a man in Washington who knows anything about Senator Sherman's intentions if he is invited to become a member of the next administration. He has not taken counsel, so far as I am advised, with any of the members of the Ohio delegation, and whether he would accept the portfolio of state, I do not know. I do know, however, that we expect that position to be tendered him, and if it is not, Gen. Harrison might as well make up his mind that he will not only have a hard road to travel during the next four years, but that he will never secure a re-election. I know that Mr. Blaine's friends are moving heaven and earth to secure his appointment as secretary of state, but Gen. Harrison cannot pass Senator Sherman over without insulting the republicans of Ohio, and bringing down upon his head the protests and condemnation of leading republicans all over the land. Mr. Sherman, as the principal competitor of Gen. Hrrrison at Chicago, is entitled by a line of unbroken precedents since the republican party elected Lincoln in 1860, to the leading cabinet position. To pass him over for Blaine, who led the party to the only defeat it has encountered in twenty-eight years, would, as I have said, not only be an insult to the party, but stamp Gen. Harrison as a weak man with no more firmness or backbone than Gen. Garfield, and incapable of resisting the demands of men who care more for Blaine than they do for a united party under another leadership."

WHAT A BLAINE MAN SAYS.

Another republican—a Vermonter—was not disposed to take quite so gloomy a view of the situation. "I know," said he, "that the Blaine matter is embarassing to Gen. Harrison, and that up to this time no definite conclusion has been reached. While it is true that there is very decided opposition to Mr. Blaine, Gen. Harrison recognizes the fact that it was Mr. Blaine who first enunciated the position of the republican party on the tariff question after Mr. Cleveland's free trade message a year ago, and that it was to his quick action while in Paris in meeting that message and portraying the danger to the country if it should be adopted by congress, that aroused the party and enabled it to take the impregnable position on the issue thus forced on the country, which resulted in the election of Gen. Harrison. To say that because Mr. Blaine refused to become a candidate he is not entitled to all the honor which Gen. Harrison can bestow upon him, is to disparage the splendid campaign work done by him. He left Europe, and coming home threw his whole energy in the campaign, rallying his friends and making them enter the fight the same as though he and not General Harrison was the candidate. Gen. Harrison knows and appreciates all this, and I do not believe for one moment that he will fail to recognize Mr. Blaine in a becoming manner. It is true that there is a very determined opposition to having Mr. Blaine go into the State Department, and that Gen. Harrison's path is beset with difficulties which must be surmounted if his administration is to have smooth sailing, but I ahve an abiding faith he will meet these successfully. If Mr. Blaine in a generous spirit would recognize this situation and relieve the incoming President by indicating his willingness to take a foreign mission, the dilemma would be over, but I am inclined to the opinion that this will not be done, and that the question will have to be met and settled as to whether Blaine or Sherman shall have the State Department."

A FEW OBSERVATIONS ON THE SITUATION.

The two opinions thus freely expressed reflect the sentiments which are entertained by two classes of Republicans here, the Blaine and the Sherman men. The drift of the talk is decidedly against Blaine. Congressmen told me to-day that he did not believe there were a dozen members of the House who believed it would be good policy for Gen. Harrison to take him into his official household. Even some of the most ardent friends of the Maine statesman are not for his selection, believing that it would sooner or later result in political entanglements injurious to party harmony. It is openly charged here that a newspaper syndicate composed of Whitelaw Reid of the New York Tribune, Joseph Medill of the Chicago Tribune, Emory Smith of the Philadelphia Press, and Murat Halstead of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette have been working up the Blaine boom and are determined to force him upon Gen. Harrison. The power of such newspaper support cannot be estimated too highly, and Gen. Harrison will naturally hesitate a long time before acting contrary to the manifest desire of these gentlemen. The course of these papers since the election gives color to the truth of this report, and would seem to indicate that they expect Gen. Harrison to run his administration on a purely Blaine platform. The CHRONICLE has not hesitated hitherto to express the opinion that Mr. Blaine's appointment to the Cabinet would be a great political blunder for the new administration, and fraught with serious consequences. As the head of the State Department he would practically be the President. His political training during his whole life has been that of a leader instead of a counsellor, and in this respect has been so decidedly characteristic as to leave no doubt in the minds of close observers regarding his course of action if placed at the head of the Cabinet. By nature he is a leader and not a follower, and who will believe for a minute that he could forget the fact that he was the Republican candidate four years ago. His entrance in the State Department would enable him to reward in a measure the Blaine men of '84 rather than the Harrison men of '88, and this would speedily lead to a Cabinet rupture. If Gen. Harrison seriously considers and attaches any weight to the honest convictions of at least ninety-five per cent of the Republicans in Congress, he will tender Mr. Blaine a foreign mission and not a Cabinet appointment. There is no use concealing the fact that the most sagacious leaders of the party view with deep concern if not actual alarm the suggestion that Mr. Blaine may become the Premier of the Administration, and by his injudicious course engulf the party in disaster four years from now. Against such an event the most earnest protests have been sent to Gen. Harrison, and the question now is will he heed them, or has he the firmness to do so? In all probability the question will be answered soon after Congress comes together next week.

SCOTT.

The State Department at Washington has refused to recognize either of the two hostile factions in Hayti, although an effort was made to secure the recognition of the Hyppolite diplomatic agent, who recently arrived here from Hayti. With the insurrection or revolution now going on in Hayti our government cannot take any notice beyond protecting Americans living on the island, and their property. Unless the people of the island speedily settle their difficulties there will be an inclination on the part of some of the European nations to interfere, but this of course our government will not sanction. It is possible but not probable that Hayti may be the means of getting our country drawn into a quarrel with some other nation, and in such an event the naval vessels sent to Haytien waters may see active service.

Under Water Four Minutes.

The question has often been asked, How long is it possible for a man to remain under water? and in order to answer it M. Lacessagne, a well known European scientist, has been making some close observations. His chief subject was a celebrated diver, who, it was alleged, could remain under the water for four minutes and fourteen seconds, which, it must be confessed, is a great advance in duration over the period commonly believed to prove fatal to a completely immersed person. The study of this man revealed certain interesting and important points. In the first place, he expelled all the air from his lungs—that is, all the air which breathing can expel from the lungs, for there always remains in the lungs an amount over and above that which can be exhaled in the deepest expiration—then he filled his lungs as completely as possible and dived. While in the water he swallowed about a liter of the fluid. On emerging from the water it is said he "snorted" frequently, while his face was congested, his heart beats slow and feeble and his eyes flushed.—New York Telegram.

Ben Jonson on Human Nature.

What a wretchedness is this, to thrust all our riches outward and be beggars within; to contemplate nothing but the little, vile and sordid things of the world; not the great, noble and precious? We serve our avarice; and not content with the good of the earth that is offered us, we search for the evil that is hidden. God offered us those things, and placed them at hand and near us that he knew were profitable for us; but the hurtful he laid deep and hid. Yet do we covet only the things whereby we may perish; and bring them forth, when God and nature had buried them. We covet superfluous things, when it were more honor for us if we could contemn necessary.

He Put Them in Irons.

A reporter overheard an old sea captain relate how he served the crew when they got too full. The old salt chuckled as he related the story. He said: "Yes, you can just bet a crew that got drunk on me never tried it again. When them fellers 'd come aboard ship drunk, why I'd just clap 'em in irons an' throw 'em in a heap on the deck. If we had rainy weather during the night, they couldn't get away; they'd have to stay right there. Yes, and to see them fellers in the morning you'd think they was going to die right off. No, sir; no crew ever got drunk on me twict," and he and his companion made for a South street saloon to smile.—New York Sun.

Refuse the civil "Yes" or "No,"
Decline to see me when you go
Along the street with "bulls" and "bears;"
Whatever else you choose to do,
Abstain from patronizing airs.

Cut me direct upon the street;
Look down upon me when we meet;
Let others see who proudly stares,
Discrown me not, while suave and sweet,
With soft and patronizing airs.

There may be times when all may need
The friendship of the friends indeed,
To help us lift life's load of cares;
But hearts had better break and bleed,
Than pulse with patronizing airs.

He does not act the role of friend
Who thinks that he must condescend,
And stoop to aid in my affairs;
He mocks me with the bow and bend
That come of patronizing airs.

The social status one attains,
With well earned or ill gotten gains
Of gold, and lands, and bonds, and shares,
Will be defiled with vulgar stains—
When he shows patronizing airs.

They have been those who helped the poor,
Who brought a light about the door;
They aided angels unawares.
God blessed their basket and their store—
They had no patronizing airs.

Are we not all on earth akin?
The best and whitest touched with sin?
For with the wheat will grow the tares.
Oh, proud and vain, just look within,
And cease all patronizing airs.
—George W. Bungay in Phrenological Journal.

A New Axle Box.

Some Prussian railways are experimenting with axle boxes fitted with bearings of vegetable parchment in place of brass. The parchment is strongly compressed before being used, and it is thoroughly dried to prevent subsequent shrinkage. An emulsion of water and oil, any of the mineral oils, is used as lubricant. The parchment soon becomes impregnated with oil, and is able to go a long time without a renewal of lubrication. Superiority to metal is claimed for it.—Chicago Herald.

The Sun.

FOR 1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

... Long ago
... Hope.
There still leaves rustle and blue ... Stand still the purple hills beyond the bay
About ... folded feet the old town lay;
Still the sky eyes of blushing dahlias ope
When on their dun flanks falls the sun's first rays.

Light breath of Summer breezes come and goes;
The gray great arch is flocked of gold and rose;
Now the hills' brows have ta'en their glory-crown
And the day broadens and the brightness grows.
How the light ripples on the river's breast!
How doth it flicker in a glad unrest.
Where doubles of the laughing leaves drop down
In showered shadows settling to the West!

And a bird singeth on the topmost spray
Of the great elm a joyous roundelay.
Ah, the brown throstle of the silver note!
He leads the choir that answers full and gay.
Amid the meadow-grasses lush and sweet
Gleam green the pointings of the fairies' feet:
High overhead the feath'ry cloudlets float,
While their light shadows o'er the clover fleet.

In the old orchard at the close of day
Comes a cool wind and blows long grass to gray,
And the gnarled branches stretching overhead
Show stars for flowers on each darkling spray;
And a broad moon floats upward silently—
A silver shallop on a purple sea.
Tracking the way the charmed footsteps tread
Where the far-shining meads of Mem'ry be!

A WIFE'S CONFUSION.

"You are one women of a thousand, Nell—you are, by Jove! and I'm proud of you. Come when I may I find the house as neat as a band-box and my little wife as fresh as a rose. I like that, Nell. I've always thought that if anything could put me out of temper with the woman I loved it would be to come home and find the house topsy-turvy and my wife in a soiled wrapper and with a rough head. Little woman, you're a treasure and I'm proud of you!"

And Edward Hastings kissed his pretty bride until her cheeks glowed like the red June roses out in the sunshine.

She was very happy, very much pleased and flattered at her husband's praise.

They had just been married six months, and Nell was a pattern for all housewives.

She arose with the birds that made their nest in the great apple tree, and did her housework in the early morning hours.

Come when he might, her husband always found his little home in order, the cupboard stored with something good to eat, and his wife dressed in a fresh wrapper, with a flower in her hair and a smile of welcome on her fair face.

"If there is one thing more likely to provoke a fellow than another," he went on, lingering on a moment in the sunny portico, his arm around her waist, "'tis to bring a friend home to dinner or luncheon and find everything out of sorts. Now there's Gravesley; his wife's a fine woman when you see her out—a showy woman, always well dressed. Well, Gravesley invited me to lunch that day we went out together. I went, but I was sorry enough for it. Such a house as we found—all heels-over-head, and I caught sight of the mistress disappearing up the stairs in curl papers and slippers. She was indisposed and could not see us, the girl said. We lunched on bread and cheese, and Gravesley, poor fellow, though he said nothing, looked exceedingly annoyed. I should have been angry. I think a wife should make it her duty to keep house and person in presentable order, so that her husband, come when he may, may find her ready to welcome him."

"So do I," said Nell, smiling up into his face. "You need never to be afraid to invite a friend home with you, Ned. No matter if I don't know, I shall be ready to receive you."

Ned gave her a ringing kiss.

"Very well, little woman, I shall try you one of these days—and now I must run. Good-by."

She watched him out of sight with happy eyes, and then went back to her pretty sitting room and her work-table.

A mouth later the Summer was on the wane and the fruits were well ripened.

"Jane," said Mrs. Hastings one bright morning, returning from the garden gate where she had parted with her husband, "I have just looked at currants and they are quite ripe. We must make our jelly at once. Now, Mr. Hastings won't be home till late to-day. I want to spend the day with mother to-morrow, and I should very much like to get the job off my hands to-day. What do you say?"

"I can soon pick the currants, ma'am."

"All right; suppose you begin. We won't clean up now. Let the house stand, though it is dreadfully out of order. Perhaps we may find time to straighten up when we get the fruit cooking. Hurry, now and pick as fast as you can, and I'll step over to Brown's and order some sugar and jars."

Jane obeyed, leaving the breakfast-room unswept and the front steps unwashed.

It was high noon before the first kettle of juice was got in cooking order.

Making currant jelly was rather more of an undertaking than Mrs. Hastings imagined.

She had seen it made at home under her mother's supervision, and making it herself she fancied would be quite as easy.

"Dear me, how the time flies! Do hurry, Jane. What a lot there is yet to strain! But we must get it done. I dare say it won't take the juice long to thicken. Mamma used to make it in no time. What are we to do about dinner, I wonder? We can't cook the ham—there's no room on the fire. We must have a make-up dinner when we have finished. Mr. Hastings will excuse us, I'm s re."

And, arrayed in her Holland apron, with her pretty braids all pushed back and her sleeves tucked above her elbows, Nell worked away with all her might, picking, boiling and straining, until her cheeks were flushed and her head ached.

"Why, Jane, this juice won't jelly, and it has boiled so long. What can be the matter?"

"There's something you put in it to make it jelly, I think, ma'am."

"Oh, dear, no. Mother never did, I'm sure. I'll add more sugar and let it boil another hour. Dear me! I thought we should have had our last kettle on by this time. We shall be so late, and I'm tired to death now. I wish I had done as mother said. She advised me to send the currants over there and let Hannah make the jelly, but I was sure I could do it myself."

The steaming kettle boiled another hour.

The Summer sun hung above the green summit of the poplars.

But juice it remained, for all the cooking and stewing it had undergone.

"Oh, what shall I do? Surely the stuff must be bewitched. I've a great mind to pour it all away," cried poor Nell, ready to cry with vexation.

"I tell you, ma'am, you put something in to make it jelly," persisted Jane.

"Oh, Jane, hush! You know nothing about it. I tell you, you don't put anything in. What must I do. Cook it more? It is burning to the kettle now, and I've wasted ever so much sugar. Jane, run over to mother's and ask Hannah to run over, will you? She'll know in a minute what to do. Do pray, be quick; it is dreadfully late."

Jane departed.

"If cooking will do, I'll make jelly of it before Hannah gets here," she said.

But instead of boiling to jelly, the currant juice boiled over in great foamy, red waves.

The fire hissed, and the dense smoke and a pungent scent of burning sweets filled the kitchen.

Spattered from head to foot with the hot liquid, one hand scalded, her pretty face besmeared, Nell retreated to the door in utter despair.

"Oh, I wish I had never"—

The sentence was never finished.

She stood dumb with horror, for coming leisurely along the sunny garden path she saw her husband and his particular friend, Mr. Warburton.

"He has invited him home to dinner!" she gasped, darting back into the smoky kitchen. "Oh, what shall I do?"

Two or three harrowing minutes of suspense and her husband entered.

"Nell, are you here? And what is the matter? Is the kitchen on fire? The whole place is in a fog."

Nell came forward, looking more like a tattooed Indian than the pretty woman she was.

"I'm making currant jelly and I thought you wouldn't be home till late, Ned."

"Does it require such a mess as this to make currant jelly? And what a fright you are, Nell! I've brought Warburton home to dine."

"There's not a mouthful of dinner, Ned."

"What? Didn't I send a ham and a pair of chickens?"

"I had no time to cook; I've been making jelly all day."

"Confound the jelly! Come, Nell, you must get up some show of dinner."

"I can't, Ned! I'm tired to death, and my hand's burned. You shouldn't have invited Mr. Warburton without letting me know."

"Now, just hear that!" cried the provoked husband, "after telling me so often to bring a friend whenever I liked! I'm surprised at you, Nell!"

Nell sank into a seat, and, covering her face with her sticky apron, burst into tears, while the jelly began to steam over again.

Her husband, half beside himself with the hissing noise and his own vexation, made a dive at the kettle, and in his efforts to get it off the stove, upset it, deluging the floor.

"I'm glad of it! You've no business attempting to make the confounded stuff when you don't know how," he cried, flouncing out of the kitchen, and leaving his wife to have her cry out: "I'll go and send Warburton away."

Poor Nellie sobbed convulsively, unmindful of the meandering red river at her feet, until Hannah entered.

"Why, dearie, what trouble you're in, to be sure! and all your jelly wasted! But never mind; we'll have the next kettle all right."

Nell sprang up and threw herself into the old woman's arms.

"Oh, Hannah! and Ned's gone to send Mr. Warburton away without his dinner, and he'll never forgive me," she sobbed.

"Yes, he will, dearie, yes, he will—don't you fret! I've sent them over to your mother's for a lunch. And now let me tell you what to do. Put all this jelly-making by till to-morrow—we'll begin bright and early in the morning, and"——

"But, Hannah, it won't come to jelly."

"Oh, yes it will, when you add a little gelatine."

"Didn't I tell you ma'am?" muttered Jane, mopping up the red river.

"Never mind the jelly now," continued Hannah, "you and Jane set to work and get up a nice little supper, and take down your curls and put on your prettiest gown, and I'll hurry over and send the master and his guest back about sunset; that'll make everything right."

Nell demurred a little.

"Ned was cruel to get into a passion; he knew I couldn't help it," she sobbed.

Old Hannah gave her a look.

"Hush, my dearie; put that foolish pride in your pocket; you can't afford to spoil your happiness. Mind what old Hannah says."

And Nell obeyed.

She and Jane worked as they never did before in their lives.

Sunset found the kitchen as clean as a new pin—the unfortunate jelly banished and the daintiest of supper-tables set.

And as the sun went down, Nell herself walked down the garden path to meet her husband, robed in crisp, white muslin, a scarlet ribbon zoning her waist, a rose in her hair.

"I'm glad to see you, Mr. Warburton," she said smilingly. "You have found me in great tribulation to-day. I attempted what I did not understand and got into trouble. Ned, dear, forgive me and bring your friend in to supper!"

"Oh, Nell, what a brute I was!" whispered her husband, detaining her a minute at the kitchen door. "Can you forgive me? And your poor hand burned, too. I'll dig up every currant bush in the garden to-morrow."

"No, Ned," she replied. "I shall learn to make currant jelly to-morrow. Let them alone."—New York Evening World.

CHRISTMAS EVENING AT THE PORTSMOUTH ATHLETIC CLUB.

It was our extreme good fortune to be able to be present at the social entertainment given by the active members of the Portsmouth Athletic club to its associate members at the club rooms in Franklin block on Christmas evening, and to partake of its cordial hospitality, to listen to the fine musical programme which had been arranged by the committee in charge, and to join the large company present about the banquet table.

To say that the occasion was an enjoyable one, is but to tell those who have ever received any attention at the hands of the club what they are already acquainted with, but they will be pleased to learn that the association is adding to the laurels it has already gained, and is covering every point that will in any way inure to its good name those qualifications which lead up to a successful and beneficial organization, both in relation to itself and the community.

Nearly one hundred and fifty gentlemen gathered in the spacious social room, where many whiled away an hour at whist or cribbage. About nine o'clock LaBrie's orchestra arrived, and the next two hours were jammed full of music, both instrumental and vocal. Mr. John A. Cassidy sang several selections in that artistic manner for which he is noted, and Mr. Charles Wetherell won long and hearty applause for several songs which he rendered. Mr. Goodwin E. Philbrick added much to the enjoyment of all by his solos on the harmonica, and the feast of music closed by one of the club's favorite songs in which all joined in the chorus.

The large company then passed into the gymnasium where plates had been laid by caterer Garvin, and after indulging in the good things, President Ward called on Mr. A. P. Preston for a few words. Mr. Preston responded, and paid a graceful tribute to the club, indicative of the excellent reputation the association enjoyed among the business men of Portsmouth, who were very much pleased at the success which had followed its inception.

He also made a pleasant allusion to Mr. Fred E. Hasty, the first president of the club, which drew hearty applause from all, showing the popularity in which he is held, and the high appreciation which becomes his endeavors for the club from first to last.

The other speakers were Mr. Herman Manson, Mr. Wm. H. Moore, of the Journal, Mr. Fred Bagley of the Times, Mr. Joseph R. Curtis of the Penny Post, Mr. Charles K. Wadham, Mr. Joseph S. Odiorne, formerly of this city, Mr. Henry C. Hewett, and others. Mr. Odiorne complimented the club, and in the course of his remarks aroused much enthusiasm by the response he made to an enquiry made in Kentucky, as to what was raised in New Hampshire. His reply was, "They raise the best mothers and wives, and the best fathers and husbands, to be found on God's footstool."

It was long after midnight when the company broke up, and the associate members have an occasion to refer to with much pleasure and gratification. The community truly has every reason to congratulate itself on the fact that it has in its midst an organization that is doing so much good among its own members, tending to elevate the young men of the city in every manner possible, and affording them an opportunity to indulge freely in physical culture.

A TOTAL WRECK.

The steamer Silver Star, a small passenger and freight steamer owned at Bar Harbor, Me., by Stephen L. Kingsley, W. H. Parker, her captain, and others, put into this harbor late Monday night, Dec. 24th, on her way to Bar Harbor from Boston, to which place she had been to have a new engine put in. She left again about one o'clock in the morning on the 25th, and was proceeding eastward when she struck, about three miles east of Whale's-back, and shortly went [illegible] Harbor by the eleven o'clock train Christmas forenoon. The Silver Star was a craft registering about forty tons, and valued at $11,000. Her crew reported that she struck a sunken wreck, but fishermen think it more likely she struck the Eastern Sister. She was lying in about five fathoms of water on the 26th, with her smokestack showing.

A GRACEFUL RECOGNITION.

A very happy presentation took place in this city on Christmas morning at the home of Mr. Frank S. Preston on Middle street. The officers of the Portsmouth Cadets called and in behalf of the organization presented him with an elegant writing tablet, in appreciation of his efforts in connection with the coming entertainment, "The Court of King Jolly boy," which is given for their benefit.

They are fully aware of the deep interest he has taken in preparing the piece and bringing it to a success, and take this pleasant manner of demonstrating in a measure their gratitude. Second Lieut. Harry Prior made the presentation speech, and thus another of those acts which goes to make life happier and its burdens lighter, is recorded. It was a complete surprise to Mr. Preston, and the graceful manner in which it was done, reflects credit on the donors and affords the recipient much joy.

HARVARD ODONTOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

Dr. Edwin C. Blaisdell of this city will read a carefully prepared paper on "The Screw and Nut in Bridge Work," before the Harvard Odontological Society at its regular meeting at Young's hotel, Boston, this (Thursday) evening.

This branch of industry is conspicuous among others which characterize the progress which has been made in the profession during the past few years. It has been made a special study by Dr. Blaisdell, who has several interesting models, with which he will illustrate his essay.

TICKETS!

The issue of reserved seat tickets for "King Jollyboy," to persons who had previously purchased admission tickets, commenced at Goodrich's bookstore at nine o'clock Wednesday morning. The first arrival was at ten minutes past four o'clock—a boy who promptly formed himself in line to await the commencement of the delivery of tickets, and stuck at the head of the line until the doors were opened at 6:30, when he entered the store, still of course holding his position. A young lady who arrived at 6:25 found herself to be No. 19 in the line, and as all who preceded her had from six to ten tickets each to exchange, it was well along in the forenoon before she could get a chance at the plan of the house.

It is therefore needless to say that the sale of tickets has been large, and that there are few good seats remaining for the first night. It is possible, though, to receive advantageous seats for the second night, but as the sale does not seem to lag we advise all who are intending to purchase tickets to do so with all possible haste. The indications are that every chair will be sold several days in advance of the entertainment.

PERSONAL.

—Among those who were in this city from other places on Tuesday to exchange Christmas greetings with relatives and friends, were William T. Raynes of Lowell, Mass., Charles P. Brown of Boston, and Edward S. Smart and wife of Boston.

—Gen. Marston of Exeter was in this city on Wednesday.

Pedestrians who took walks into the surrounding country on Christmas day brought a considerable proportion of the surrounding country back into town with them on their boots. The walking and wheeling were execrable, mud being everywhere present. It was more like [illegible] wanted off the [illegible] open water near the [illegible] millbridge, Christmas day, but got out without assistance. Then he gave up the sport for that day.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

A CURE IS GUARANTEED.

What is Catarrh

[illegible] inflammation of the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

THE HAYTIEN REPURLIC.

What the New York Mail and Express Correspondent Says of the Surrender.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—The Mail and Express publishes the following from its special correspondent: Port au Prince, via Kingston, Jamaica, Dec. 26th. The American squadron arrived at Port au Prince, Hayti, on Wednesday, Dec. 19th, and demanded the surrender of the steamer "Haytien Republic." After a call on President Legidime by Captain Meigs of the Yantic, the surrender was made at three o'clock. Admiral Luce demanded that the Dessalines, which boat effected the seizure, should salute the stars and stripes, which demand was complied with, and the compliment was shortly afterward returned. The Admiral and Staff then called on President Legitime at his palace and made the usual friendly assurances. The fleet will however remain until indemnity is paid. Mr. Morse, owner of the "Haytien Republic," demands $100,000 for loss of service and $150,000 for his services. The United States wants $200,000 or there will be further trouble. Yellow fever is rampant here. (Signed,) Lieutenant William E. Deering, Late of Her Majesty's service.

MARBLEHEAD.

A Hudson, Mass., Factory Tendered for Immediate Use.

Eighteen Hundred Out of Employment. Assistance Needed.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

MARULEHEAD, MASS., Dec. 27.—Thousands of strangers and sight-seers have thronged the streets all day. This morning George H. Houghton of Hudson, Mass., came to see David Lefavour, general superintendent of E. S. Woodbury's shoe factory, to offer his shoe factory in that town for their immediate use. Mr. Lefavour was away. N. R. Sanborn, chairman of the business men's committee, was seen and informed of the offer, and took the matter under advisement. There is nothing definite to be learned regarding the other manufacturers. There are some doubts about Cropley Bros. and Munroe Bros. rebuilding, as most of their business has been done at Wolfeboro, N. N., during the past few years.

The number of employes thrown out by the fire will be about 1800. The capacity of the factories burned was 250 cases per day, when running on full time, which would make a pay roll of about $21,000 per week. Today with a population of 7500, only one-sixth can find employment. Aid is needed, and must be forthcoming or great suffering will ensue.

Walter Moore Re-arrested for Assault on H. S. Houghton at Wilton, Me.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

FARMINGTON, ME., Dec. 27.—Walter Moore, who was held for the assault upon H. S. Houghton of Wilton, but afterward released, was again arrested and brought here this afternoon, and arraigned in the municipal court on a warrant charging him with assault and battery upon Houghton. Judge Chandler ordered Moore to recognize in one thousand dollars for his appearance from day to day. Houghton is slowly recovering, though not yet out of danger, and his reason is not fully restored. It is thought he will be able to appear in court in about a week. Public opinion is divided as to Moore's guilt. It is said he is an industrious and steady man, but there are suspicious circumstances connected with his conduct on the night of the assault upon Houghton. An officer took Moore to Wilton this evening, where he hopes to get bondsmen.

The Persians Want Closer Commercial Intercourse With Us.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—In an interview today the Persian minister said the "purpose of Shah in sending a minister here is to make commercial compacts to interest both countries. We would rather American interests should find profit in the development of our railroads and telegraph companies than that they should fall into the hands of nations at rivalry with us. You must have our products, and you buy them from other people at four or five prices. We want your products and have to get them indirectly at greater expense. You might as well buy directly from us and sell directly to us."

THE INAUGURATION.

But Few Carriages to be Allowed in the Line.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27. — Chairman Britton of the Inaugural committee says it has been practically determined to have no carriages in the procession except those for occupancy by the retiring and incoming Presidents and the new Vice President, and joint congressional committee.

No place in the line can be given to any persons until about a week before the 4th of March, when the marshal will make assignment of positions to the various organizations represented.

Slick Work.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

JEFFERSON, IND., Dec. 27.—Samuel Hedge, stock dealer, upon retiring last night placed $800 in bills under his left arm, inside of his night shirt. When he awoke this morning the money was gone. His shirt had been cut with a sharp instrument and the wallet removed without disturbing either his wife or himself.

Funeral of "Margery Deane."

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 27.—The funeral of Mrs. T. T. Pitman, "Margery Deane," was held in Belmont Memorial chhapel at Island cemetery this afternoon. The chapel was filled, and among those present were Miss Jenkins of the Boston Herald, who was with Mrs. Pitman at the time of her death in Paris last month; Judge and Mrs, W. S. Shurtleff of Springfield, Mass, Mr. Fred Perry Powers, Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times, brother-in-law of Mrs. Pitman, and many prominent citizens.

LOST AT SEA.

Four Vessels Supposed to Have Gone Down.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 27.—The Norwegian bark "Alf," Captain Bach, with crew of fourteen men, and a cargo of 1000 tons of bag sugar, sailed from Demerara October 28th for Philadelphia. Vessels that left thirty days after have arrived, but the "Alf" has never been seen or heard from since. All hope for her has been given up. The vessel and cargo were valued at about $125,000.

Mershon & Co., consignees of the Philadelphia schooner "Annie E. Hall," Capt. Queen, which is now out forty days, bound to Moorehead City, have given up all hopes of her ever arriving.

The British ship "Astracana," Capt. Richards, Philadelphia for Havre, with oil, has doubtless foundered at sea, as a number of casks of her cargo have washed ashore on the Isle of Wight.

The American brig "Sarah and Emma," Capt. Nash, from Kingston, Ja., for Delaware Breakwater, for orders, is now out sixty days, and grave fears are entertained for her safety. She had on board a cargo of logwood, and was manned by a crew of eight men.

Agreed on Prices and Strike Over.

GRAND FORKS, DAK., Dec. 27.—Early this morning nearly the entire business portion of Auburn, Dak., was burned. Scarcity of water and fire apparatus made the buildings an easy prey for the flames.

THE PHILADELPHIA MYSTERY.

Views of the Coroner's Physician, and Chief of Police Woods.

Description Fallies with that of a German Seen at Jersey City.

Special Despatch to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 27.—The remains of the man found dead in Fairmount Park yesterday still lie unidentified at the morgue. The coroner's physician gives his opinion that the murder was committed Christmas night, only a few hours previous to the discovery of the cut up body. The appearance of the parts where the legs were severed indicates that whoever did the job had had some experience at that sort of work. Today's inquest developed the fact that the murdered man was not addicted to alcoholic liquors. The face of the dead man was viewed by hundreds today. The body is undoubtedly that of a German, aged 30 to 35, dark brown hair, cut rather short, and light brown moustache. Chief Woods' theory is that the man was killed during a fight in a house not a great distance from where the remains were found. The condition of the muscles show that he must have struggled terribly before finally being overpowered. He was killed by a blow on the back of the head, dealt with sufficient force to crush the skull. Until the body is recognized it will be almost impossible to gain a clue. The entire detective force of the city is at work on the case.

JERSEY CITY, Dec. 27.—Mrs. Kohler of Hoboken, and her son-in-law, Police Roundsman Fannin, declare that the description of the murdered man whose body was found in Philadelphia yesterday, corresponds with that of a German named Kryetzman from Indiana, who came to Hoboken three weeks ago to meet his wife, whom he expected from Europe. Kryetzman stayed at Mrs Kohler's house one day, and as his wife did not arrive he went to find friends in New York. He had a large sum of money and was about five feet six inches tall, stout, with dark hair, thin moustache and was nicely dressed. The Hoboken police are assisting the Philadelphia officers.

The Basis of Action.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MONTREAL, Dec. 27.—Papers were today served in the action on behalf of Erastus Wiman's Telegraph Company, the Great Northwestern against the Montreal Telegraph Company, asking the Superior Court to fix a reduction of rental paid to the latter. The basis of the action is the failure of the Montreal Company to maintain the Great Northwestern Company in peaceable exclusive possession of the lines, routes and rights of way on independent railways included within the original lease, but subsequently incorporated by the Canadian Pacific into their system and more recently usurped for public telegraphic purposes. A peculiar clause in the Quebec code relating to landlords is relied upon to force a reduction in proportion to the damage suffered, which if applicable to the future, is also retroactive in its effect.

ALL KINDS OF NOSES.

Different Shapes of the Human Proboscis and What They Signify.

There is more in a man's nose than appears at first sight. The human nose is full of character. In cases where a nose has been lost character has been lost with it. It cannot be permanently and successfully disguised. This led to the remark about an unmistakable thing: "As plain as the nose on your face." The nose was originally intended as an organ for conveying to the brain the delicate sense of smelling. Its uses have in many instances been perverted. Savages bore holes in their noses and hang jewelry on them. Dirty old men put snuff in their noses. It is an abuse of nature. A sneeze is an involuntary effort of nature to blow out of the nose the snuff the dirty old man has put into it. When a gentleman is walking drunk on the street, policemen say: "He has a sausage up his nose." Policemen know what they mean by such language, but in some way it goes that a drunken man is an offense to the nose.

Some men talk considerably through their nose. Some vocalists seem to sing through the nose. It becomes an unmusical instrument—a nasal kazoo—when it is snored through. It is a nuisance when poked into the business of people who do not own it.

See the man with the sharp, long, rounded nose, like the beak of an eagle. He is a combative man who wants to argue the case and wants to have his own way. Like the bird of freedom, he wants liberty of pinions. The eagle nose is strong in character. It speaks for itself. It stands up for itself, and will not be snubbed or sat down upon.

The Roman nose is also full of character. It is out of place and looks unhappy on the face of the modern dude. It looked grand on the face of the ancient Romans, for which faces it was made. It was in harmony with rugged men who had decision of character and meant business. There could have been no great Cæsar with an insignificant, turned up or meaningless nose. Look at pictures of Washington, Wellington, Napoleon, or whom you will, and you will find that great men have had great noses.

The Hebrew nose is a good nose. It is always in keeping with the face. If on the face of a beautiful Jewess it is beautiful, and yet it speaks of its race and origin, however faintly. Eyes and ears and chins and foreheads do not. This is but an instance showing how the nose is an open book on the pages of which history may be written.

The African nose is flat and open. It is a warm country nose, open for an engagement with any air. It looks lazy, and is not fine.

There are no perfect noses away from the marble features of statuary. They were not handed down to the modern Greeks.

Just now the commercial nose is of most importance. In China and Japan the commercial men who sample, classify and buy teas are called tasters. They should be called smellers. They could not begin to do their work if they sipped and swallowed samples of all the tea they passed upon. The stomachs would not hold enough and the samplers would die. They depend upon their noses and base their opinions on the aroma of the steaming beverages. Their noses never go back on them.

Samplers of wines and of coffee rely upon the nose, and it is the same way with sugar men. The expert sugar broker trades on the judgment of his nose, and he rarely gets left.

The average human nose has a hard time working its way through this world. It is an insignificant, shapeless thing when it first appears on the face of baby and seems destined to be pinched frequently by the ambitious nurse and always by the indiscreet "peek-a-boo" lady visitor. Then come accidents to the nose when it begins to grow up. The little toddler who wears it falls over on it and bumps it; perhaps disfigures it in rolling down stairs or falling out of the baby carriage while nurse flirts with the policeman. Later the little thing is pressed against window panes and worn away looking at Christmas toys in shops or at the children the little nose owners would like to be playing with in the streets. Then comes the scratches and hurts noses receive in the battle of life, bearing its blows and bruises. Perhaps one is fated to be placed alongside of a cross eye, and to be uncomfortably stared at during waking hours. And then when eyes become dim and weak their obliging neighbor, the nose, standing by and between them, must hold for old eyes spectacles on its bridge and get no thanks for it, because eyes do not think and cannot imagine the nose helps them see. Pale in death the nose goes away to the tomb with all that is mortal of man. The funeral sermon is about the loving heart that was and the soul that is, and is to be saved, and the nose is forgotten. From the cradle to the grave the nose has a hard time.

There are sharp and thin noses that seem to belong to mean men. There are proud noses that seem to tell of better days, even worn by shabby people. There are impudent noses that seem to turn up at everything, to carry an air of defiance. There are noses one wants to pull, and others the pugilists want to flatten. There are the beautiful red noses that are the result of much constant drinking and care and anxious solicitude. The red, red nose, that blooms in the spring, blooms also in the summer and winter. It has come to stay. It blossoms and bulges, and is the rosy record of many joyous events and the monument over many casks of brandy and demijohns of wine long since departed. The red nose colored by liquor is the most expensive of all noses, and should never be looked for on the face of the man who is poor but honest. On the face of a temperance lecturer it is a contradiction of his words.—New Orleans Picayune.

Eastern wood workers are using naphthaline as a wood preservative. It is said to be very effective, leaving the wood dry and with only a faint aromatic smell.

Striking a Light.

In the days before the invention of friction matches the difficulty of procuring fire was so great that all pains were taken to prevent the fire on the hearth from going out. All winter long it was kept by covering the coal and brands with ashes at night. This was one of the domestic cares of our forefathers, and Homer alludes to the practice as common in his day, 3,000 years ago.

But fire could not be kept with comfort in the summer, and there would be times in the winter when the hearth would become cold. Then some coals must be brought from a neighbor's, or a new fire must be kindled in the house.

This latter process was usually accomplished by means of flint and steel. Most readers have no doubt seen a spark of fire struck out from a horse's shoe hitting a stone in the road, or from the shoes of a sleigh runner grinding over rocks.

To obtain fire by this method a piece of steel, such as a file or rasp, was struck with a flint, or a bit of white quartz from a granite ledge, and the spark was caught in tinder—charred cotton rags. The old flint lock musket, with a few grains of powder and some tinder in the pan, was looked upon by our grandmothers as a domestic utensil. Sometimes, on a clear day, a burning glass—a lens for collecting at one point the rays of the sun—was used.

The method of producing fire by rubbing together two dry sticks is known to most boys, but it has not been often adopted by civilized people. It belongs to the ruder conditions of life.

In Thibet Capt. William Gill found practiced a more scientific method than any of these. The natives strike a light by compressed air. The apparatus used consists of a wooden cylinder, two and a half inches long by three-quarters of an inch diameter. This is closed at one end, the base being about the size of a quill pen; an air tight piston fits into this with a large, flat knob at the top. The other end of the piston is slightly hollowed out and a very small piece of tinder is placed in the cup thus formed.

To use this the cylinder is held in one hand, the piston inserted and pushed about half way down. A very sharp blow is then given with the palm of the hand on the top of the knob. The hand must at the same time close on the knob and instantly withdraw the piston, when the tinder will be found alight. It requires skill to use the apparatus as well as science to invent it.—Youth's Companion.

An Improved Fire Escape.

A portable fire escape, constructed with three systems of lazy tongs connected together and arranged to be elevated and lowered by a screw mounted in the platform of a truck, has been patented by Mr. Louis P. Santy, of Clements, Kan. The platform on which the tongs are mounted has screws at its corners, whereby the escape may be held upright or tipped against the walls of a building. The tongs are united by a series of triangles, a set of lazy tongs being arranged at each corner of the triangle, each set bracing the others. A screw for elevating the system is mounted in the center of the platform, a triangular plate being attached at its corners to the lowermost set of lazy tongs, and having at its center an internally screw threaded boss in which the screw works, being operated by beveled gears and crank shafts extending to the ends of the truck. By turning the cranks the three sets of lazy tongs will be rapidly elevated and by reversing the motion as rapidly lowered. At the top of the lazy tongs is a platform or cage on which persons may step from the window of a building, and be lowered to the ground by turning the cranks, or they may descend by a rope ladder suspended from an aperture in the center of the cage.—Scientific American.

A Waistcoat with a History.

Baron Minaldi, the tonsorial hospodar of the Astor house, created something of a sensation by appearing at his place of business the other day decked out in a camel's hair waistcoat of startling and unique pattern. This garment was sent to Baron Minaldi from Sicily some fifteen years ago. It was worn by one of his ancestors, the fourth Baron Giuseppe Minaldi, of Palermo, and was constructed more than eighty years ago. The fabric came originally from Kashgar, in Central Asia, and it is in as good state today as it was the day it was stitched together by a bronzed tailor under the shadow of Mount Etna. At his family dinner, over which Baron M. presided in the evening, the waistcoat was braced with one pound of chicken fricasseed, two pounds of turkey and roast pig and three pounds of macaroni. Not a button gave way. They could sew in Sicily in the early part of this century.—New York World.

To Use the Rheea Plant.

A Belfast machinist has discovered a process by which the fibers of the plant rheea can be readily separated from their woody and gummy covering, thus producing a fiber at a low price which will admit of being used for the manufacture of rope, cordage and woven goods. Rheea is a plant grown very widely in southern and eastern Asia, and one capable of cultivation in the temperate parts of Europe and America. It is the strongest vegetable fiber that has yet been discovered, and is, besides, the smoothest and most lustrous.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Telephone Whisperings.

The following is said to be a simple method by which telephoning can be carried on in a whisper: Take a sheet of thick manilla brown paper, fold and paste it into the form of a cone or funnel, some fifteen inches in length, the small end being just the size to fit into the transmitter orifice, without coming in contact with the diaphragm, and the large end being about six inches in diameter. With this messages can be sent in a whisper.—New York Telegram.

FRIDAY, DEC. 28, 1888.

FROM WASHINGTON.

(Editorial Correspondence Daily Chronicle.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 26th.

We had a perfect day for Christmas, the weather being mild and balmy, and not unlike many of the September days in New Hampshire. Christmas is always a great event in Washington, and more observed as a National holiday than as a religious celebration. It has always been so, and northern people, or at least many of them, observe with deep interest the great enjoyment displayed by all classes of people here in their observance of the day. To the thirty-odd thousand colored people here, Christmas is the day above all others in the year, and the ragged negro urchins who throng the streets about the market houses begging the job of carrying home for a nickel the Christmas trees purchased from the colored men who bring them in by the thousands from Maryland and Virginia, all expect to make enough extra money to enable them to celebrate Christmas in a becoming manner. In all southern states Christmas has always—at least until within recent years—been made more of than throughout the north, and as Washington was a southern city, populated in the main by the slave-holding element, this observation holds good here. It would surprise many of the good people of Maine and New Hampshire to see to what extent the colored people celebrate this day, and the devotion they exhibit in doing so. Their church duties must not be neglected, and a present, humble though it may be, must be provided for all their friends. In slave holding times it was customary to give the servants "Egg-nogg" liberally, but this custom has almost entirely disappeared, and it is only among some of the older colored people that egg-nogg is found now on Christmas day. The merchants say the sales of Christmas articles this year have been unusually large, and that they have all done a thriving busiaess.

That the absent friends or members of the family have not forgotten those here can well be judged by the overloaded express wagons in making their deliveries. An express messenger informed me today that it required one wagon to deliver the Christmas boxes addressed to Mrs. Cleveland at the White House, and which came from all parts of the country. The President was not forgotten either, as some enthusiastic admirer in Virginia sent him a full grown bull-dog. What purpose the devoted democrat had in view, and what President Cleveland's feelings were when made acquainted with his present, can only be conjectured.

CABINET SPECULATIONS.

One cannot move around among the politicians without being impressed with the seriousness which just now pervades Republican circles regarding the Cabinet appointments. Very little else is talked about, and until Gen. Harrison gives some positive information as to his selection for the most important Cabinet places speculations pro and con regarding certain men will continue to be indulged in.

I was informed today that Gen. Harrison had within a day or two written to certain Republican Senators with whom he was on terms of intimacy while in the Senate, inviting them to communicate with him freely during the next few days regarding not only the qualifications of the various gentlemen named for Cabinet places, but as to the advisability of appointing them. If he follows the advice which will be thus freely given him there can be no doubt as to a strong Cabinet being chosen, and all danger of the new administration being constructed of weak timber and permeated with augur holes, averted. But will he be guided by this advice, which it is known accords with his own convictions of right and duty to the party, or will he allow himself to be controlled by the great political pressure which is being brought to bear to force him to accept certain men as his constitutional advisers? The fate and success of the new administration all depend upon the President elect's first act.

There are two elements which are making everything very unpleasant for Gen. Harrison just at present, and these are the demands of Mr. Blaine's friends that he shall be made the Premier, and of Mr. Platt's friends that the Secretaryship of the Treasury shall be given to him. Senator Hale, as Mr. Blaine's friend, is understood to have informed Gen. Harrison that Mr. Blaine is entirely willing to enter his Cabinet and would accept the Premiership. This information is also understood to have been accompanied by what was virtually a demand for that position for Mr. Blaine, and this was backed up by a number of the latter's personal and political friends. If the report which reaches here privately from Indianapolis be true, and I see no question to doubt it, Gen. Harrison finds himself placed in a very embarrassing position. This statement also applies with equal force to the situation as regards Ex-Senator Platt of New York, who has been urged very persistently for the Treasury portfolio.

There is one element which enters into the adjustment of this troublesome question which I have not seen alluded to, but which as the readers of the CHRONICLE will comprehend and appreciate has an important bearing, and this is the social feature.

There is a great deal of jealousy among the so-called leaders of society, and the question as to who will have the recognize right to lead it under the next administration finds a deep hold among the wives of the Senators, Justices of the Supreme Court and Representatives, and they are as much if not more agitated just now regarding Gen. Harrison's selections than their husbands. If Mr. Blaine is chosen Premier, Mrs. Blaine will stand next to Mrs. Harrison in social rank, and all others must look up to her. It is no secret that as a society leader she is not a favorite, nor has she ever possessed much popularity among those she was brought into contract with during her husband's past official life. The society ladies—by this I mean the wives of officials — are to a unit against Mr. Blaine's appointment, because of the position it will give his wife, and if I am correctly informed this view is shared also by the female members of Gen. Harrison's family.

It is not difficult to believe under such circumstances, that the ladies will be enabled to exert no little influence on Gen. Harrison, through their husbands, to prevent the appointment of Mr. Blaine. This is a singular condition of affairs, but such it is, and must be recognized as a potent factor in the Cabinet struggle now going on. "It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us."

I was talking with an Indiana Congressman today regarding Mr. Blaine and he said he had no doubt if left alone Gen. Harrison would not select Mr. Blaine, but that such tremendous pressure was being brought to bear, that he might yield his own convictions. He thought it was a great mistake to force any man upon Gen. Harrison against his wishes, and that the latter should be left free to form his own official household, without the intervention of party leaders, unless their advice was asked. I think the mass of Republicans will quite generally agree with this conclusion.

EX-SPEAKER RANDALL.

After the many reports about the serious condition of ex-Speaker Randall's health, I was quite unprepared to see him looking so well as I did today at the room of the House committee on appropriations. A sub-committee was in session on one of the appropriation bills, and Mr. Randall was in his seat at the head of the table. He has aged somewhat during the past year, and his hair now is almost entirely gray, but with this exception I could see little change in his appearance from former years. His eye is as bright, his voice as strong and his step as firm and elastic, as in years gone by. He has been a great sufferer from gout, and this no doubt has in a degree caused him to look older. Thrust aside by the present administration, his advice unheeded, and almost driven from the party because he would not sacrifice principle to the clamor of free trade, Mr. Randall stands forth today vindicated in the eyes of his party, and the recognized leader of his party in the House.

Six months ago Mr. Mills posed as the leader, but today his power is gone and he no longer commands the confidence of his late followers. In fact, many members who went down with the Cleveland ship in the storm and failed to secure a re-election are disposed to lay the blame on Mr. Mills' shoulders for having thrust his tariff bill upon the consideration of the House. Mr. Randall, while loyal to his party and a democrat of the Jefferson stripe, is not feeling very unhappy on account of Mr. Cleveland's defeat. He thinks his party will be all the better in 1892 for this year's defeat, and will not make haste again to run off after strange gods.

INTER-STATE COMMERCE LAW A DEAD LETTER.

There is a growing conviction here that Congress made a great mistake in passing the inter-state commerce bill, and that the results have not been what its framers intended. In fact, Judge Morrison, one of the commissioners appointed to see that the law is properly construed and enforced says frankly that the law is a dead letter and that the railroad companies pay no attention whatever to its provisions except when it is clearly their interest to do so. If a railroad company find that the law interferes with their plans or rates to the extent of cutting down their income, they simply ignore it, and act as they please, and the government seems powerless to do anything. A good many people are beginning to believe that the law simply works in the interest of the railroads, and against the general public, and that it should be repealed. Whether it is due to the law or the disinclination on the part of the law officers of the present administration to do their duty and call the railroad companies to a strict accountability, the fact stands out boldly that the railroad corporations seem to be stronger than the government.

SCOTT.

[The columns of the CHRONICLE are open for the temperate discussion of all questions of public interest; but our publication of communications on either side of any question is not to be considered as committing us to the support of the sentiments therein expressed.]

To the Editor of the Chronicle:—Apropos of the story now going the rounds as to how Mr. Blaine got into President Garfield's cabinet, it is well to recall the real circumstances, and to do so it is necessary to go back of the Chicago convention of 1880 which nominated Mr. Garfield.

Mr. Blaine and Mr. Garfield were the best of friends, personally and politically, and in and out of Congress worked together for the best interests of their party. Among their friends in Washington it was an open secret that they had agreed, in the event of either of them ever becoming President, that the other should be Secretary of State. When the convention of 1880 met, the Blaine men insisted that if he was not nominated, he would certainly name the man who would be. It was Senator Frye of Maine, who, in that memorable convention, told Mr. Conkling that if he would not vote for Mr. Blaine, he would have to vote for the man he named, and so he did. When the time came, and a break was inevitable, Maine voted solidly for Garfield, which meant that Mr. Blaine wanted him nominated, as long as he himself could not be, and that virtually settled his nomination, for in addition he got the Sherman vote from Ohio and elsewhere, which was all that was needed. In making the nomination unanimous Mr. Conkling and his 306 staunch supporters of General Grant for a third term, voted for the man whom Mr. Blaine named, and Mr. Frye had the satisfaction of saying to Mr. Conkling, "I told you so."

After the election, in offering the Secretaryship of State to Mr. Blaine, Gen. Garfield only did what he had promised to do, and what he undoubtedly would have done had the promise never been made. In the light of these facts, the story which now comes from Indianapolis that Mr. Blaine said he did not desire a place in the Garfield cabinet, but that he would like only the opportunity to decline the Secretaryship of State, seems absurd, and it is fair to assume that Gen. Garfield never expected him to decline it.

If eight years later, Gen. Harrison sees fit to duplicate Gen. Garfield's action, and invite Mr. Blaine to enter his cabinet, he will do so with the expectation that he will accept, and conscious that he has done what is for the best interests of the country and his party.

The Sun.

FOR 1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

MOLLY HOLDEN.

Molly Holden ran up the steps of No. 255 Hebert street.

Anybody could have told that 255 was a boarding-house, such a variety of people went in and out, and so many hymen and messenger boys rang the bell, and such an unending succession of grocery and market boys went in at the area-door.

Molly Holden's room was on the fourth floor back, and the smallest in the house. It was all she could afford. She was a type-writer in a lawyer's office, and quite alone in the world.

For all that she was a plump and cheerful and charming little girl—she was one of those young ladies whom people involuntarily call "little girls"—with the roundest cheeks and the prettiest eyes imaginable, and a way of looking on the bright side of everything always.

It would have been strange if Phil Johnson hadn't liked her. He was already at the lunch table when Molly tripped into the dining-room. He had coolly appropriated old Mr. Smith's place, too, in order to sit next to her.

"Your cheeks are pink, Miss Holden!" he said, forgetting his steak in the happiness of her presence. "You have been walking, haven't you?"

"Yes," Molly responded, with her cheeks no less pink for his scrutiny. "I don't often take the tram; it's so near."

"We must be near each other, Miss Holden—our offices," said Phil. He was a modest-salaried clerk in an insurance office. "You're in the Bartholomew building, and that's only four blocks down from us. We'll try walking home together some time, won't we?"

"If you'd like to," said Molly shyly.

"Like to? Nothing could make me happier!" Phil murmured, with glowing eyes on what he was certain was the loveliest face in the world. "You know, Miss Holden—you must have seen—that when I'm with you—"

There was a silken rustle in the hall and a new entrance.

Nobody but the most charitable could have said that Mrs. Crowell was nice looking; and as the boarders of 255 did not feel charitable towards Mrs. Crowell, it was never said.

She was tall to a masculine degree, and startlingly stout; her face had a purplish tinge; her eyes were bushy-browed and somewhat fierce in expression; and her under lip had a determined and even threatening protrusion.

Probably the boarders could have forgiven Mrs. Crowell's lack of personal attractions if she had been—well, anybody but Mrs. Crowell.

She occupied the spacious and elegant second floor front, and she was obviously rich; and there her virtues appeared to cease.

She sat down in her accustomed place beside Molly; the landlady had placed her there because Molly was the only person with whom Mrs. Crowell could get on pleasantly. Molly and Mrs. Crowell, to the amazement and even awe of the boarders in general, were always amicable.

"No, I won't take tea if I can't have it hot," said Mrs. Crowell in loud and distinct tones, which filled the dining-room. "This is merely luke-warm. And lump sugar, if you please; I think I have spoken of that before. And how are you to-day, Miss Mary?"

Phil Johnson swallowed his coffee in an inward rage. He had spoken his last word to Molly for this meal; he knew that by miserable experience. Mrs. Crowell always absorbed her by sheer force of defiant determination.

"Quite well, thank you," Molly rejoined, with the timidity which even she could not help feeling.

"My steak is underdone, Susan," said Mrs. Crowell sharply. "Another piece, if you please, or this one recooked. The books I ordered have come, Miss Mary."

"Yes?" Molly responded, with a conscientious attempt at gratification, which would have been a greater success if she had not known what was coming.

"I've been looking forward to your reading them to me. I mentioned it before, I think," said Mrs. Crowell in the manner-of-course way in which she always demanded favors of Molly.

"Yes," Molly assented, with kind patience.

"You will have some time after lunch, will you not? I beg your pardon, Mr. Johnson; I was speaking to Miss Holden," said Mrs. Crowell severely.

Phil had put in a remark in desperation.

"I shall have half an hour," Molly admitted, while Phil choked down a mouthful in impotent rage.

"We can have a chapter or two," said Mrs. Crowell placidly. "Susan, you should keep a fly-screen over those cakes. I am surprised that you do not."

It seemed an interminable period, even to patient Molly, before lunch was over.

Mrs. Crowell had found fault with everything on the table excepting the salt and ice-water, and had monopolized Molly; and poor Phil had gazed at her pretty profile in necessary silence and exasperation.

He kept close to her with bold resolution, when Mrs. Crowell rose at last, sweeping Molly with her, like an eagle with a kitten. And fortunately Mrs. Crowell stopped to remonstrate with the landlady as to her supply of towels and the cleaning of her windows.

"Goodness! How long are you going to submit to it, Miss Holden?" he whispered indignantly. "She'll wear you out."

"Oh, no!" said Molly with sweet cheerfulness. "I don't believe anything could do that."

"Nor I," said Phil admiringly. "But—Well, Miss Holden, I like to talk to you once in a while. She just absorbs you."

Molly smiled for want of a better response, and blushed.

"And—I must run the risk of your thinking me impudent, but I don't like the way she makes you convenient. You're too good-hearted, Miss Molly. You spend half your time out of the office reading to her, don't you. She is perfectly able, of course, to have a companion for reading, or whatever else. And to demand it of you! And—don't be angry with me—but she doesn't make the slightest return, I'll warrant!"

Molly smiled timorously. So far from being angry, she felt a little joyful thrill at his concern for her.

"No, she hasn't," she said, trying to look at him, and getting as far as his shirt-stud. "But I'm sorry for her, Mr. Johnson. She's all alone in the world. She hasn't any friends, and nobody likes her. Of course, she can be disagreeable; but— Well, I get on with her."

"Nobody but you could," said Phil, almost tenderly.

"And," said Molly shyly, "I'm some comfort to her, I think; and I couldn't be cool to her—I couldn't!"

"I believe you're the sweetest girl person in the world!" Phil murmured in unwilling admiration.

And then Mrs. Crowell, having completely subdued the landlady, captured Molly with a single imperative glance, and coolly bore her away.

"If she would show a little gratitude even," Phil reflected wrathfully. "But she doesn't feel any. She's a beast!"

If he was angry with Mrs. Crowell at noon, he was wildly exasperated that evening. He had bought some theater tickets, and had hurried home from the office breathlessly to ask Molly to go with him. He never ventured so far before, and he was all warmth and eagerness.

But Mrs. Crowell was already at dinner, and Molly was beside her. She smiled at him brightly, to be sure, but that, necessarily, was all.

Mrs. Crowell, when she was not making demands of Susan and unpleasant little remarks to the boarders, talked to her continuously in her aggressive voice.

Phil could not have put in a word though his life had depended on it.

His good temper did depend on it. He looked across at Molly's crown of fair hair—it was all he could see of her, since old Mr. Smith had secured his proper place—and grew hot with grievous wrath and pale with apprehension, for he knew it was by no means probable that he could secure a moment with her.

He heard Mrs. Crowell's hard tones, and gazed glaringly at her deep-hued face, with its unpleasant features.

He refused dessert frowningly, and got up from the table in something of a frenzy.

Probably it was through his excited desperation, he did not know what it was, or how he did it—but he made a determined rush, and found himself presently standing in a corner of the parlor, with Molly beside him. And out in the hall Mrs. Crowell was sharply demanding of everybody where Miss Holden was.

"Well, I did it!" Phil whispered, with his head necessarily close to Molly's. "Gracious! what a dragon she is. To think of my having actually to kidnap you!"

They laughed together with a guilty heartiness which threatened to become audible.

"I have got some theater tickets, Miss Molly," said Phil, plunging into his subject with an impelling fear of Mrs. Crowell. "I want to take you. You'll go? Don't say you won't."

"To-night?" Molly queried, her bright face clouding quite miserably. "No, I won't say I won't. I would, with so much pleasure; but—I can't!"

"You can't! Oh, Miss Molly, why?" he questioned with real anguish.

"I don't dare to tell you—not after your lecture," Molly faltered.

"Is it Mrs. Crowell?" he said in wretched divination.

"Yes," she responded with a soft regret which touched and comforted him. "I promised to stay with her this evening; she isn't very well—"

"Well!" said Phil with a groan. "She took veal twice, and two dishes of tomatoes—"

"Yes," Molly admitted gently; "but that is what she said; and I promised to read to her again. I am so sorry."

"Are you sorry?" Phil queried. "If I thought that—see, here, Miss Molly, I'm going to put an end to my misery. I can only see you once a week, that's plain; I'm resigned to that," he remarked with a sort of tender grimness. "But I want to know that—that it's all right, anyhow; then I guess I can stand it. I've been in love with you ever since I saw you, Molly, and I want to marry you. There! that's plain. Of course, I can't marry you now I haven't anything to get married on; but I shall have. You'll see! I'll work for it, and it won't be long, Molly!"

For he knew, with one happy glance at her face, that the loveliest girl in the world was his own.

And he hardly knew when the portiere parted, and Mrs. Crowell's stern countenance protruded itself, and Molly was swept away.

It was not because he had much hope of seeing her that he lingered in the parlor after breakfast next morning; for Mrs. Crowell had not been at the breakfast-table, and neither had Molly, and he was moderately certain that the former was indisposed, and that Molly was with her.

He waited a few minutes before going to the office, though, to think over his happiness he had lain awake all night, from inability to think of anything else. But he was by no means ready to stop thinking.

He was surprised and overjoyed, therefore, when the curtains parted and Molly came in, with a little exclamation of gladness at the sight of him.

He sprang to meet her, and then gazed at her in alarm.

"What is it, Molly? What have you been crying about?" he questioned.

Molly sat down on the sofa and pulled him to her side. Her eyes were wet and reddened.

"Mrs. Crowell," she said gently. "Didn't you know—has nobody told you? She is dead; she had an apoplectic stroke soon after I left last night, and died at four this morning. I didn't know till after she was gone."

Molly's soft lips quivered.

Phil was silent. He could not conscientiously say that he was grief-stricken at Mrs. Crowell's death. It was all that he could do to repress a thrill of something like relief. But he respected Molly's pretty sorrow and soft-hearted tears, and he pressed her hand.

"And, Phil, I don't know how to tell it—I can hardly believe it yet—but her lawyer called this morning—somebody telephoned him—and he says—I don't know how it can be true—but she has left me some money, Phil." Of course she left it nearly all to that library she was so interested in; but he says the one thousand pounds—one thousand, Phil—come to me. Can you believe it? And doesn't it disprove all that people thought of her, Phil?"

Phil was dazed.

"It does seem to alter the case," he admitted bewilderedly. "I don't know that it recalls the fact of her temper and her treatment of everybody—"

"Don't, Phil!" Molly pleaded. "Let's forget it; try for my sake and hers! Why, think what we can do with all that, Phil—almost more money than I ever heard of! We won't have to wait to get married, will we?" she said shyly. "For of course it's yours, too."

"You darling!" cried Phil in rapture.

"Don't you deserve it all?"

"And, Phil," she said, "do you know I think it was all for the best somehow? If she hadn't made you desperate last night, you couldn't have proposed to me; and then you might have been too proud to when you knew I had the money. Don't you see? Don't you think there was a Providence in it?"

And Phil kissed her and she did.

THE PORTSMOUTH OPERA COMPANY.

The bare mention of the fact that the Portsmouth Opera company is to produce the "Pirates of Penzance" at Music hall, under the able direction of Mr. Alfred N. LaBrie, should be sufficient to fill the house on each night. Our readers will revert with pleasure to the admirable production of the "Mikado" which Mr. LaBrie superintended in June of '87, and when we come to consider that the coming event under his guidance is for the benefit of the Children's Home, it does seem as if all was said that could be said, to bring out big houses. We could write all night of the Portsmouth Opera company, its director, the Pirates and the worthy motive that inspires its production, and only indulge in complimentary allusions. But it is needless to repeat, and we cannot increase the favorable opinion of the community regarding each and every element that enters into a consideration of the enjoyable evenings of the 8th and 9th of January to come.

We are pleased to acknowledge a polite invitation from Mr. LaBrie to attend a dress rehearsal, to be given complimentary to the members of the press, at Music hall on January 7th by the Portsmouth Opera Co.

"ALWAYS ON THE ALERT."

The Kearsarge Steam Fire Engine company are preparing to give the public a first class concert, in connection with their thirteenth annual ball, which takes place New Year's eve. The concert will be given in Music hall by Baldwin's famous Cadet Band orchestra of Boston, under the personal direction of Mr. J. Thomas Baldwin. Already the fire-laddies are assured of a very large patronage, but the committee will be pleased to dispose of a few more tickets. We append the concert programme in the hopes of making this the most successful ball ever given by the company:

1. Overture—"Prince of Peace," Latann
2. Concert Waltzer—"Scintillation," Laurent
3. Piccolo Solo—"Entre Nous," Damm
   Mr. August Damm.
4. "Reminiscences of Chassaigne," Wiegand
5. Cornet Solo—"Volunteer," Wiegand
   Mr. Thomas W. Henry.
6. Finale—"Ever Thoughtful," Resch

K. OF P. ELECTION.

Damon Lodge, No. 9, Knights of Pythias, on the evening of Dec. 25th held their annual meeting and elected officers as follows for the ensuing year:

Henry Keniston, P. C.;
Andrew P. Wendell, C. C.;
Charles H. Foote, V. C.;
Frederick Watkins, Prelate;
J. M. Smith, M. at A.;
Caleb N. Lord, M. of E.;
Thornton Betton, M. of F.; and K. of R. and S.;
Gustave Peyser, Frank J. Philbrick, Herman Manson, Trustees.

A committee was appointed to arrange for a public installation of officers, and also a committee appointed to arrange for the observance of the 25th anniversary of the order, which falls on Feb. 19th.

MUSIC HALL.

There are very few war plays that prove popular in the south, because they are nearly always one sided in their sentiment. "Held by the Enemy," Gillette's melo-drama of the rebellion, is a notable exception to this rule. The theme is so delicately treated, the southern characters are so naturally drawn, and the sentiment is so honest and unprejudiced, that when it was produced at the old Richmond theatre the audience went wild over it, and in New Orleans its receipts for one week exceeded those of any melodrama ever produced in that city. It possesses elements picturesque, emotional and humorous, and is strong and healthful in its sentiment. It will be presented at Music hall this evening; tickets at Goodrich's.

PERSONAL.

—Mrs. Elbridge Gerry and Miss Bessie Gerry, who have been visiting Mrs. Richard Jenness, Mrs. Gerry's mother, for some time, leave this morning for Bermuda, to pass the winter.

—Mrs. Mary L. Teague, of East Somerville, Mass., is passing the holiday season with her parents, Mr. William C. Berry and wife, of Court street.

—Mr. R. Edwin Rider of St. Paul, Minn., who was in this city to pass the Christmas holidays with his relatives and friends, started for his western home on Thursday.

MARITIME NOTES.

The finest fishing sloop that ever entered this port is the Iris, Capt. Robert Miller, of Gloucester, Mass., now engaged in winter fishing out of Portsmouth. She registers 14.14 tons, and was built the present year by Henry Irving of Gloucester. She is forty-seven feet long, fourteen feet nine inches beam, and six feet three inches in the hold. She has a fifty foot mast, and 260 yards of canvas in her mainsail, the boom being forty feet long and the gaff thirty; her topmast is twenty-six feet, and her bowsprit twenty-six feet outside the knightheads. She carries for winter work a forestaysail and jib, her three lower sails aggregating over 400 yards of canvas. It is claimed that she can outsail any fishing sloop on the coast, from Cape May to Eastport; she came up the river a few days ago with a strong head tide and a north-west gale blowing, and only made three tacks from the narrows to Commercial wharf. She carries five men and two dories, and is well worth a visit by those who can appreciate a handsome craft.

The schooners B. Frank Nealley, Handy, and T. B. Garland, Crosby, of the Dover Navigation Co.'s fleet; the D. K. Ham, Seavey, of the Piscataqua river brick fleet; and the Susan Stetson, Frisbee, of Bangor, are laid up for the winter in Boston.

The fishing schooner Rover's Bride, of this port, owned by Rider & Cotton, D. Parker Spinney and Samuel Cole, has been sold to parties down east.

Mr. Editor:—I would like to call the attention of the Board of Trade to a much-needed want, and which that honorable body can bring before the government, and that is, the ledge at the head of Commercial wharf, which is a dangerous obstruction to navigation, owing to the shoal water over it at low tides. There are fully a thousand vessels that pass over it yearly, and not a few get stuck on it every year, causing quite a loss to the vessels, of shoes, etc. We think that were the matter brought properly before the authorities the government would cause a survey to be made, and get an appropriation for the removal of the same.

FISHERMAN.

Franklin hall was the scene of a very happy gathering on Thursday evening, the occasion being the Christmas festival of the Unitarian Sunday school. Young and old were present in large numbers, and a most enjoyable evening was the result. Members of the parish and the scholars began to assemble soon after six o'clock, and after a bountiful supper had been partaken of, Santa Claus arrived and delighted the little ones with his customary generosity. When his pack had become depleted he retired, and LaBrie furnished music for merry dancers, who held the floor for some time. This festival, like the others that have preceded it, was a happy realization of the good time the children and all had anticipated.

The Gardner house, so-called, on South street, was sold at auction on Thursday, Dec. 27th, for $725, Mr. William P. Gardner being the purchaser.

The mislocated spring weather of this week keeps the number of lodgers at the police station down to a low figure; there were none on Wednesday night, and no drunks held for the police court.

The 22d anniversary of Rev. William A. Rand, formerly of this city, as pastor of the Congregational church at South Seabrook, occurs Jan. 27th, 1889. On Monday night, Dec. 24th, there was a Christmas tree in the vestry of the church, from which the regular Santa Claus plucked bags of candy, toys, etc., for distribution among the Sunday school children, the Atlantic cornet band furnishing music for the occasion. This was the 21st Christmas tree Mr. Rand has enjoyed with his parishioners.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food. It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

Truth will Out

Therein lies the secret of the marvelous success of PYLE'S PEARLINE Washing Compound. Those who use it like it, and tell their friends. Over one million families now use it. The sale increases—each month shows decided gains.

Do you know the truth? PEARLINE washes clothes, coarse or fine—dishes—paint—everything—in half the time, with half the labor, and better than anything else known. As it saves the worst of the rubbing, so it saves the worst of the wear; your clothes and paint last longer and look better, if washed with PEARLINE. Harmless to fabric or hands, and economical. There is nothing else like PEARLINE.

Beware of imitations being peddled or sold by means of prizes—they are dangerous—such means are not necessary to sell a good article.

Pearline is manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Ex-Secretary Teller Calls On Mr. Harrison.

The Sentiment of the Senate Divided on Mr. Blaine.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 28.—The only distinguished out of town visitor on the President-elect today was Senator Henry W. Teller of Colorado, Ex-Secretary of the Interior under Arthur. He had a long private talk with the President-elect, and left the city shortly after. In an interview early in the day Mr. Teller said he thought one of the new Cabinet officers would certainly come from the West. He expected to express his views to the President-elect on political matters, but he should not urge the appointment of any man. He should, however, tell him what he thought about some men. In response to a query as to whether the Republican members of the Senate were not generally of the opinion that Mr. Blaine should be invited into the Cabinet, Teller replied, "There is a division in opinion. Blaine's friends think he will be Secretary of State, but there are others who think his appointment might not be advisable." From a gentleman well advised on New York politics, it is learned that Senator Teller is an ardent supporter of Ex-Senator Platt.

THE CONCORD RAILROAD.

Austin Corbin's Offer to Purchase the State's Interest for Half a Million, Renewed.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 28.—At the afternoon session of the commission appointed to ascertain the interest of the state in the Concord, and the Boston & Maine railroads, Hon. A. T. Batchelder of Keene renewed the proposition of Austin Corbin of New York, Robert K. Dow and John L. Howard of Claremont, made to Gov. Sowyer in August, 1887, to pay the state $500,000 for its interest in the Concord railroad, with an additional stipulation not mentioned in that offer, it being that the road should not be paralleled. William M. Chase, one of the counsel for the Concord road, objected to the consideration of the proposition, and took the position that an acceptance would virtually place the state in the attitude of a stock-broker. The commissioners decided to make an investigation of the facts in the case, and to report to the legislature, and accordingly took a recess until the middle of January, when testimony will be heard.

Not Above the Law.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—A special from Albany to the Mail and Express says that the attorney general is backing up his recent opinion to the effect that the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad company must equip its cars running on that portion of the road within this state with apparatus for heating other than by stoves. The company sent notice of refusal to the railroad commissioners claiming that the law did not apply to its road, as its lines extend less than fifty miles in this state. The railroad commission referred the matter to the attorney general who submits his opinion as above, and he today brought a case against the company which will be tried within a few days, either in New York or in Westchester county, probably in the latter place.

Goes to Italy Charged with Murder.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Pietro Dinarva, the Italian brigand, who robbed and murdered the wealthy and benevolent Marquis Guilio Sanduzzi, at the latter's villa near Torreli, Italy, in 1886, was arrested yesterday by Inspector Byrnes' men at Stamford, Conn. He will be taken to Italy, extradition papers having already been granted. The Marquis was killed while heroically resisting three burglars led by Dinarvo, who entered his villa and rifled the strong box and secured over 100,000 francs. Two of the robbers were caught in the mountains. They confessed and betrayed Dinarvo.

MARBLEHEAD.

Trying to Induce Manufacturers to Remain.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MARBLEHEAD, MASS., Dec. 28. — The business men's committee is hard at work using all endeavors to retain what business was here previous to the fire. To-day citizens offered their services for two weeks work to dig trenches and aid in the work of clearing up, and rebuilding. A member of the business association said this morning that he had no doubt all the manufacturers would rebuild, but it would take some time to complete the work. Mr. Woodbury is anxious to fill all orders, and has given out word that he does not want a man to secure work elsewhere, thus assuring 250 employes that he will stand by them. N. P. Sanborn, of the committee, states that a gentleman from East Boston has offered a shoe factory to a leading manufacturer to locate there for the present. Letters are being received on every mail, by manufacturers, inviting them to other towns and cities.

The Appeal.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

MARBLEHEAD, MASS., Dec. 28.—An appeal for aid was issued tonight by the business committee. The appeal describes the results of the fires of 1887 and of this year, and says 75 buildings were destroyed in the first and 46 in the second. The town has appropriated nearly $135,000 in the last ten years for fire and water departments. Of the buildings burned now, ten were shoe factories, and sixteen dwelling houses, which sheltered 25 families. The factories employed more than 1500 hands, male and female; and about half the population are dependent on earnings from their employment for their daily livelihood. Many lost their tools. Few have been provided with steady employment in the past two or three years, which prevented savings for an emergency like this. We are confident that many who would never call for charity while strength, skill, and energies could find employment, will suffer for food and shelter unless assistance can be rendered by those blessed with larger means.

They Could Not Agree.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle

SACO, ME., Dec. 28.—The directors of the Biddeford & Saco Horse railroad held a lengthy session tonight, but failed to agree upon a successor to Superintendent Akarman, who resigned today. There were three candidates, Charles H. Andrews, George R. Andrews of Biddeford, and Fred B. Wiggin of Saco. Another meeting will be held tomorrow night to elect both a superintendent and a treasurer.

The Philadelphia Mystery.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 28.—The man found murdered in Fairmount park last Wednesday was indentified today by Mrs. Koehler, a boarding house keeper in Hoboken, N. J., as George Kurtzman, who came to her house three weeks ago last Monday from Colorado, and remained over night and left the following day to meet his wife, expected on the Bremen steamer that day. The detectives think it is a case of mistaken identity.

The Pacific Coast Champion Done Up.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 28.—The glove fight between Joe McAuliffe, champion heavy weight of the Pacific coast, and Jackson, the colored champion from Australia, at the Gymnasium of the California Athletic Club tonight, was won by Jackson. The betting before the fight was two to one on McAuliffe.

Cleveland's Letter to the Massachusetts Tariff Reformers.

Special Despatch to Daily Chronicle.

BOSTON, Dec. 28.—The annual banquet of the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League was held at Hotel Vendome this evening, and the following letter from President Cleveland was read:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Dec. 24th, 1888.

Messrs. Sherman Hoar and others, committee. Gentlemen—I am exceedingly sorry that I cannot be present at the annual dinner of the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League on the 28th inst. This is not merely a formal and common expression of regret. It truly indicates how much I should enjoy meeting the members of your League, and how glad I should be to express in person my appreciation of their important services in a cause to which I am earnestly attached, and to acknowledge at the same time their frequent and encouraging manifestations of personal friendliness. I know too, that it would be profitable and advantageous to be, even for a brief period, within the inspiring influence of the atmosphere surrounding patriotic and unselfish men, banded together in the interests of their fellow-countrymen, and devoted to the work of tariff reform.

This reform appears to me to be as far reaching in its purposes as the destiny of our country, and as broad in its beneficence as the welfare of our entire people. It is because the efforts of its advocates are not discredited by any sordid motives, that they are able, boldly and confidently, to attack the strongholds of selfishness and greed.

Our institutions were constructed in purity of purpose, and love for humanity. Their operation is adjusted to the touch of national virtue and patriotism, and their results under such guidance, must be the prosperity and happiness of our people; and so long as the advocates of tariff reform appreciate the sentiments in which our institutions had their origin, so long as they apprehend the forces which alone can guide their operation, so long as they in a spirit of true patriotism are consecrated to the service of their country, temporary defeat brings no discouragement. It but proves the stubbornness of the forces of combined selfishness, and discloses how far the people have been led astray and how great is the necessity of redoubled efforts in their behalf. To lose faith in the intelligence of the people is a surrender and an abandonment of the struggle. To arouse their intelligence and free it from darkness and delusion gives assurance of speedy and complete victory.

In the track of reform are often found the dead hopes of pioneers, and the despair of those who fall in the march. But there will be neither despair nor dead hopes in the path of tariff reform, nor shall its pioneers fail to reach the heights. Holding fast their faith and rejecting every alluring overture, and every deceptive compromise which would betray their sacred trust, they themselves shall regain and restore the patrimony of their countrymen, freed from the trespass of encroachment, and safely secured by the genius of American justice and equality.

Yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

An Important Change in Russian Home Policy Proable.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—In diplomatic circles and official Russian newspapers it is stated that an important change is about to be made in the home policy of Russia, due to the favorable impressions made on the czar by his recent journey, and by the loyal rejoicing over his escape at the time of the Barki disaster.

Thrown from her Horse and Killed.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—Herr Cornelia Prittie, sister of Lord Dunallay, was killed today while hunting in Neraugh County, Tipperary. Her horse stumbled, she fell from her saddle, and was dragged some distance head downward.

Condensations.

During a fracas between rival crowds of boys in the lower section of Philadelphia, one side being whites and the other colored, Robert Gray, colored, aged twelve, was struck by a stone. He ran home, procured his father's revolver, returned and challenged the other side. The challenge was accepted by James Ford, white, aged fourteen, who started toward Gray, who thereupon took deliberate aim and fired, the bullet passing almost through Ford's lungs. Gray ran home and restored the revolver to the place from which he had taken it, and disappeared. Physicians say Ford is probably fatally injured.

A revival is in progress among the Scandinavians at Salt Lake city, and they are leaving the Mormon church in large numbers.

A Norwich (Conn.) minister announced from the pulpit on a recent Sunday that he would give a dollar and a half if the young men in the gallery would take seats down stairs. They did so, and the money was paid.

The Rapid City (Dak.) Journal knows of three young women, who, at a dinner in December, 1887, declared their intention never to marry, and agreed to dine together every year thereafter on the 18th of each December. Three honorary members have been added to the "club" since. They are the girls' husbands, and all six met at a dinner on Dec. 18th, 1888.

The Methodist preachers of Columbus, Ohio, have adopted a resolution protesting against the proposed exdenditure of nearly $100,000 for "perpetuating that relic of barbarism, the inauguration ball."

A London despatch says "announcement was made Friday in the European edition of the New York Herald, (published in London,) that Minister Phelps had conditionally accepted the presidency of Columbia college, but it is said by a member of his family to be rather premature. A long correspondence has passed between him and the college authorities, but no definite conclusion has been reached. His family are preparing to leave London within a fortnight, and the handsome residence in Lowndes square is in general disorder, preperatory to the general moving."

In the superior court at Salem, Mass., few days since, A. S. Quimby obtained a verdict of $6000 against the Boston & Maine railroad, for alleged injuries on the Lawrence branch while travelling on an employee's free pass. The case goes to the full bench on the question whether a person travelling on such a free pass can recover.

The striking engineer on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railway who used dynamite to enforce his argument has been sent to the penitentiary for two years.

Max Goldberger, a second-hand clothing dealer of Philadelphia, has been convicted for murder in the second degree, having set fire to his premises and caused the death of a woman.

Robbers boarded the east-bound Central Pacific train while it was running slowly through a snow shed and took $800 from the express car. They overlooked a package containing $10,000.

A promising young man belonging in Bridgeport, Conn., got on a spree at Waterbury, and was robbed by his companions. When he came to his senses he was so chagrined that he took his own life.

At Hartford, Conn., on Christmas day. Wah Lee, a Chinaman, was married to Miss Ada E. Spaulding, who had been his Sunday school teacher. The groom has adopted the American style of dress. He came to this country twelve years ago. A year ago he entered the preparatory course in Moody's school at Northfield, Mass., intending to become a missionary. Miss Spaulding, the bride, is about thirty years old, a native of Maine, and has been a school teacher in several places.

An attachment was placed on a freight car belonging to the Pennsylvania railroad in the freight yard at Biddeford, Me., a day or two since, at the instigation of Lawrence Mella, who claims that the company is indebted to him for wages. This is a sort of long-range attack.

New Hampshire News.

The new water works at Dover do not seem to be working very smoothly as yet. In addition to the break in the pipes last week whereby nearly everything in the vicinity of Central Square was flooded, the basin on Garrison Hill was emptied on Wednesday night by a new leak, and one million gallons of water ran to waste.

Under the law passed at the last session of the legislature requiring towns to report the number of volumes they possess of the state publications, forty-six places have failed to report, and will receive no more publications until they do.

The New Hampshire, Granite State, People's and all other insurance companies doing business in Marblehead suffered by the late fire there. The three named had collectively $5,000 involved.

Fifty electric lights, to burn all night, will be in operation next week at Manchester, and the remainder as soon after as possible.

Secretary Harry Stern of the Cincinnati base ball club has been up at Hanover trying to sign Leon Viau to pitch for the Queen City team next season.

The Amoskeag Veterans of Manchester at a meeting last Wednesday evening decided most emphatically to celebrate Washington's birthday with a grand ball. It is intended to make the affair fully as brilliant as any of those that have preceded it.

Two employees of the Amoskeag mill No. 3, at Manchester, came near being killed on Thursday by the bursting of a huge nine-foot steel pulley with a 32-inch face running at the rate of 128 revolutions a minute on the main shaft of the mill. The pulley when it exploded flew in all directions, but spent its force principally to the westward, tearing down a twenty foot section of wooden and glass partition.

Henry Scheigfdt has begun work on Germania, the new educational German and English magazine soon to be issued in Manchester for Prof. A. W. Spanhoofd of St. Paul's school, Concord.

The Manchester Locomotive Works is constructing a ten-wheel freight engine for the Concord railroad that will be from fifteen to twenty tons heavier than any locomotive in this section of New England.

The state board of agriculture held an institute Thursday afternoon and evening at Henniker. Hon. Moses Humphrey of Concord, president, spoke on "Systematic Farming;" N. J. Batchelder of Andover, secretary, on "Dairying;" Alonzo Towle, M. D., of Freedom, on "Economy in Feeding," and Hon. J. B. Walker of Concord on "Soils."

The New Hampshire Sentinel, published weekly at Keene, is to celebrate the new year by making a complete change of dress, and adopt the eight-page form, be printed on a new press, and cut and pasted.

George N. Farwell, treasurer of Claremont, has disposed of $25,000 four per cent town bonds to Boston parties at a premium of one-half per cent.

The Congregational church at Epping is to have a tower clock costing $600, the gift of Mrs. A. A. Simpson of Lowell, Mass., in memory of her husband.

The firm of Webster, Russell & Co., of Plymouth, is probably the oldest mercantile firm in northern New Hampshire. The house was established by Moore Russell in 1793.

The Grand Trunk railway and the Upper Coos railroad will build a union station at Coos.

Through the efforts of Mrs. Annie F. W. Hinds sufficient money has been raised to furnish a national flag for every school room in Milford.

A Kensington farmer who sent twenty barrels of No. 1 apples to Boston on commission, had to send four dollars to settle the bill at the apple dealer's.

The brick work on the new shoe shop at Candia Depot is being rapidly pushed forward toward completion.

The Dover Republican says that Mr. John P. Hanson of that city will "probably give people a chance to secure house lots on his estate there next spring, if they wish. Dover people of means ought to grasp the opportunity and help to make the place a summer resort. There will no doubt be some changes made in the Dover Point house property next spring."

The Universalist and Congregational societies of South Newmarket this season united their forces, and had a Christmas tree in the town hall. The Methodist society had theirs in the vestry of their church, as usual. Both trees held their share of presents, and drew their circle of little folks and their friends.

Instructions as Interpreted.

He was a night reporter on a daily paper and it came in his way to interview two worthy ladies connected with one of our benevolent institutions on a subject of some importance. The city editor told him to use tact and make himself agreeable. As the matter was not wanted for the next edition he could take his time and not hurry the ladies in their recital.

These were his instructions: at 8 p. m. he appeared at the institution, the inmates of which had just been called to prayers. The rest of the story is best told in the words of the elder lady herself.

"He seemed a very nice, agreeable young man, and we thought he had known some of our patients, or had some idea of adopting an infant from the children's ward. My assistant, Miss ——, she is a young lady, was a little nervous, as we have so few calls from gentlemen. But we asked him out to see our house service, and he sung and read a chapter, and was very nice. Then we went back to the parlor and Miss —— wanted to excuse herself, but I would not let her leave, and the young man I thought would soon go.

"I wish you could have heard him talk! He told us all about himself and what a checkered career he had gone through, and Miss —— became quite sympathetic, but we were both dreadfully worried. We did not know what he wanted, and he gave us no chance to ask. I was so sleepy for a while that the smile froze on my face, and I saw double. Then he made me tell the history of the institution, and that is my weak point. Every time my assistant, Miss ——, would attempt to go I would frown at her. We both knew that everything in the house was going wrong. I could see the clock, but the young man sat with his back to it. At last it struck 2! Then he asked what time it was. I told him it was 2 o'clock in the morning, and then he let the cat out of the bag at last. He told me who he was.

"'We fellows just consider this the shank of the evening,' he said. 'You see, I'm an all night man, but I am afraid I have been keeping you ladies up.'

"We both said: 'Oh, no, no, no,' for we were almost stupefied, and much too sleepy to tell the truth. But we both wondered what his business was with us, and, do you believe it, he told us in less than five minutes! He simply wanted to know if a statement in the evening paper of the night before was true!"—Detroit Free Press.

Conditions in Prussia.

Russia employs more men to produce less corn than any other country. When the serfs were emancipated in 1861 a portion of land, from eight to nine acres per head, was allotted throughout Russia to the peasants who occupy themselves with the cultivation of their own ground. Since then the condition of Russia seems to have been growing worse and worse. The amount of territory given up to the serfs by the emancipation act of 1861 was about one-half of the arable land of the whole empire, so that the experiment of cutting up the large properties of a country and the formation of a landed peasantry has been tried there for more than a quarter of a century. No doubt Alexander I meant well toward his subjects; but at present Russia seems to be in the worst possible condition.—Cor. Boston Herald.

SATURDAY, DEC. 29, 1888.

A majority of the Chicago merchants are decidedly opposed to the interstate commerce law. They say it has proved of but little benefit, and in many cases an absolute injury.

It is announced that the British minister at the Sandwich islands has been insulted by the native officials, and trouble is feared. Let England go ahead, and fear not. We have just bounced Hayti, and Great Britain can probably bounce Hawaii just as easily and with as little danger.

The New York Graphic will hereafter be issued as a republican paper, its own announcement declaring that it will be "independent in its Republicanism, but always Republican in its independence." The field that the Graphic now occupies as an illustrated daily will undoubtedly admit of expansion, and it is safe to predict that under the new management its prosperity will increase.

The Railway Age says the railway mileage of the country has increased this year by 5120 miles of main track. While much less than the phenomenal increase in the years 1887, 1886, 1882 and 1881, when the new mileage was respectively 13,000, 9,000, 11,560, and 9,796 miles, the record for the past year exceeds that of every other year in history with the exception of 1871, when 7379 miles were added. New tracks were laid in all but two of 37 states and territories. Kansas headed the list, California coming next.

From a statement of the Panama Canal company's financial operations it appears that it has obtained 283 million dollars from the French people, for which they hold canal bonds of the nominal value of 426 millions. The company's assets are the Panama railroad, plant and implements of construction on the isthmus, unused supplies and the uncompleted ditch. The latter would not bring much in the market, but the railroad is valuable and the rest of the items may be worth something. When the worst comes the company will be able to pay but very few cents on the dollar.

Eben Gordon, a printer widely known throughout the New England states, died on Thursday at his residence, 121 Cross street, East Somerville, Mass., after a prolonged illness. He was born in Henniker, N. H., about fifty-eight years ago, learned the printing business in Dover, N. H., and Lawrence, Mass., enlisted in a Rhode Island regiment in the early part of the war of the rebellion, and participated in several engagements until discharged through ill health. Recovering, he served some time in the navy, and at the close of the war went back to the "case" at Providence. He afterward was employed on the Boston Herald for several years, subsequently on the Boston Journal, and later on the Journal of Commerce, in each of which offices his excellent workmanship secured him a responsible position. He took an active interest in matters pertaining to the printers' craft, and was a member of the typographical union for thirty-five years.

The London Spectator has the following in defense of one of the greatest powers of modern days: "The apologist for the novel which aims at something more than mere story telling has plenty of ground upon which to make his defense. The literature of a nation may no doubt reflect its manners and its life, but it also helps to mold them. The novel, as the strongest and most powerful form of literature, can and does affect the national life. It can be, and often is a great instructor—a school of conduct and of manners. A novel with a too apparent purpose is no doubt unbearable; but for all that, those novels of Dickens and Charles Reade which were written with an avowed social aim not only helped to produce great and visible effects, but were in every sense good novels, not mere sermons in monthly parts. The novel in its highest sense is as much a part of the larger life as the plays of Shakespeare, the sculpture of the Greeks, or the pictures of Raphael; and to abandon the nobler forms of the narrative art for mere story-telling would be as great a sign of literary decadence as it is possible to imagine."

ON THE STYLE.

I'm sitting on the style, Mary,
That you've mentioned before,
It's too, too tendencies, my love,
Have cramped my shekel's store.

Those annual bills from Worth, Mary,
My check book quite uproots,
Besides the lace and gloves, Mary,
The twenty button boots.

The diamonds you affect, Mary,
Quite extirpate my pile,
And so I'm sitting down, Mary,
Upon your reckless style.

—Yonkers Gazette.

Died for Want of Water.

In the Australian bush more people perish from the lack of that necessary article, water, than from any other cause. In consequence of the almost waterless condition of some of the tracks in the remote interior of Australia, numbers of men who perhaps have simply depended on the water bag they carry in their hands, or the chance of obtaining a drink from some other traveler they might meet on the way, finally become exhausted, and having managed to stagger into the bed of some dry but shady creek, have lain down there and perished, to be found some day and buried by a chance stockman passing that way, or perhaps never discovered at all.

Many men go out into the Australian bush who are never heard of again. Having no news from them their friends at home advertise in some of the Australian papers, or place the matter in the hands of a colonial inquiry agent, but no trace can be found of poor Tom or Bill, and those interested in him come to the conclusion that perhaps he has migrated to some other country. So he has, and in the far off corner of the Australian bush his bones lie bleaching in a quiet nook, where they may be discovered some day by a stockman or police trooper who chances to drop upon them.

The writer himself assisted last year to bury three men who had perished for want of water on the Cooper's creek.—Harper's Bazar.

Coal Oil Johnny's Bootblack.

On the Oil Creek flats between Titusville and Oil City is situated the famous farm that proved to be such a mine of wealth to John Steele, or "Coal Oil Johnny," as he was better known. The wonderful wells that spouted their streams of wealth into the lap of the giddy youth ceased to flow many years ago, and the farm was long considered valueless for oil purposes. With the later improved methods of producing oil, however, the old place is being reclaimed and is once more figuring among the valuable oil farms of the region. It is now owned by J. W. Wait, who was a street urchin at Rouseville, a mile from the farm, when "Coal Oil Johnny" was in the zenith of his wild career. As a boy, young Wait frequently blacked Johnny Steele's boots, or held his team, and received for the service anywhere from $5 to $50, whatever happened to suit the whim of the spendthrift, who believed there was no end to his suddenly acquired riches. It was not many years till "Coal Oil Johnny" was a laborer, working for a dollar a day. There are about a dozen new wells drilled on the place, and every one of them is profitable. The place will make young Wait a rich man. He has been operating the property about a year and values it at $60,000. He has a production of 1,600 barrels a month.—Philadelphia Press.

Tobacco Growing in Germany.

The amount of tobacco grown in Germany of late years has been considerable. The effect upon American trade has been felt to some extent. The German production in 1886-87 was 84,877,000 pounds, while the average production for fifteen years has been 89,364,000 pounds annually. Poor crop conditions in 1886-87 caused a falling off in production. The Western Tobacco Journal says that, to the great body of the American trade, it is a revelation that so much tobacco is grown in Germany, and will explain to them the dullness in late years in the German export business.

Fishing Presidents.

The one indispensable requirement of a president in these later years is that he be an enthusiastic fisherman. Arthur and Cleveland and Harrison all furnish notable examples of the piscatorial instinct. Arthur caught Florida tarpon and Yellowstone trout, Cleveland angled for Adirondack trout and deep sea bluefish, and Harrison goes to Middle Bass island and to Broad Ripple after bass and redeyes. Fish and statesmanship in these days walk hand in hand, as it were.—Chicago News.

Nature the Best Teacher.

Nature will generally be found to be one of the best teachers of gracefulness. No artificial rules can teach us the exact amount of force requisite for the various motions and attitudes we assume. The infant in his innocent glee, and the child in his bounding sports, are seldom ungraceful. It is when we contract an excessive self consciousness, and think more of the appearances we make than of the objects we desire to accomplish, that we become the most ungraceful.—Once a Week.

One Way to Get a Wife.

An unmarried man recently drew a crisp, new $5 bill out of the bank. A happy though struck him and he wrote an ardent love letter across the face of it in blue ink and signed his initials and address. Then he spent the $5. He received fourteen answers, many of them inclosing photographs. He will marry one of them (not the photographs, but the original of one of them).—Buffalo Courier.

A Michigander drove all the way to Jasper, Ala., in his carriage, and he says it was the longest, nicest picnic he ever had, as roads and weather were good.—Detroit Free Press.

Robbie's mamma put on, by mistake, a light stocking on one foot, and a dark one on the other, when he reminded her that "they were not twins."

Knew When to Cry.

The following remark came from the lips of little Pearl Menneiley, a 5-year-old girl, whose father was getting in readiness for a three months' trip. Alice, her older sister, was feeling badly over her papa's prospective long absence, and Pearl, seeing her cry, approached her father, saying: "What day is today, papa?" "Why, Friday, my dear. Why do you ask?" "Then to-morrow is Saturday, and the next day Sunday, and then comes Monday, and you are going away on Monday, papa?" "Yes, my little darling, I am sorry to say I am" "Well, then, papa, I ain't going to cry till Monday."—Omaha Bee.

The Sun.

FOR 1889

And for the Democracy.

THE SUN believes that the campaign for the election of a Democratic Congress in 1890 and a Democratic President in 1892 should begin on or about the fourth of next March. The Sun will be on hand at the beginning and until the end of the most interesting and important political conflict since the war, doing its honest utmost, as ever, to secure the triumph of the Democratic party and the permanent supremacy of the principles held by Jefferson, Jackson, and Tilden.

The great fact of the year is the return to absolute power of the common enemy of all good Democrats—the political organization for whose overthrow The Sun fought at the front for fifteen years, the memorable years of Grant and the Fraud Hayes, and Garfield and Arthur.

It is the same old enemy that Democrats now confront, and he will be intrenched in the same strong position. It has been carried once by brave and hopeful fighting. Do you not believe with The Sun that the thing can be done again? Wait and see!

The hope of the Democracy is in the loyal efforts of a united press, cherishing no memories of past differences in non-essentials, forgetting everything but the lessons of experience, and that victory is a duty.

Probably you know The Sun already as a newspaper which gets all the news and prints it in incomparably interesting shape; which chronicles facts as they occur and tells the truth about men and events with absolute fearlessness, making the completest and most entertaining journal published anywhere on earth; and which sells its opinions only to its subscribers and purchasers at two cents a copy—on Sundays four cents. If you do not know The Sun, send for it and learn what a wonderful thing it is to be in the sunshine.

The Girls.

A poet reclined in his easy chair
And he racked his brain for a sweet-lined song
But his thoughts seemed suddenly stripped and bare
Of the exquisite fancies that once did throng.
So he leaned his head on his hand and prayed:
"Oh, Muse, that holdest the fair song-pearls,
Bestow on thy servant some light to aid
In grasping my fugitive theme, 'The Girls.'"

Then rhythmical pinions are heard in air;
A scarce-felt breath on the poet's cheek fails:
And he catches these silvery accents rare
As softly but clearly a message it coils:
"Not once, oh singer, have I been slow
To inspire the hand that thy swift pen twirls,
But never before have you taxed me so
As now, when you ask me to sing of 'the girls.'

"I know they are fair and sweet their smile,
As they graciously beam on the sons of men;
But their grace may fade into laughing guile
And the victim may find he is sold again.
For men do not know that a fairy dust
Has dimmed their brain as their hope unfurls,
And 'is woe to the man who has put his trust
In the joyous but heart-breaking race of girls.

—Charles Moreau.

MR. MOUSER'S SAWBUCK.

Mr. Mouser and his merry little wife occupied a charming cottage in the suburbs of a large city in the "Fatherland." His business connections were of such a nature that he was usually at leisure after 4 o'clock in the afternoon. This gave him time to devote a great deal of attention to his wife and home and pursuits congenial to a man of his caliber.

Mr. Mouser prided himself on being a man of originality and brains. Mr. Mouser also liked a little joke—at other people's expense.

It was autumn. Mr. Mouser had just laid in a goodly supply of winter fuel. Wood was chiefly used for this purpose in the land of Mr. Mouser's birth.

Sitting by the window of his cosy living room enjoying a royal smoke from a long-stemmed porcelain pipe, Mr. Mouser watched the wood-sawyer plying his trade, made easy by long habit of handling wood and saw. As Mr. Mouser gazed and pondered, an idea crept into his head. It was grasped—as ideas quickly became captive there.

"Lisbeth," said he to his wife, "it is singular I never thought of it before—I generally think of such things—but it strikes me that I could saw that wood myself."

"Gracious! What an idea!"

"A bright one, isn't it? A big sawing, too! Just see with what ease it is done—the man cuts through the stick as if he were slicing bread and butter; besides, I require more exercise—my health is not what it has been."

"Why, dear, do you feel ill?"

"N-no; but a man needs to exert himself if he does not wish to run down in muscular power. My habits are too confining; a sense of this fact has been growing on me lately. But I have solved the difficulty while watching that man plying on his sawjack."

A merry twinkle of the eyes and a laudable endeavor to maintain a serious expression would have convinced the beholder that Lisbeth also had ideas; but like a properly respectful wife she kept them to herself until called for.

"Do you not think, Lisbeth, that a little gentle muscular activity is what I need to stimulate appetite?"

"You might paint the house or do some less tiresome work than wood-sawing," replied Mrs. Mouser.

"Oh, you underrate my capacities, my dear. And sawing wood is not such hard work. Come and see how simply it is done, yet how every muscle is brought into play. I am enchanted with the idea and shall carry it out. The man can finish this job, but it shall be the last I ever pay for. What think you of it, wife?"

"Well," laughed the lady, demurely, "I think we shall be obliged to live on cold victuals and wear blankets to keep from freezing. But, seriously, dear, if I were you I would experiment on a few cord-sticks and assure myself that it is as easy as it looks."

"That's just like a woman!" retorted Mr. Mouser, disdainfully; "she never does anything heroically; she is totally incompetent in matters of physical calculation. Now, I can see just as well as if I had stood over that man's sawjack for an hour the amount of force required to drive a saw through a stick of cord-wood. And I declare to you, here and now, that I am going to do the next load myself. It is play—nothing but play!"

Lisbeth laughed so tantalizingly that Mr. Mouser turned upon her in a flurry of indignation, saying:

"You seem to have your doubts, madam?"

"Seeing is believing, sir!"

"Well, you shall see. You ought to know by this time that I am a man with a mind of my own, and when I say I am going to do a thing I do it. Please bear this in your shallow mentality, Mrs. Mouser, that I, your husband, am determined to nevermore pay one dollar for a wood-sawyer's hire."

"I am afraid I shall have to do a little of the wood-sawing myself, then," gravely murmured Mrs. Mouser.

Mr. Mouser meant business. He at once ordered the very best kind of a sawing-jack made. He purchased a splendid saw, with sharp teeth and a light frame. He pranced about happy as a school-boy, with daubs of yellow and green paint spattered all over his person, until finally the saw frame suited him in its bright red coat. The sawjack he painted a lovely light green.

Daily he promenaded impatiently around the sheds where the wood was stored, and grumbled because the fuel lasted so unusually long. At intervals he added another coat of green paint to the highly decorated sawing-jack ("saw-buck" it is called sometimes), and bade all his acquaintances and friends come and inspect his patent calisthenic toys, until every one for miles around became familiar with Mr. Mouser's green sawing-jack.

At last the longed-for day arrived. A big load of fine hickory had been piled up in close proximity to the tools of decimation.

Mr. Mouser was all excitement. He passed by his amused wife with important disdain, and scarcely gave himself time to devour his dinner, he was so eager to be at work.

"Nothing more, thanks," he replied, as his wife wished to replenish his cup. Rising, he hastened to handle his pets with an ardor that caused Lisbeth to smile knowingly as she watched him pick out the very smallest and most tender cord-sticks.

That was a great mistake on Mr. Mouser's part. He should have tackled difficult ones first, on the simple but fruitful theory that custom would have sweetened his toil with the balm of greater ease.

My! how the saw rented, and the abbreviated sticks tumbled to the ground! Still, Lisbeth, who was peeping with laughter-brimming eyes, noticed that at the third cord-stick work seemed to slacken just a little; but seven were finished, and Mr. Mouser came in declaring it was right glorious.

Third day—Mr. Mouser took time to glance over the daily news after dinner. Record, three cord-sticks.

"Lisbeth," said he, "I think I've been cheated in that sawjack. It's not put together on as practical a plan as I was led to believe. It wiggles."

Fourth day—Mr. Mouser toyed over his dinner extensively. He smoked his pipe and read the paper. He glanced over his monthly magazine until dark, and then started up, exclaiming:

"Mercy! how short the days are!"

Mrs. Mouser enjoyed the situation intensely, but never said a word.

Fifth day—Mr. Mouser rose with a sense of injustice resting upon him. All day he was haunted by the outrageous fate that made him the owner of a sawingjack.

"My dear, we require more wood than usual to-day and to-morrow, washing and ironing days, you know," said Mrs. Mouser, as soon as he got home.

"I never saw anything like the way you women manage to consume fuel" and Mr. Mouser grabbed his hat and strode angrily toward the wood-pile. A few sticks fell before the savage manipulation of the saw, while Mr. Mouser's snarling kept excellent time to the wild motions of the sawyer.

"Confound this business!" he muttered, kicking at the harmless jack—not as hard as he wanted to kick, for fear his wife should see him, and, womanlike, cry, "I told you so," and add insult to injury by blabbing to those busybodies, his friends, who kept asking him how he was getting along sawing wood. He did wish folks would mind their own business.

With a crash he sent the saw flying over the woodpile. This was too much. His wife was a brute to expect him to work like a slave during the few moments he could call his own free from business drudgery. But if he gave up he would never hear the last of it. Oh, if he could only get rid of that sawjack.

A long time he pondered; at last a smile of joy illuminated his face. That night, after his wife had retired, Mr. Mouser slipped out and carried that hated green object to the front gate. Presto! in the morning the corpus delicti would be gone. The highway was full of robbers, who would steal anything and everything.

He would make a big fuss about the loss, but take good care not to buy a second sawjack. And without one how could he saw the family fuel? His wife shouldn't get the laugh on him!

He slept the sleep of the just until about 4 o'clock in the morning. It was still dark, but the anxiety to assure himself of the loss of his trouble caused him to sneak out and reconnoitre. The sawjack was still there. Mr. Mouser whispered—not a prayer, "Oh, well, there is time enough still between this hour and daylight for a theft to be committed," he muttered. It was the voice of Mrs. Mouser that awakened him in time for breakfast. He glanced out of the window the first thing. Oh, how brightly the sun shone, and that sawjack gleamed up at him in all its verdant beauty. No robber hand had carried it away. A fearful sigh escaped the Mouser bosom.

"You must saw some wood for me before you go, dear," said his wife.

"What, more wood!"

"Yes, dear; recollect you only sawed one stick last evening," rejoined Mrs. Mouser, meekly, but a wicked gleam of mischief played about her eyes and mouth.

Mr. Mouser ignored her reply, and hastened to toy with his pretty tools with a vigor born of awful fury. A great swear word desired to be born, but his lips were compressed, while way down in his soul a voice groaned—That sawingjack must go!

Where? whence? how?

Mr. Mouser was a man of resources. Twelve o'clock, midnight. A burglarish darkness and silence brooded around as a man stole hence from his couch, and, grabbing his trousers, left a cozy bedroom. A little later the only other active creature about—a feline prima donna—might have witnessed a sorry sight; a solitary man, marching townward, clutching in his strong right hand a beautifully-painted green sawingjack.

Soon he returned. The sawingjack—where was it?

Mr. Mouser rose that morning in a most delightful frame of mind.

"Lisbeth—my dear little Lisbeth," he exclaimed briskly, "I'm going to work in earnest, to-day. I am feeling fine—much better than I have for some time. Here, feel this arm. How's that for muscle, eh? That's what sawing wood has done!"

Lisbeth blinked oddly, but looked contented. Mr. Mouser hastened out to "tip off a stick or two before breakfast," but soon came in looking quite angry and puzzled.

"What in the world has become of that jack?" It was gone. "Such infamy—to steal one's very implements of toil!" he cried in a rage, as he sent for the old wood sawyer again.

Mr. Mouser, of course, grieved over his loss, but managed to conquer the regret sufficiently to display some of his old wit and mirth.

But this good feeling received a sudden check the morning after the burglary of the "jack."

He had just opened the daily paper when his glance was arrested by a leading paragraph.

"Heavens, Lisbeth, look at this!"

Mrs. Mouser became alarmed. Her husband was pale as death, and trembling in every limb, as he handed her the paper. She read:

"The residence of the Hon. Oliver was broken into night before last and a large sum of money and valuable plate and jewelry stolen. . . . The robbers entered by the garden window, from which they had removed the iron grating, while standing on a singular looking wooden object, recognized by old-fashioned country folks as a 'saw-buck.' It is painted a light green, and will doubtless prove a valuable clue toward tracing the miscreants. A thousand dollars reward is offered for the return of the jewelry or information leading to the arrest of the robber."

"Why, this is splendid! You can at once notify the authorities that the 'jack' is yours—the thieves who carried it off"—

"Oh, my—oh, my!" groaned Mr. Mouser; "don'talk to me about thieves, I may be arrested any moment, when they discover"—

"Discover what? How can they arrest an innocent man because he owns an article stolen from him and used by wretches"—

"Oh, Lisbeth—I may not even be able to prove an alibi. Oh, what shall I do? I tell you, wife, I am not entirely innocent"—

"Ah! we nab you confessing, my fine bird," a rude voice here interrupted, followed by the entrance of the minions of justice.

Mrs. Mouser begged, cried, stormed and implored. Mr. Mouser was mute and totally crushed, but the bold minions of authority led him away to a dungeon, where he languished for three days before his friends could obtain a hearing for him. In the meantime the real culprits had been caught, but the law required an explanation of the language that appeared to the police like a confession of complicity—notwithstanding Mr. Mouser's unquestionable social standing and perfect respectability.

The court-room was crowded with his friends and neighbors. His wife gazed at him tearfully and lovingly, but Mr. Mouser was very much cast down. There was no escape. He had to tell how distasteful wood-sawing had proved to him—how he feared the ridicule of wife and friends if, after all the boastings, he gave it up. But when he related his midnight elopement with his green sawjack, even the court joined in the broad smile that ripened into a roar of laughter from the less dignified listeners. The crowing humiliation came, however, when he left the prison for the coach to be taken home. There he saw the great abomination resting at the driver's feet on the front of the carriage. His wife has not stopped laughing yet at his midnight adventure.—Adapted from the German by Mrs. Miles H. McNamara.

AN APPEAL.

Our citizens are apprised by our telegraphic advices, published this morning, that the business committee of Marblehead have issued an appeal for aid, and we would respectfully call the attention of our readers to a careful perusal of of the despatch referred to, and bespeak for the stricken town a liberal response thereto. "Put yourself in his place" is a homely phrase, but on an occasion like the present it speaks volumes, and will appeal to everyone with a force born of human sympathy and generosity. The Chronicle will be glad to receive contributions from any source, and forward the same to the proper authorities, acknowledging them from day to day.

N. H. STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The New Hampshire State Agricultural Society held a meeting at Manchester on Thursday, and elected officers as follows:

President, Warren Brown, of Hampton Falls;

Vice Presidents, Warren F. Daniell of Franklin; E. C. Shirley, of Goffstown; N. H. Clark, of Plaistow;

Treasurer, George W. Riddle, of Manchester;

Recording Secretary, Aaron Young, of Portsmouth;

Corresponding Secretary, George H. Everett, of Laconia;

Auditor, George B. Chandler, of Manchester.

The following resolutions were passed:

That the State Agricultural Society hold a State Fair at such time and place as the executive committee may decide.

That the directors be called together at an early day to issue the premium list and to make the necessary arrangements for holding the fair.

That the president and secretary be instructed to invite the New England Agricultural Society to hold its next fair in connection with the coming State fair.

Charles H. Hayes of this city, and William A. Peirce of Greenland, were elected to the board of directors.

Secretary Young says he thinks the next fair will be held at Manchester, although Dover would like to have it there.

A FINE ENTERTAINMENT.

It is needless to comment on the merits of "Held by the Enemy" as a drama. It has been before the public long enough, and the great success that has followed it from the time it was first brought out, both in America and abroad, are sufficient to stamp it as in every way first class. But the manner in which a piece is produced, the make-up of the company and the stage setting are what commend it to theatre-goers, or what condemn it in their eyes, and this bears with special weight toward companies on the road.

The manner in which "Held by the Enemy" was produced last evening, was such that we have no hesitancy in saying that it gave perfect satisfaction, and it is seldom that a Portsmouth audience has an opportunity to listen to a company as strong as the one Mr. Rockwood put upon Music hall stage last night. It was beyond our expectations, each and every member playing his or her part in such form as to place the whole far above the ordinary class. Miss Ethelyn Friend as Susan McCreery, Mr. Harcourt as Col. Prescott, and Mr. Farrell as the "Special for Lester's," were particularly clever.

There was a fair house, but we should have been glad to have seen it packed, as the performance deserved.

In the course of the first act, a screen before an open fireplace took fire, and it was torn down by Mr. Harcourt and thrown into the right wing, without any demonstration of fear being manifested manner in which Mr. Harcourt removed the burning material evidently had the desired effect of restraining the audience, insignificant though the flames may have been.

PERSONAL.

—George A. Lambert of North Kittery left last Monday for Florida to pass the winter.

— Miss Edith Wendell, the eminent young soprano, is passing two months in Denver, Colorado.

—Dr. Wm. King of Atlanta, Ga., special agent of the internal revenue department, was in this city Friday.

—Mr. Fred F. Church, for several years past chief clerk in the post-office here, on Tuesday goes to Boston to take a good position in the auditing department of the Boston and Maine railroad. Mr. Church has been an attentive and gentlemanly clerk, and will have the good wishes of the public in his new departure.

Friday was pay day on the navy yard.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York has paid the claims resulting from the deaths of Mrs. Kate Coubig and Mrs. Frances Palmer of this city.

James D. Ackerman, formerly of this city, and for many years an engineer on the Eastern railroad, but more recently of Marblehead, was, we regret to learn, one of the many sufferers by the great fire at Marblehead this week.

Past Grand Master Wm. O. Junkins, Senior Grand Warden John Pender of the Grand Lodge, Worshipful Master Albert R. Junkins of St. John's Lodge, Worshipful Master Lemuel T. Davis, Past Master John Tanton, and Junior Warden Michael H. Gregg of St. Andrew's Lodge, were in attendance at the semi-annual session of the Grand Lodge of Free Masons at Manchester on Thursday.

It is spoken of as among the possibilities that the "Pirates of Penzance" may be given in Rochester or Exeter, or both, by the Portsmouth Opera Co., after the performances in Music hall. The company would have big audiences if they went to either of those places.

The hanging of the outer doors of the storm-porches at the federal building completes one of the most useful improvements made to the building since its erection. The doors swing outward, as is proper; and it will be an easy matter for the janitor hereafter to keep the steps free of ice, which has frequently been impossible to do in previous winters. We regard it as a fault in the planning of the storm-houses, that provision was not made to allow of the swinging of the inner doors both ways, as of old, instead of only inward; but this is a trifling matter when weighed against the safety and comfort the new improvement will afford.

The Christmas festival of the Episcopal Sunday schools was held in Franklin hall on Friday evening.

The body of John Wentworth, who died at the Cottage Hospital on Friday of typhoid fever, was taken to Dover for interment. Mr. Wentworth was an old resident of Dover, and a member of Co. H, 4th N. H. Vols., during the war of the rebellion.

The magnificient concert of Baldwin's Boston Cadet Band takes place in Music hall Monday evening, Dec. 31st. Concert from eight to nine o'clock. Admission 25 cents; reserved seats 35 cents. Holders of $1.00 ball tickets can secure reserved seats by paying ten cents extra. Seats on sale at Goodrich's, Friday morning, Dec. 28th, at nine o'clock.

The annual ball of the Austin-Lincoln Association will be held at Franklin hall on New Year's evening, the grand march beginning at 9:30 o'clock. LaBrie's orchestra will furnish the music, and will give a grand concert from eight to nine. Tickets for dancing are placed at half a dollar, gallery tickets at a quarter, and supper tickets at thirty-five cents. All ticket holders are entitled to attend the concert preceding the dancing.

Mrs. Elbridge Gerry has bought of Mr. Thomas Hayward of Newcastle a lot of land bordering the beach, and a handsome cottage will be erected thereon for summer occupancy, Mr. L. E. Martin of this city having the contract to build it.

MARITIME NOTES.

The schooner James A. Gray, of Saco, has been hauled up for the winter at Union wharf, this city, after a most successful season of brick transportation between Saco and Boston. Capt. Frank P. Coleman of Newington, for whom she was built, is at his home in that town. Capt. Ellery O. Garland of Newington is also at home for the winter, his vessel, the schooner Emily C. Dennison, being laid up at Kennebunkport. This vessel also, which is owned by the same parties and employed in the same trade as the James A. Gray, has had a very successful season during the past summer.

Very good fares were brought in by the fishing vessels on Thursday, the schooner Edith Conley doing the best, with about 9,000 lbs. The price paid was $4.35 per hundred pounds.

The new steam launch for the training station at Newport, R. I., will be launched from the navy yard at high tide today.

Rideout & Pattee, marine architects of Bath, Me., are making models for a large ship to be built next summer by A. Sewall & Co. It will be the largest wooden vessel of that rig ever built in the United States. The dimensions are: length of keel, 275 feet; length over all, 300 feet; breadth, 48.10 feet; depth, 28.10 feet. The ship will register about 3,000 tons.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

At the Unitarian church, at the vesper service tomorrow, Rev. Mr. Gooding will resume his series of lectures on the Epistle to the Galatians.

Rev. Henry F. Lane, a former pastor of the Middle street Baptist church, will preach in that church tomorrow.

"If a man die shall he live again?" Mrs. E. Clark Kimball, the wonderful test medium, of Lawrence, Mass., will conduct services under the auspices of the Portsmouth Spiritualist society, in Rechabite hall, No. 88 Market street, Sunday, Dec. 30th, at 2:45 and 7:00 P. M. Seekers for light, come and be convinced that man never dies. Admission ten cents.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D., 1888.

What is Catarrh

of the most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It is an inflammation of the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I had the worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

THE SPEAKERSHIP.

The Republicans Will Organize the House.

New Argument for an Extra Session.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Clerk Clark of the House of Representatives has received the certificates of 250 members-elect to the next House, and has been officially informed that certificates have been issued in all but three Congressional districts. Of the certificates issued 163 are to republicans and 159 to democrats. Of the districts still in doubt two are in West Virginia and one in Tennessee, and in all three the republican candidates claim majorities on the face of the returns. However, should the democratic candidates get certificates their party will not have control of the House, as the republicans will still have a majority of one, and will organize the body; the question is whether their majority will be one or seven.

Several of the republicans elected are in uncertain health, and several whose names are often mentioned are regarded as having a very uncertain tenure of life. Every indication of ill health on the part of members is regarded with anxiety, and adds another argument in favor of an extra session. This being the case, the candidacy for the speakership is becoming more active than ever. Of the 163 republicans it is said that Mr. Cannon has 49 pledged, Mr. Reed 38, Mr. McKinley 23, and Mr Burrows 22; there are 16 unpledged southern members, and the other 75 are scattered between prospective candidates.

A Terrible Death.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 30.—John Hanson, a prisoner at the Eastern penitentiary, burned himself to death in his cell last night. In some way he obtained possession of a match which he secreted about him. Late at night after all the lights had been extinguished and everything was quiet the man deliberately set fire to his clothing and stretched himself on the floor of his cell to await his doom. He tried hard to suppress his cries of pain but was unable to do so, and half a dozen keepers responded to his shouts. Before they could open the door of the cell he was terribly burned, and when they dashed in and smothered the flames with two big blankets he was dying, and only lived a few moments. The body was sent at once to the morgue.

The Cargo of Hemp and Tobacco of the Steamer Mexico Destroyed at New York.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—The harbor fire boats and several of the city engines were summoned this evening to extinguish a fire in the hold of the steamer Mexico, anchored off Dey Street in the North River. The Mexico arrived Saturday from Havana with a cargo of hemp and tobacco. Half a dozen firemen were overcome with smoke while fighting the fire, but all will recover. It was finally found to be impossible to save the cargo, and in order to save the vessel the cargo was flooded, thus ruining any part that had escaped the flames. The loss cannot be learned tonight.

The Mexican Minister Discredits the Alleged Clerical Uprising.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Senor Romero, the Mexican Minister, said tonight that he did not believe any such occurrences had take place in the City of Mexico as were stated in the despatch from El Paso, Texas, purporting to give an account of a great clerical uprising in the Mexican capital. "If anything of such magnitude had taken place we should have heard of it by cable via Galveston, and not received the first intimation from such a place of El Paso. I have official despatches by cable up to last Friday evening and they do not say a word

The Steamer Bristol Burned. No Lives Lost.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 30.—The steamer Bristol, of the Old Colony line, was burned at her dock this morning and is a total loss. She arrived from New York about 2:30 A. M., landed all her freight and her Fall River and Boston passengers, and they departed at the usual time for their destinations. There was left on board the steamer only a few Newport passengers and their personal baggage. At 6:20 o'clock just as the last passenger train was drawing out of the depot, fire was discovered on the steamer and an alarm was at once given from the company's signal on the premises. The fire started near the kitchen and spread with great rapidity, rendering futile the efforts to stop its progress. Three alarms were sounded in rapid succession, calling out the entire fire department and police force to the scene. Thousands of citizens were also attracted to the spot by the brilliant illumination, volumes of fire and clouds of smoke which rose from the burning steamer.

It was at first feared by the crowd that the boat on fire was the Pilgrim, she being in an adjacent slip undergoing winter repairs. The fire apparatus on the steamer was brought into use as soon as the flames were discovered and the crew worked with great vigor to save the boat, but the joiner work of the state rooms, saloon and stairway was as dry as tinder and the draughts through the steamer caused a fearful spread of the flames, so that before the fire department arrived there was a mass of fire sweeping her almost from stem to stern.

Some passengers still on board did not understand the meaning of the first alarm and were only aroused by the crackling of the flames near by. All succeeded in escaping, but some with only a portion of their clothing, and others by crawling over the railing near to the burning timber. One man with two little children, a boy and a girl, was awakened by the sound of crackling flames near by, and barely escaped with the little ones undressed, but with their clothing in their hands. Another young man had to borrow clothing to go to his home in this city. All of the personal baggage of the passengers was saved.

When the department arrived, the upper decks and the center of the steamer were a mass of flames, which gave out such intense heat, that, at a distance of several hundred feet it greatly impeded the work of the firemen. Soon over a dozen streams were pouring into the mass of flames, with little apparent effect for over an hour. While others were employed in drenching the dock and buildings, a gang of the employes of the company were at once put upon the steamer Pilgrim, which was in the greatest danger, as she lay on the slip to the south of the burning steamer with her bow very near the Bristol's side. She was speedily warped over to the other side of the slip and several streams of water from her own apparatus used in keeping her constantly drenched, prevented the intense heat from setting her afire. In the slip on the north side of the dock lay the freight steamer City of New Bedford, which also had to be constantly kept drenched and which did take fire about noon, but the blaze was soon extinguished. It was fully an hour and a half after the department arrived before their efforts made any difference in the volume of fire. Shortly before 8 o'clock the flames were down so far as to permit a few firemen to board the steamer and work from the outside guards of the lower and second decks. Hawsers from the steamer to the dock burned off several times and were refastened, and finally she was bound to the wharf by chains to prevent her from drifting out beyond the reach of the firemen.

The firemen were almost miraculously successful in keeping the dock and buildings from catching from the intense heat. Fortunately for the firemen who were working on her, her boilers had been emptied of steam before the fire broke out so there was no danger of an explosion. Two tugs from the torpedo station did efficient service by leading hose from the Pilgrim near enough to put a stream into it. It was hoped in the early part of the morning to save her hull, but it was out of the question. The total loss was about $300,000—covered by insurance. The origin of the fire was in the kitchen. When the news reached the Boston office the Old Colony Company officials were speedily notified, and about nine o'clock a special train of a locomotive and one are started for this city.

The White Caps at Work Again.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

LIMA, OHIO, Dec. 30.—John Morrison, proprietor of the only saloon at Rawson, has been repeatedly warned by White Caps to close, but he paid no attention to their threats. Last night a party of men masked as White Caps visited him, and after demolishing his saloon, whipped him until he begged for mercy and swore he would never go into the saloon business again.

Missing From Her Home.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WATERBURY, CONN., Dec. 30.—Sixteen-years-old Carrie Kunkil of Thomaston, left her home yesterday, telling her younger sister Vida, "Ma will never see me again." The family thought it a joke until she did not return last night. They have searched Waterbury and the surrounding villages without finding the least trace of her, and fears of suicide are entertained. She took offense at her mother who chided her for going skating.

Steals $10,000 from the Adams and Westlake Company.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

CHICAGO, Dec. 30.—Thomas Vines, asssistant timekeeper of the Adams and Westlake Manufacturing Company, disappeared suddenly this evening taking with him $10,000, which was the salary of 700 men and boys. The money was done up in 700 packages ready for delivery to the employes. Vines does not usually handle the money, but apparently foresaw he would on this occasion and had an express wagon in waiting.

Death of Mrs. Gen. Schofield.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Mrs. Schogeld, wife of Maj. Gen. Schofield, died of paralysis of the heart at seven o'clock this morning. She had been suffering from the effects of a severe cold, which developed into bronchial catarrh a few days ago, but she was not thought to be in danger until heart failure supervened, only an hour or two before her death. Mrs. Schofield was the daughter of Prof. W. H. C. Bartlett, formerly of the Military Academy, and now actuary of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York. A Revolutionary Group Issues a Communistic Manifesto.

Associated Press to Daily Chronicle.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—Deputies Cluser, Farroul, Pyat and Planteau have formed a revolutionary group, dubbing themselves the Commune, and have issued a bombastic manifesto declaring that the Commune of 1889 will save the Nation and Republic by revolution, and that the principal task is to overthrow Boulanger. The manifesto is generally ridiculed, but adds to the Government's difficulty. It is reported that M. Floquet is willing to contest the vacant Paris seat against Boulanger, but M. Clemenceau opposes the proposal.

The Toilet in Confederate Days.

With the adjuncts of the female toilet the blockade made sad havoc. Silken stockings became undreamed of luxuries; and their accompanying articles of apparel, which, when first donned by a bride, must always be composed of Something old and something new,

Something borrowed and something blue, fell far short of easy silk elastic, being made of knit yarn or cotton. Stockings of wool or cotton were the best that the most luxurious might aspire to. Shoe strings were made in quantities by the children on little bobbins, or by plaiting or twisting threads together. Ladies' button boots were things almost unknown. Shoes were sometimes made of the pliant leather found in the flaps of disused cartridge boxes and of the discarded belts of the soldiers. Oftener they were fashioned of cloth cut on the pattern of old shoes and sewed to leathern soles. Crinoline and corsets were constructed of hickory splints in lieu of whalebone and steel springs; and the prepared bark of certain kinds of trees or certain plants furnished the ladies with a supply of braids and switches. Then as now, however, the style of arranging the tresses of the female head frequently changed under the dictates of a fashion feebly endeavoring to assert itself wherever possible; and at one time even a small amount of natural hair easily served the purpose of covering the crescent shaped pillows on which it was put up, the startling names of which were "rats" and "mice."

Buttons, pins, buckles, hook and eyes disappeared by degrees from the face of the southern Confederacy. Some wooden buttons were turned upon lathes from maple and similar wood, and there were horn buttons here and there; but both species were for the most part clumsy and ill shapen. The whites of the Confederacy were content with them, while the slaves skewered their "galluses" to their trousers with wooden pins or the thorns of the locust.

Combs were made of horn or wood; and bristle tooth brushes were replaced with twigs of the dogwood, the black gum, the sweet gum and the althea. The latter was especially valued as serving the double purpose of brush and dentifrice at once. Turkey wing fans and fans of peacock feathers supplanted those of a more or less artistic and elaborate design and finish; and many other articles of use or ornament, dear to the feminine heart and not easily attainable, were ingeniously simulated.—A. C. Gordon in The Century.

A Poacher's Cunning Device.

Along the coast of France, where the land line is formed by long stretches of sand banks lying between the high cliff uplands, there used to be found innumerable rabbits, who made their burrows in the dry sand above high water mark. They ran one hole into another, so that the labyrinth of underground passages frequently extended for several hundred feet, rendering it next to impossible to dislodge the inmates in the usual manner by slipping a ferret into one of the holes. For, if this were done, the ferret would simply drive the rabbits from one corner of the network to another, where they would hide as soon as they evaded him.

The continental poacher, ever prolific in devices, knowing that the instinct of the crab will lead him always to descend in search of water, elaborated a system of placing a bolt net at the mouth of every hole he could locate, no matter how many there might be. Then, taking a dozen or so of good sized crabs, he fastened about half an inch of composite wax candle to the center of each shell, fixing them firmly enough for his purpose by slightly melting the wax at the bottom, and then pressing it into the shell. These pieces of wax candles he obtained from the inn keepers and lodging house keepers in the adjacent coast town. He then lighted the candles and turned one crab into each of the main runs.

The crab, just taken from a damp place, immediately sought the lowest ground in the burrow, carrying his light with him, where light had never penetrated before. The rabbits, frightened almost to death, rushed madly through the runs to the mouths of the holes, sprang out into the bolt nets and hopelessly tangling themselves in the meshes, lay panting until the poacher came and put them out of their misery. More than 100 rabbits have been taken from a single burrow at one haul, and the practice proved so destructive to the rabbits that the French government took the matter in hand and subjected every offender to a heavy fine and imprisonment.—The Argonaut.

The Eyes of Poets.

It would seem, indeed, that it is by the eye, the eloquent and radiant expression of the eye, the poet may at once be known. Everybody recalls the poet eye of Robert Burns. "It was large," says Sir Walter Scott, "and of a cast which glowed (I say literally glowed) when he spoke with feeling or interest. I never saw such another eye in a human head, though I have seen the most distinguished men of my time." And says Professor Walker: "In his large dark eye the most striking index of his genius resided." It was said of the eyes of Chatterton, the marvelous boy who perished in his pride, that "fire rolled at the bottom of them." And Moore tells us that Byron's, though of a light gray, were capable of all extremes of expression, from mirth to melancholy, from benevolence to scorn or rage.

As for Shelley, his blue eyes were very large and prominent. "They were at times, when he was abstracted, as he often was in contemplation, dull, and, as it were, insensible to external objects; at others they flashed with the fire of intelligence." In the face of Scott there was not much, I think, to indicate the author of "Marmion" and "Waverley," though it wore a general expression of power and resolution; but he had fine eyes—eyes so keen that, as his little son said, "it was commonly he who saw the hare sitting." To refer to Goldsmith, his eyes were the redeeming features of his face.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Our Mule Trade.

The largest market for the purchase and sale of mules is St. Louis, where the trade reaches $6,000,000 a year. Atlanta comes next with a trade of $2,000,000.—Chicago Herald.

Low Life Russians in Paris.

Nomadic Russians, with beetling eyebrows, shaggy hair and a generally greasy appearance, may sometimes be seen wandering in droves along the brilliant boulevards. They look like peasants or Moujiks out of the dramatic adaptations in French of the works of the Russian realists. You are often surprised to see these children of the snow and the steppes so far away from home, and are apt to wonder at their business in the most expensive city in the world. Some interesting particulars, however, have just been published respecting the low life members of the large Russian colony in Paris in connection with the registration of foreigners which is now taking place at the prefecture of police. They foregather, it seems, in the Latin quarter, where they have a kind of political pope, or patriarch, in the person of Peter Lavrof, an old nihilist, who has been expelled from Russia. His room in the Rue Saint Jacques is piled from floor to ceiling with books. This place is the rendezvous of the male and female students of Russian nationality, who are attending lectures in the Paris medical schools, and they delight in discussing politics, literature, medicine and mathematics with their patriarchal compatriot. Lavrof has had an eventful career. He was born at Pskof in 1823, and went through a course of studies in the Russian school of artillery, in which he succeeded Ostrogradsky in the professorial chair. In 1868 he was arrested in connection with the Karakosof affair, and was imprisoned, but escaped in 1870. After having lived in Switzerland and England he came to Paris in 1877, and is now busy with a tremendous treatise on modern thought. All the students and refugees gathered round Lavrof, work hard at teaching, translating and copying in order to support themselves while in Paris, and nearly every one of them has a severe struggle in order to make both ends meet. There is also a large colony of Russian and Polish students who attend the lectures, but who depend to a great extent on the assistance given to them by the Alliance Israélite. Most of the poorest students, male and female, live in community in an establishment in the Rue Flatters, where there are separate dormitories for the sexes and a common room for study. They take their meals in a kind of co-operative restaurant in the Avenue des Gobelins, where they act as their own cashiers, cooks and waiters. The prices of the meals are reduced to the minimum figure, only horseflesh being consumed, with cheap bread, vegetables and tea or coffee, wine being as rigidly excluded from the repasts as if the Muscovite wanderers were members of the Blue Ribbon movement.—London Telegraph.

Raisins on the Pacific Coast.

The raisin industry of the Pacific coast is growing rapidly, and grape raising is, as a consequence, profitable. A vineyard of good average bearing will yield six tons of grapes to the acre, with a value of $20 a ton on the vines, or $120 an acre. Older vineyards produce from eight to ten tons, and the fruit brings a higher price than the product of younger vines, as it is better adapted to the larger or bunch styles of high priced raisins. Thus a forty acre vineyard in full bearing at six years of age would furnish a revenue to the grower of over $6,000. Labor, however, is very high, and growers have found it difficult to obtain a full complement of hands to cure a crop needing such prompt attention. This difficulty will be lessened as newcomers thicken. California produces in quantities only the raisins that compete with the famous Malaga varieties. The Pacific raisin crop of 1888 is expected to approximate 1,000,000 boxes. Some of this has gone abroad, owing to the small crops of Malaga this year, and the latter fact will help to distribute the domestic crop through this country.—Leslie's Newspaper.

Hygienic Aspects of Hypnotism.

Upon the hygienic side we find the discussion of the prohibition of public hypnotic performances. The Academy of Medicine of Belgium held a long discussion upon the question, and finally voted to recommend a law abolishing it. The chief advocate in favor of the exhibitions was M. Delboeuf. Belgium thus follows the action of Austria, Italy, Denmark, Germany and most of the Swiss cantons. The people have been strongly impressed with the dangers of an unskilled use of hypnotism, and a healthy sentiment to have it restricted to experts prevails. At the last session of the French Association for the Advancement of Science, M. Berillon introduced a similar measure, and it was voted as the sentiment of the section of hygiene and public medicine that all public exhibitions of hypnotism should be legally prohibited in France.—Revue de l'Hypnotisme.

Performance of an Indian Juggler.

And now the professor announced that he would conclude his performance, as the grave was ready. He requested the crowd to arrange themselves around the trench. The boy, who seemed to enjoy the fun, was laid full length on his back, a heavy sheet was spread over him, and the coolies commenced with great energy to shovel in the dirt. Gradually the trench filled up, and when the last shovelful was thrown in and the grave smoothed over, our juggler turned to our party and asked, with a peculiar smile on his countenance, if they were satisfied. Being answered in the affirmative, he gave a low whistle, and the boy, whom we had seen but a few moments before carefully buried, came walking quietly in from behind the spectators. I have but one explanation to offer: We were mesmerized. The juggler differed in nothing from ordinary natives, except that he seemed more thoughtful and less excitable than most Hindoos. But it is possible that these ascetic yogis to whom he belonged have, as they claim, the mastery of certain natural forces unknown to science.—Charles E. Romain in Cosmopolitan.

MONDAY, DEC. 31, 1888.

Secretary of the Navy Whitney finds himself in an awkward position in relation to the acceptance of the new dynamite cruiser Vesuvius from the hands of the sterling Democratic contractors, Messrs. Cramp & Co. At the first trial a few weeks ago it was made apparent that the contract requirements as to speed had not been attained, and that the vessel was faulty in several respects. Excuses were made and accepted for the failure, and another trial ordered. Such changes were made as were deemed essential to bring the vessel within the contract specifications, and on Thursday and Friday last the second trial was had. Two runs were made on Thursday, and the cruiser fell short of the required speed of twenty knots. On the following day another run was made, but was brought to a close by the breaking down of one of the air pump levers. The contractors admit the failure of the vessel, but say addtional machinery will be supplied. All this must make the great Reform Secretary feel very bad. Let the country note the result, however. The Vesuvius will be accepted, sooner or later, whether she comes within the contract requirements or not. If the present board of officers do not recommend the acceptance of the vessel, Mr. Whitney has only to pick out a new board with such an officer as Captain Belknap at the head, and such a report as desired will undoubtedly be forthcoming, that is, if the same consistency is shown as in the case of the "Dolphin," built by John Roach. Captain Belknap showed himself to be a willing and pliable tool then to drive an old man to his grave, and the probabilities are that he will not be less subservient now, when a vessel built by a Democrat is at stake.

The absence of a French man-of-war from Port-au-Prince, according to latest advices from Hayti, alone prevented a refusal on the part of the authorities to surrender the steamer Haytien Republic, and consequently bloodshed. The French Minister did all he could to induce the authorities to hold the vessel, and said if necessary he would aid them with French gunboats. But as the nearest gunboats were at Martinique, the Haytiens wisely concluded not to wait until the United States vessels opened fire, but surrender the Haytien Republic at once, which they did. This action of the French Minister would seem to require some explanation, and we cannot but believe the French government will promptly disavow his hot-headed advice, which if heeded might have precipitated a conflict not only with Hayti but with France. Unless his course is repudiated by his government the United States will be justified in assuming that France is desirous of a pretext for interfering with affairs in Hayti, and perhaps of getting control of that island.

The Excise Law Commission practically closed its labors in New York on Saturday, and the result of the work done will be incorporated into a bill and transmitted to the legislature for enactment. According to the adopted schedule, saloon licenses in cities are fixed at from $300 to $500, in the discretion of the local excise board; in towns, at $100 to $200; ale and beer licenses, in cities from $60 to $150, in towns from $40 to $100; store licenses, to retail liquor not to be drank on the premises, in cities from $75 to $250, in towns from $50 to $150; hotel licenses, in cities from $100 to $400, in towns from $75 to $250.

It remains to be seen whether these rates will accomplish the purpose for which the commission was formed, to frame a bill which would reflect the temperance sentiment, and aid in repressing the sale of liquor in the large cities. At this distance away it does not appear that the prices fixed for licenses are high; on the contrary, the rates appear very small, and will not shut up many, if any, of the low saloons and barrooms.

Assistant Secretary of State Rives denies the story that Minister Phelps has intimated he desired to be recalled. Mr. Rives says also that the State Department is unadvised yet regarding Lord Salisbury's intention as to a successor to Lord Sackville.

A despatch from Fall River, Mass., says that Louis P. Norce, one of the survivors of the Jeannette expedition, is there in great need.

garded as very meritorious, and doing justice to many worthy men. When the U. S. S. Tallapoosa sunk in Vineyard Sound in 1883 the officers and crew lost everything. The matter was presented to Congress, and finally this year a bill was passed giving to the officers $750 and to the enlisted men $100 each as payment for their personal effects. President Cleveland, however, did not look upon the bill favorably and to avoid any criticism he did not veto it, but simply pigeon-holed it, and thus killed by indirection what he lacked nerve to do in a direct manner.

FROM WASHINGTON.

(Editorial Correspondence Daily Chronicle.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 28th.

I was at the navy department today and was informed by an officer there that the scramble on the part of some of the higher rank officers, who forgot their fealty to the republican party, and joined their fortunes to Cleveland, in the expectation that he would occupy the White House at least four years longer,—to get good commands was very ludicrous. Secretary Whitney is beseeched on all sides to fix this or that officer before the change in administration occurs, in the confident hope that such orders will not be changed when Gen. Harrison steps into the White House. Poor, deluded souls, how grieved they will be when they find themselves placed on "waiting orders" in March or April next! Devoted to Cleveland, and ever ready to do his political bidding or that of his henchmen they will be the quickest now to loudly proclaim that the navy should know no politics, but this will not save them, and they will be given an opportunity to follow their political chief into retirement, and "wait" orders for four years at least. Among the officers whose names I hear mentioned as likely to be deprived of their present command and placed on "waiting orders" when the new administration comes into power are, Commodore Walker, Commodore Belknap, and Captain Bradford of the Portsmouth yard. The latter is said to have needlessly sacrificed himself by voting—as a republican—for Cleveland, and it is not expected here that he will be allowed to serve out the order just issued extending for one year his orders as commandment of the Portsmouth yard, although I am told he has strong democratic backing. With the changes which will be made in the Portsmouth yard, under the new administration, it is maintained that there must be a new officer in command, or the moral effect of the reorganization will not be strongly felt politically.

THE FUTURE OF THE NAVY YARD

While writing of the navy yard it may not be uninteresting to give the drift of several conversations I have had, not only with naval officers but men of some prominence in the political world regarding the future outlook for the Portsmouth yard. There is a very marked belief prevailing that taken as a whole the yard has not served to strengthen the republican party in either Maine or New Hamshire, and that judged solely from a political standpoint the party would be much stronger in both states if the yard had never existed, and I judge from what I know personally that there are democratic statesmen in these states, who would be willing if called upon to give concurrent testimony as regards its effect upon the democratic party during the past three years.

For several years the question was seriously entertained whether it would not be an advantageous and a strong political move to abolish the yard altogether, but the arguments advanced were so strong—mostly connected with state pride—that nothing came of it. It was argued that the republicans who failed to get positions in the yard always greatly outnumbered those who did, and that the disappointment thus engendered always did more harm in a negative way, than the good accomplished by giving employment to a limited number. Nothing came of the movement then, and probably I should not have occasion to refer to it now, but for information which reaches me here that Secretary Whitney has been urged to step in and close up the yard altogether. As the story is told the Maine delegation have been approached, and my informant says that Senator Hale expresses his approval, Senator Frye is indifferent and not anxious either way, and Congressman Reed not altogether opposed to the project. I cannot vouch the accuracy of this, but give it as it comes to me. Whether the scheme has the approval of the New Hampshire democratic leaders or not does not appear very clear, but it is suspected that some of them who were recently in Washington must have talked the matter over with Mr. Whitney, or it would not have come to the surface just now, and be privately talked about as being under consideration by the Secretary of the Navy. While the present administration may feel discouraged and disappointed at the results of the political work done at the yard during the past three years, it is hardly probable that they would now on the eve of their departing power undertake to close up the yard, however much they would like to do so.

As to the future of the yard there is not only a difference of opinion among those who are likely to be well informed, but a feeling of uncertainty as to what policy is likely to be pursued. It would seem as though a crisis existed, and that the fate of the yard depends largely upon the legislation of the next year or two. There can be no question that unless appropriations are secured to enable the yard to construct a large plant suitable to the handling, repairing, and even the building of iron ships, (as will be done navy of wooden ships. When these disappear the yard will be closed, unless, as heretofore said, the yard becomes an iron ship yard, filled with all modern machinery, and this does not at this writing seem probable unless the government enters upon the work of building its own navy, and not let the work out to private contractors. SCOTT.

JOHN J. LASKEY
NO. 63 PLEASANT STREET

Said Susie to Betty, "but fair I will be,
To give our little party on afternoon tea.
The neighbors we've asked have been kind and polite,
And they and their dollies we now should invite.
So the time was then fixed as the next day at five
When the girls with their darlings must promptly arrive.
The "china" was washed and the "silver" was rubbed,
The bench that stood under the oak tree was scrubbed,
And a scarf of their mother's of loveliest blue
Was spread as a table-cloth dainty and new!

So many were coming, the teacups ran short,
And to acorns convenient, they had to resort;
The sugar-bowl broken, they put, in its stead,
A wee, yellow gourd—"so old-fashioned" they said.
In the center was placed a most lovely pink shell,
Filled with ferns and with clover that suited it well.
In another, a salad was tastefully laid,
Of small curled cabbage and radishes made,
With the beautiful "cheeses" all garnished around,
Which close to the stems of the mallow are found.
The whole was well flavored with raspberry juice,
And quite ornamental—if not of much use!
The guests at this salad were duly amazed,
But the flannel-cakes were very much praised,
"They," said one hostess, "are nice without doubt,
From slices of apple most neatly cut out
With Aunty's gold thimble, and though they are cold
Too dignified far are the dollies to scold!"
I have'nt half time to describe every dish
Of this feast as perhaps little lassies might wish,
But a cook-book for dolls I'm proposing to make
With directions for "Gypsy" and "Mother Goose cake."

The mixture for drinking was surely unique—
The tea was transparent, the coffee was weak,
Which suited the health of the delicate folk
Who sat 'round the board 'neath the shady old oak.
And I know, for good reasons, that richest of milk
Filled the tumblers that stood on the cover of silk.

Well! every soul of them came, and a kitty came, too,
That must have been hungry if judged by her mew.
The fine Lady Bisque and the two Misses Wax,
And a Countess from France, in the finest of sacques;
All graciously smiled on the scene so genteel,
When there suddenly rose a loud scream and a squeal.
The kitty, impatient her portion to taste,
Had jumped 'mong the goodies in greediest haste.
The milk and the berries and all were upset,
And the table-cloth handsome, was spotted and wet!

The guests seized their children and hastily fled,
As fearing some storm that might break overhead.
Then Susy and Betty, in penitence late,
Took the scarf in its draggled and sorrowful state
To mother, and told her that, "never again
Would they 'borrow' a thing unless it was plain,
That the owner had given a hearty consent
To its use for the purpose they wanted and meant.
And Aunty's gold thimble! if that had been lost,
What a pile of their pennies another would cost!"

Dear mother was kind, but a lesson to teach
Gave a very long strip of fine hemming to each,
Which turned out two tablecloths, fitting, to be
All ready for lunches beneath the oak tree.

—Good Housekeeping.

THE SECOND WILL.

Durham Towers stood in their grey stateliness, all canopied with ivy, just as they had stood for years; but down the oak avenue, instead of old squire on his easy-jogging mare, there rode two gay young figures.

The sunlight glinted through the leaves and fell caressingly on the girl's lissome form, sitting erect and fearless on the beautiful animal, who seemed, as he curveted and arched his glossy neck, as if proud of his lovely burden.

Her companion was a young man in the first pride of manhood. They rode slowly through the long avenue of trees, "knee-deep in fern," and at last emerged from the park gates. Truly it was no wonder that the villagers turned and looked with admiration after the handsome pair.

Alice Grey was the niece of old Squire Dunham. For a long time the squire had lived in his ancestral home, with his sister. Alice's mother, for his only companion. But the years passing away, each left their mark on his furrowed brow, and at last one came, and as it closed, the old squire's life closed too, and he was gathered to his fathers.

In his will he left an annuity to his sister, and the Towers to his dear niece, Alice Grey, and his nephew, Roland Audrey, on condition that they obeyed his often expressed desire, and became man and wife.

If not, the estate was to be sold, and the proceeds to endow an asylum which should bear his name.

So, a year before, Alice Grey had been called from boarding-school, and had met her destined husband, Roland Audrey, whom she only remembered as a little frolicsome boy.

Alice was very young, scarce seventeen, and Roland, with his dark haughty face, seemed very handsome in her eyes; and whether it was true love she felt for him or not, she hardly stopped to think.

She liked his manners of courtly grace, and enjoyed his society.

So the betrothal took place, and on Alice's little finger, underneath the riding gauntlet, sparkled the diamond pledge that she was to be Roland's wife and the mistress of the Towers.

The perfumed air blew softly through the primrose hedge, swaying the pale-pink blossoms to and fro; and overhead the birds sang out their little hearts in rapturous melody.

Gaily they conversed as they cantered along, until suddenly, at a turn of the road, they met a solitary figure.

"Why, Nita, is it you? It is a long time since I have seen you."

The girl addressed, coming to Alice's side, took the little extended hand. She was a beautiful creature, notwithstanding the simple peasant dress. It was strange to see in an English lane such an olive skin, and such flashing Oriental eyes.

"Where have you been, Nita?" questioned Alice.

The girl did not reply immediately, but stood as fascinated, looking at the young man, who sat indifferently switching the wild-rose hedge with his riding-whip.

Alice noticed with surprise her intent look, but asked the question again.

Then Nita told her that she had been very much confined at home, and the great dark eyes filled with tears as she explained that her mother had been sick, and was so still.

As the two girls talked, Roland Audrey glanced furtively from time to time at the marked contrast they made. Alice, with her fair skin and golden hair, and the dark girl, with her swart black tresses hanging in heavy braids far below her waist.

"I will come and see your mother very soon, Nita," said Alice as they rode away.

The girl stood and looked after them, and the tenderly mournful expression of her face had worn as she watched her mother vanished, which flashed with

And while in Madrid he had seen and admired a poor little Spanish girl. To wish was to accomplish with her, and she had succeeded in taking the child away with her. After many wanderings she had settled down at last at Dunham Towers.

In the course of time the young lodge-keeper had loved, wooed, and married the Spanish maiden, and Anita was the offspring of that union.

When she was still a babe her father died, and soon after Lady Dunham, her mother's benefactress, passed away.

But the squire, Lady Dunham's son, had allowed them still to live on in the lodge house.

As Roland and Alice took up their interrupted conversation, Alice noticed a change in her companion. He talked no longer in the bright entertaining way which so amused her, and seemed absent-minded.

At last, laying a little hand on his arm, she said:

"Cousin Roland, is anything wrong?"

His face flushed as he replied quickly:

"Wrong! what could be wrong?" Then, with an abrupt change to his usual merry tone: "Come, bonny Alice, for a race—who'll reach yonder clump of bushes first?"

Away they went, the two spirited horses each trying his best to reach the goal, and soon Alice's fiery little chestnut began to creep ahead—at first only a little, but at last a wide gap opened between them. Alice turned in her saddle, her fair face flushed with excitement, to wave her whip at her defeated cousin, when suddenly Brown Bess reared, and a moment later her rider lay prone in the dust.

"Miss Grey—Alice, darling! look up!"

As if in a dream she heard the impassioned words, and opened her blue eyes. Then recovering from the shock which had only stunned her, she tried, with a deep blush, to rise, saying:

"I am not hurt much, Dr. Howard."

Then Roland came up, full of anxious solicitude.

"I fear, Mr. Audrey," said Dr. Howard, "that my sudden appearance around these bushes was the cause of your cousin's accident."

Merely acknowledging his remark by a slight bow, Roland placed Alice on his own horse; but Alice leaned down and held out her friendly hand to the speaker.

"Do not think you have the slightest cause for reproaching yourself, Dr. Howard, for, beyond the fright, it has done me no harm, I am sure, and Brown Bess is no doubt far on her way home by this time."

Dr. Howard was the minister of the parish.

Ever since, when a little girl, she had spent her vacation at the Towers, he had known and loved Alice Grey. Then with the calm affection of a man for a winsome child; but as she grew up, that liking had deepened into a strong enduring affection; but he had never spoken of his love, and he knew that Alice was engaged to her cousin, and that on that union depended her inheritance.

But Alice did not forget for a long time the words she had heard when recovering from her unconsciousness:

"Alice, darling!"

Could it be possible that those words had been spoken by her grave pastor? But the approaching wedding soon drove all else from her mind.

The day after her eventful ride, Alice started out to visit the sick occupant of the lodge. She reached the cottage-door and knocked. No one replied, and she went in. Then, through the open bedroom door beyond, she saw a sight which drove the blood back from her cheeks. There, on the low bed, lay the one for whom her delicacies were intended—dead; and kneeling by the bedside in an abandonment of grief, was Nita.

Swiftly Alice went to her side.

"My poor Nita!"

Fiercely shaking the tender hand from off her shoulder, Nita sprang to her feet. Involuntarily Alice covered her face, and well she might.

As the girl stood there, she might have been taken for an avenging fury. Her black dishevelled locks flowed loosely over her shoulders, and from under their dusky shadow, the great eyes fairly blazed with their bitter scornful look.

"My poor Nita!" she exclaimed mockingly. "Why do you come here with your fair face and sympathy?"

Suddenly casting her eyes downward, they lit on the still form on the bed, and with a thrilling, piercing cry, she again flung herself upon her knees by her dead mother's side.

Again Alice approached, a world of pity in her soft eyes.

"Why, Nita, I love your mother, too. Why should I not sorrow for her?"

Then Nita rose, this time more quietly, and laying one hand on her mother's cold one, with the other she pointed to the door.

"Go, Alice Grey! Leave me with my sorrow. Go"—wildly—"before I break my resolve and say what I should not!"

Sadly Alice went, a feeling of intense pity in her heart, but no anger for her rejected sympathy. She knew Nita's excitable nature, and she laid her strange manner entirely to her great grief.

In a few days it was all over, and Nita's mother was laid in her last resting-place. Mrs. Grey urged the orphan girl to make the Towers her home; but she persisted in her refusal, and in a little while she left the neighborhood.

Alice often met Dr. Howard, and at last came to look on those passionate words as an incongruous fancy.

"I must have imagined it," she thought.

Meanwhile the wedding preparations progressed, and at last the day came. The old church, which had seen so many of the Dunham race married, now echoed with Mendelssohn's grand march as the wedding-party slowly paced up the wide aisle.

"Blessings on her pretty face!" was the thought of all the villagers, as they thronged the church to see their young lady married.

The solemn service began.

"If any man can show just cause why these two may not be lawfully joined together——" read the minister, and made the customary pause.

A veiled figure pushed forward.

"There is a cause. I forbid it!"

There was a horrified hush, and then a confused murmur. Flinging back her black veil, the speaker stepped close to the chancel rail. It was Nita.

"There is a cause," she repeated. "He is married already!"

Roland Audrey raised his hand to his head, and opened his lips as if to speak; but no sound came.

With one long, lingering, pitying look on the helpless form they were carrying down the aisle, Dr. Howard came forward, and taking Audrey by the arm, and motioning to Nita, led the way to the vestry.

It was soon explained; but it was not, after all, quite as he suspected.

Roland would not have been guilty in the eye of the law if he had married Alice, for poor Nita was not his legal wife, as she thought. He had deceived her by a mock marriage, on finding his inheritance depended on a union with his cousin Alice.

He had talked with Nita, explaining his position, and by large bribes and promises, had induced her (as he thought) to go away and keep silent.

But the poor girl, thinking herself his lawful wife, had only pretended to yield.

Cowed and ashamed, Roland Audrey, once so haughty, now so disgraced in the eyes of all, listened meekly to Dr. Howard's scathing rebuke.

At the Towers poor Alice lay long in a merciful stupor. It was a cruel experience; but after the first shock was over, she rose the same cheery loving daughter and friend, and before long Dr. Howard's heart thrilled with a sweet hope. Our friends in sorrow are always nearest and dearest ever after, and Alice, as time went on, the more she saw and came to understand the grave good man, the more her heart was insensibly drawn to him. Roland Audrey, much to everyone's surprise, had married Nita, and together they had left their native place.

After a year had passed, the executors began to take steps towards carrying out the squire's will.

Then Dr. Howard took his fate in his hands, and placed his heart at the feet of the young girl he had known and loved so long.

"You will be a poor man's wife, my Alice," he said, as he read in her sweet eyes that the love he asked for was his, "for I can never give you the luxury you leave."

His mouth was stopped by a soft little hand, and she answered back:

"Robert, a hut would be a palace shared with you."

But strange things happen sometimes, and Alice and her mother never had to leave their dear home.

On looking over the squire's papers, the lawyer discovered a will bearing a later date than that which had always been thought the correct one. In it all former documents were revoked, and his sister and her daughter left the sole heirs of the estate, although he still expressed the desire that his nephew and niece should marry.

And now, as Alice looks up with wifely love into the face of her husband, who still makes the lives and souls of his parishioners as much his care as when he was a poor landless minister, she sees and recognizes the Kind Hand which out of evil makes good, and out of darkness brings light.

PERSONAL.

—Miss Maria Howell, daughter of Rear Adm. John C. Howell, so well known in Portsmouth, was married in England on the 29th inst. to an English gentleman. Miss Howell has many friends in this city, who will be delighted as well as surprised to hear of her marriage.

—Assistant Surgeon Arthur C. Heffenger, U. S. N., who left this city a few weeks since to join the U. S. S. Kearsarge, has been invalided home from the Cape de Verde islands. So says the Army and Navy Journal of last week. The Army and Navy Register of the same date says: "The navy department is informed that Passed Asst. Surgeon Lucien G. Henenberger, attached to the Kearsarge, has been invalided home from Cape de Verde."

A GENEROUS GIFT.

On Saturday a well known citizen called on John S. Rand, Esq., treasurer of the Cottage Hospital, and made enquiries in reference to the needs of the institution. It was suggested that a brief visit be made to the hospital, which was done, after which the gentleman (who does not wish to be known) gave the treasurer the generous sum of fifty dollars.

MARITIME NOTES.

The position of the steamer Silver Star, sunk in about four fathoms of water off the sea face of Cutts' island, Kittery, was marked by buoys on Friday, and a wrecking crew arrived from Portland on Saturday to endeavor to raise her. The life-saving men at Jerry's Point are reported as thinking she struck on York ledge; the fishermen think she scraped on the Eastern Sister; her captain is confident she hit no rock at all, but struck a floating log or sunken wreck. She went to the bottom, whatever the cause. [It was reported Sunday evening that the steamer had been raised, and taken into Kittery Point, on the forenoon of that day.]

Many persons were attracted to E. Newton & Co.'s, Commercial wharf, Sunday afternoon, to see a huge "sulphur" or "boneless" shark taken in Ipswich bay the day before by the fishing schooner Northern Eagle, and sold to Newton & Co., to be sent to Manchester for exhibition. This species of shark inhabits the southern waters, and this specimen is the largest one ever seen here, being about ten feet long, nine feet in circumference, and weighing 1200 pounds. It was ca[illegible] nine-inch mesh [illegible]

When night services in Trinity Methodist church tonight, commencing at eight o'clock. All are invited.

Superintendent Trafton of the fire alarm will announce the arrival of the New Year 1889 by one blow on the fire alarm at twelve o'clock tonight.

The music performed in the Episcopal, Unitarian and Catholic churches on the Sunday before Christmas was repeated yesterday.

The magnificent concert of Baldwin's Boston Cadet Band takes place in Music hall this (Monday) evening. Concert from eight to nine o'clock. Admission 25 cents; reserved seats 35 cents. Holders of $1.00 ball tickets can secure reserved seats by paying ten cents extra. Seats on sale at Goodrich's, Friday morning, Dec. 28th, at nine o'clock.

The days are now lengthening, last Sunday having been three minutes longer, or at least had three minutes more of sunlight, than the previous one. We did not especially observe the elongation, but the almanac says it is so. The old adage, "As the days begins to lengthen the cold begins to strengthen" will have to be revised, for although winter began on Friday, Dec. 21st, according to the same authority, Christmas week was the warmest and most pleasant one that New England has known within the memory of anybody of moderate age, the streets being bare of snow, and the fall overcoat a burden most of the time, either day or evening.

We glanced in at Music hall on Saturday evening, when Mr. Preston was arranging some of the new scenery painted for "King Jollyboy;" a happy surprise is in store for those who have been fortunate enough to secure seats.

For the benefit of those who are to attend the grand ball of Kearsarge fire engine company in Franklin hall this evening, we are requested to say that ball will not be opened to the public until the close of the concert by Baldwin's Cadet band at Music hall, which is given in connection with the ball.

The sale of tickets for "Jollyboy" has been very large, the body of the house having been nearly all taken up for both evenings; it is possible, however, to secure good seats in the gallery by those applying at Goodrich's at once.

The company recently formed in this city to manufacture artificial stone under the patents of Col. James S. Peirce, are looking for a suitable building in which to carry on the business. Samples were made at Treat's marble yard last week, and orders for steps and buttresses have been received from Hon. James W. Emery and Mr. Henry R. Stoddard.

The ferry launch which has been building for the past year at the navy yard was launched at eight o'clock on Saturday morning last; she is intended for the training station at Newport, R. I., and will be sent around there as soon as she can be gotten ready. Commodore W. S. Schley will probably make the trip in her.

The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet at their hall on Market street Thursday afternoon at four o'clock, instead of in the evening as heretofore.

The Eliot Library Association will have a Christmas tree, with music, recitations, games, etc., in addition, in Eliot town hall this evening. All are invited.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal writes that paper that "There are quite a number of candidates for the governor's council in York county, Me., and among them is Sylvester Bartlett of Eliot, who has, it is thought, the first and best claim on the senators and representatives of the county for their support at the meeting of the legislature. Two years ago Mr. Bartlett received the nomination as a senator from his district by acclamation, but as the vote that year was close he was not elected; at the last state election he cheerfully withdrew from running as a candidate for senator, with the promise from many leading Republicans of their support in making him one of the governor's council, and now his friends feel that the fulfillment of this promise will be an act of justice. Mr. Bartlett has always been a straightforward republican, always ready to assist in personal effort or expense in any way to help the republican cause, and is one who can fill this position with credit to the state, county and himself."

A Marriage

BY telephone is said to be legal (don't all ring 1839 at one time). An order by telephone for G. O. Taylor Old Bourbon or Pure Rye Whiskey can be secured from the best drug and grocery trade everywhere, or from the Sole Proprietors, CHESTER H. The old Bijou rink on Federal street, Portland, Me., used by the Latin school, was burned Friday; loss $4000. Several dwellings were damaged by fire and water, at an additional loss of perhaps $10,000.

Do you suffer from catarrh? You can be cured if you take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. Sold by all druggists.

Mr. James J. Lane of Stratham lost a valuable horse recently, the animal having to be killed in consequence of having a leg broken by a kick from another horse.

Be Your Own Doctor.

It won't cost you half as much. Do not delay. Send three 2-cent stamps for postage, and we will send you Dr Kaufmann's great work, fine colored plates from life, on disease, its causes, and home cure. Address A. P. Ordway, & Co., Boston, Mass.

The fund raised for presentation to the volunteer life-boat crew who saved twenty-eight lives on the coast near Hull and Scituate, Mass., during the storm of the latter part of November, was distributed among them on Saturday forenoon in the rooms of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, with brief ceremonies in which Collector Saltonstall and Hon. Chas. Levi Woodbury took part. Hon. Sumner I. Kimball of Washington, superintendent of the life-saving service of the country, was in Boston last week conferring with Superintendent Hamblett of the Massachusetts division. He will look up the facts regarding the Hull life-savers. Gold and silver medals, according to the value of their services, will be given them as soon as absolutely unimpeachable evidence of their heroism, such as is required by the act of Congress, is at hand.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

Resignation.

If brother Foster of the Dover Democrat will compromise on that basis he can steal one editorial a day from the Mirror and we will not complain; and if he won't, and insists on taking two or three, we shall have to grin and bear it, for we can't help ourselves.—Manchester Mirror.

We have been called "renegade," "old apostate," and "old Josh," before now, but this is the first time we were ever accused of stealing puff-balls from Manchester. Dear Mirror, what makes you so childish?—Dover Democrat.

The Daily Register of Columbia, S. C., edited by a former slaveholder, has the manliness to severely denounce the brutal ejectment of Rev. T. H. Lee, a colored professor in the Lincoln university, Pa., from a sleeping car. It says: "Such incidents are simply outrageous. One who would needlessly insult his own slave under the old regime was considered no gentleman. Shall we be less considerate of the feelings of respectable colored people now?"

XMAS PROCLAMATION!

To all my subjects throughout the World, GREETING:

Know ye, that having carefully examined into the merits and eligibility of all other parties and locations, I have—as for the past fifteen years—decided to establish my headquarters for the season of 1888, with my loyal and true subject and agent, M. M. Collis, at the Boston 99c. store, 15 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H. I have gathered there from the four quarters of the Globe, an immense stock and assortment of Staple and Fancy Goods, Dolls, Toys, Games, etc., suitable for presents to all ages, sexes and conditions of people. I cannot enumerate what this stock consists of, but simply say that for volume and variety it is unsurpassed, and I cordially invite you to call at headquarters and examine it for yourselves, assuring you that it represents my labors in your behalf for the past year, and that you will receive courteous treatment and fair dealing at the hands of my agent.

Remember! that the early callers find the most complete assortment and best opportunity to make their selections. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Given under my Royal hand and Seal this 8th day of December, A. D.

What is Catarrh

[illegible] most neglected, is catarrh in the head. It is an inflammation of the mucous membrane, and is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. It comes on so gradually that almost before a person realizes it, he is suffering severely with catarrh. It causes a disagreeable discharge from the nose, dryness in the back part of the throat, inflamed eyes, ringing noises in the ears, headache, and sometimes loss of sense of smell or hearing. When

Catarrh in the Head

Gains a firm hold on the system, it has very dangerous tendencies, being liable to develop into bronchitis or consumption. As catarrh is a constitutional disease, local applications can do but little good. What is required is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla which, by thoroughly purifying the blood, expels the germs of the disease, soothes and rebuilds the affected membrane, and gives health and vigor to the whole system. If you suffer with catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla

[illegible] worst symptoms of chronic catarrh for two years. So troublesome was it that I could not smell nor taste. I found Hood's Sarsaparilla a speedy cure, and I am now free from this awful disease." J. H. SAMMIS, Bay Shore, N. Y.

"For several years I had a catarrhal affection in my throat. I was very much benefited by using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and would recommend it very highly to any one having asthma or catarrh." ELIAS P. DEVRIES, firm of Devries & Peterson, Omaha, Neb.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For several years I have been troubled with that terribly disagreeable disease, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that continual dropping in my throat, and stuffed-up feeling. It has also helped my mother who has taken it for run down state of health and kidney trouble. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all." MRS. S. D. HEATH, Putnam, Conn.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.
